The Revue de Paris, a Ministerial weekly periodical, confirms the report respecting the receipt of intelligence by the French Government that Prince Louis Napoleon had left Brazil, and had arrived, safe and well, according to the prevalent belief, his intention was to proceed in the first place to Italy, to see his family, and thence continue his journey to England.

The Evangelicator of Toulouse publishes some details with reference to the recovery of the royal treasures that may be discovered in the Royal residence, the schooner, which was employed in 1813 to liquidate the expenses of Charles the Tenth's household, is said to be in that fifth month of research, station of the hidden treasures, and a blacksmith, named Cruzy, is employed in the search. Iron chests for Louis the 16th, which had never been found since the death of that monarch.

The letters from Lisbon make no mention of any fresh outrages on the part of the guerillas; but a Republican paper, the Nacional, continues to give sensative ramifications throughout the country. There has been a meeting, we see, at Oporto, which was considered by the non-payers of the men. The officers seem to be very much in the habit of fifth month of arrears.

According to the Madrid letters, a general requisition for horses was to be enforced in Spain, from one to ten person whatever was to be exacted.

The long and obstinate dispute between Holland and Belgium, chiefly respecting the navigation of the Scheldt, continues to receive contradictory modifications in the accounts which arise respecting it from day to day. The last is, that the Government has given notice that though the wishes of Holland are not complied with, an arrangement and pacification within a short time is likely.

A letter of the 29th ult. from Athens makes mention of a grand festival which took place on the young Queen of Greece for Germany, where her Majesty is said to have been received with the most affectionate warmth, in order to add to the probabilities of the birth of an heir to the throne. King Otho, it is said, on his part, has been recommended to try the pure air of Romelia.

Le Commerce publishes a letter from St. Petersburg, dated the 15th inst., announcing the "discrace of Count Woronoff," Governor-General of Little Russia. "Count Woronoff," says the writer, "has become great; one of which was that the Emperor, convinced of the discontent which the new Code has excited among many of the Russian empire, deemed it expedient to remove from thence a man so popular and so influential. The removal of Count Woronoff was in the usual way, with "Heave to and Haul Down."

ATX, Sept. 29.—A postchaise, escorted by Gens-d'armes, passed the day before yesterday through the streets during the night. The object of the journey, conducted to the prison of Aix a banker or merchant of Yonnete [? name], who had been declared bankrupt by his accounts: he was arrested at Marseilles, at the moment he was on the point of sailing for Africa. He is to be transferred from Aix to Auxerre.

It appears by the last advices from the United States that the differences between the slave-holding advocates and the abolitionist parties are daily increasing, and the former are determined that their power will be adopted to shelter and protect slaves and property which they consider sacred. Indeed, it is asserted that the emancipation of the negroes in all the British settlements was the cause of the open agitation against the horrid system of slavery in the United States, which will not be abated without the total emancipation of slaves throughout the federal union.

M. Dubouzet, an officer who board the Volta (the French corvette in the South Pole), has written a letter, dated Valparaiso, 30th March, confirming the details given in the Moniteur of the 1st of June announcement of the discovery of a great continent on the south of Australia. "This land," he says, "is fully explored and determined," says that officer, "forty leagues of coast, and a considerable surrounding ice." This discovery is a real service to nautical and geographical science, and will immortalize Dumont.

Letters have just been received from the Council of the Royal Geographical Society, from Messrs. Grey and Lushington, stating that the gentlemen sailed from the Cape of Good Hope in October last with the object of exploring the coast of Natal and the coast of New Holland into the interior. The letter of the last-named gentleman, dated from Natal on the 20th June 30th, simply announces the fact of the failure of the expedition, and of his intention to set out as soon as the can procure a passage homewards. He also states that Mr. Grey was waiting at the Cape for a ship in the same intention. But the communication from Mr. Grey, which was the actual state of June the 24, and is written from Fort Louis, enters into some interesting particulars. It appears that the adventurers met with decided hostility from the natives, almost from their landing. The utmost extent they reached inland was about 70 miles, at which point they were obliged to retrace their steps in consequence of a severe attack made upon them by the Caffre. Upwards of 30 natives, headed by a chief from whom they had uniformly received the most friendly treatment, attacked the gentleman, who had only two companions with him; but it would be impossible to do justice by any of the adventuring party until Mr. Grey was wounded, when he was obliged to retreat without the poor savage, on whose fall his followers immediately ceased from further hostilities. Mr. Grey's account is deficient of the circumstance with which the natives throw their spears, having being struck three times previously to receiving the fatal wound mortally wounded by the third spear only. He states this chief to have been a half-caste, and to have a European father, or who seemed such, in the course of his wanderings. They could not effect a landing approach, taking at once to flight. For twenty miles from the coast he found the country a sandy desert; but within its face changed to a verdant landscape, and rich generous soil. The climate, Mr. Grey says, is unhealthy, was observed here; however, the letter states no further particulars concerning it. The last date of any letter which it flowed. The most curious circumstance mentioned by Mr. Grey, is the discovery of numerous troglodyte [A] excavations in the rocks by the natives of the aborigines, which evince considerable knowledge of effect. As an instance of the ingenuity and contrivances of the human hand, made apparently in the manner of a bee-hive, with a hole in the top of the painted black, whilst the surrounding part is coloured with chalk. Mr. Grey is also struck with many of colossal proofs which he says he has collected, Mr. Grey is led to infer that the natives are not of the same race of Asiatic descent—a conjecture, indeed, rendered extremely probable, not only by the nature of the islands of the 61st Indian Archipelago form a series of steps, as it were, from the Eastern Continent to the Western. Mr. Grey concludes by expressing his satisfaction at having been enabled to introduce various useful animals into the island, and by having left the different seeds and plants, all of which, more especially the plants of the low fertile soil, he believes are doing thriving. The expedition was 5 months in the country, and 5 months in the passage out by a new route, by the landing-place 15 deg. 36 min. S. latitude. Contrary to the usual course, the Cape Islands, which they were about to return home, Mr. Grey declares that he is resolved to start on another attempt, but to make it farther to the southward.

Mount Etna, according to a letter from Messina, has been in a state of eruption since the 1st August.

The most stringent regulations have been adopted at Sydney, in New South Wales, to prevent the admission of any person or property contaminated by or hereafter being admitted to practise as attorneys in the courts of the colony. Articled clerks are not to be admitted by, are to have certificates from their employers of their moral and religious conduct, and are to undergo an examination as to their knowledge of law, not only as to their knowledge of their profession, but as to their acquaintance with the statutes, and the law books of Euclid. Convict practitioners are to be altogether excluded from the practice of the law in the country, before admitted there must produce unconditional pardons from the Colonials of emancipist fitness for their profession.

Such is the failure of the apple crop in some parts of Devonshire, that in orchards of 30 and 40 acres there is not a bushel of fruit.

At the last meeting of the Central Agricultural Society to hold their first meeting, in July next, at Oxford, where premiums to the amount of 1000*l.* will be offered for cattle, &c. The society has been established only five months, and upwards of 600 members have enrolled themselves, among whom are some of the most leading men of the country. The funds already amount to 5000*l.*

The County Rate Commissioners, in a most valuable report, have suggested the establishment, in local criminal courts, to sit at very short intervals. Such courts, we are told, are to be held in the Assize Courts, and the next of kin, the successor to this immense property, turns out to be a private in the 1st regiment of foot in the present in Cork garrison! His name his Joseph Braddel, and he is nephew to the deceased. The requisite steps to obtain possession of the money have been taken, and negotiations made.—Limerick Paper.

The Earl and Countess Brownlow and family arrived at Worthington's Hotel, Dover, on Tuesday the 25th ult., and embarked immediately on board the Wellington, for Boulogne, on their way to Italy.—Lord Brownlow, it is expected, will reside abroad for the next six months. He has appointed Chas. Chapman, Esq. of Blankney, (with the appropriate of her Majesty,) Vice-Lieutenant of the county of Lincoln during his absence.

Sir Gilbert Heathcote has had a severe loss in his stable. A few fair foal, one stallion to Annie (who won the Derby so cleverly this year), was seized with internal inflammation last week, and died in 24 hours. Sir Gilbert would not have taken 1000 guineas for the foal.

On Tuesday a gentleman connected with the eminent firm of Messrs. Rothschild went to the public office, Bow-street, and gave information that a check in their employment, named Samuel Green, only 18 years of age, had absconded on Monday evening with a check drawn by the firm for 2986*l.* The check, it appeared, had been placed with others by a desk to meet the transactions of the following day, and it was stolen by Green, who changed it at the house on Monday evening, for large notes, for which he obtained smaller notes and sovereigns next morning. As soon as the loss of the check was discovered, steps were to have abscended, a messenger was sent to the residence of his master, who was absent, but on his return he received from her son, enclosing 200*l.*, and it appeared that he had also forwarded a similar sum anonymous to some other persons to whom he was indebted. Although the lad's conduct in this matter has been very irregular. The police are actively engaged in pursuing him, and have traced him to Liverpool, Bristol, Plymouth, and other out-ports, to apprehend him.
