The Egypt Medal 1882-1889 was awarded for the military actions involving the British Army during the 1882 Anglo-Egyptian War. The war became due to the British involvement in Egypt deepened after the opening of the Suez Canal in 1869 and foreign armies mutinied and triggered an anti-European uprising in 1882. There were two versions of the medal, the first were the ones issued during 1882 which had "1882" engraved below the sphinx. The second version was the same but without the "1882" engraving. All recipients of the Egypt Medal were also eligible for one of the four Khedive's star. On the front of the medal, the recipient's number, rank, name and regiment are engraved on the edge. On the reverse side, the Sphinx on a pedestal with the word 'EGYPT' above

More information about Life Guards
Formed: 1788
Disbanded: 1992

The Life Guards (LG) is the senior regiment of the British Army and with the Blues and Royals, they make up the Household Cavalry.

In 1788, there were the 1st and 2nd Regiments of Life Guards (from 1877, simply 1st Life Guards and 2nd Life Guards). In 1815 they were part of The Household Brigade at the Battle of Waterloo.

In late 1918 after much service in the First World War the two regiments gave up their horses and were re-roled as machine gun battalions, becoming the 1st and 2nd Battalions, Guards Machine Gun Regiment. They reverted to their previous names and roles after the end of the war.

In 1922 the two regiments were merged into one regiment, the The Life Guards (1st and 2nd).

In 1928 it was re-designated The Life Guards.

In 1992, as part of the Options for Change defence review, The Life Guards were joined together with the Blues and Royals in a 'Union' - not an amalgamation - forming the Household Cavalry Regiment (armoured reconnaissance) and the Household Cavalry Mounted Regiment (ceremonial duties). However, they maintain their regimental identity, with distinct uniforms and traditions, and their own colonel.

More information about Middlesex Regiment
Formed: 1881
Disbanded: 1966

The Middlesex Regiment (Duke of Cambridge's Own) was a regiment of the British Army. It was formed in 1881 as part of the Childers Reforms when the 57th (West Middlesex) and 77th (East Middlesex) Regiments of Foot were amalgamated with the county's militia and rifle volunteer units.

On December 31, 1966 The Middlesex Regiment was amalgamated with three other regiments to form The Queen's Regiment. The latter regiment was itself subject to a merger in 1992 to form part of the Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment.

The Middlesex was one of the principal London based regiments with a long tradition. They gained their nickname the "Die-hards" from the Peninsular War when the first battalion (also known as the 57th Foot regiment) served under Wellington. At the Battle of Albuera on 16 May 1811 their commander Colonel Inglis had his horse shot from under him, severely wounded. He lay on the ground, refusing to be moved to the rear, and called to his soldiers "Die Hard, 57th." The regiment thus acquired the nickname of "The Die-Hards".

The present Supreme Court building occupies the site of two previous Middlesex Guildhalls. The men of Middlesex served with great distinction in the First World War, and the Middlesex Guildhall was the natural location for commemoration of their bravery with a war memorial.

During the recent renovation of the building, the memorial was moved to the left hand side of the entrance hall. The memorial's lifelike central figure was modelled on one of the Middlesex Regiment's sergeants, Robert Ryder VC, who won his Victoria Cross in September 1916 as a private at Thiepval during the Battle of the Somme, and went on to fight in the second world war.

To mark the Regiment's connection with the building the county flag also flies from the tower every year on the anniversary of the Battle of Albuhera, 16 May, which is also celebrated as Middlesex Day.
