OWING to faded ink, individual idiosyncrasies of penmanship, terminal flourishes, and various forms of abbreviation in Welsh, English, and Latin, the transcription and correction of this volume has been a long and difficult task to me. But with the valuable corrections made by the Ven. Arch. Thomas, M.A., F.S.A., St. Asaph, it is, I believe, as accurate as possible.

For the rest, all that may be of use and interest to others in this publication is due to the patience and kindness of my parents, in allowing me freedom of access to valuable books; the Rev. J. P. Lewis, Vicar of the Parish, and many sympathetic and helpful friends, to each and all of whom I now offer my most heartfelt thanks.

There is only one whom this message cannot reach—Captain Mathew Louis Hughes, R.A.M.C., killed at the battle of Colenso, December 15th, 1899.

ALICE HADLEY.

Coed-y-ffridd, Conway,

MEMO.—Marriages, after the Act of 1753, are contained in another volume of 100 pages.

It is proposed to publish this in the same form as Vol. I, if a sufficient number of subscribers express a desire to have it. Price 2s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION.

MINES of interest, waiting to be explored, lie around the ancient parish church to which this Register belongs. Since its consecration, more than seven hundred years ago, it has held the position of natural and spiritual heart to the town of Conway. Its history may be divided into three periods :

First, as a Cistercian abbey church, and a burial-place of Welsh princes. 1172 to 1284.

Second, as a parish church for the English colony planted here by Edward I. 1284 to 1541.

Third, as a parish church contemporaneous with the Reformation and Parish Registers. 1541 to 1793.

A hundred years has passed since this, the first volume, was filled. 1900.

The church was built by the Cistercians in their usual cruciform manner. The lower parts of the walls of the present tower formed the original western end of the nave, the tower having been subsequently built within.¹ The eastern wall and buttresses, and some portion of the northern wall of the chancel, are of this early date, proving that the church occupies the position marked out by its founders in 1172. The south porch is also twelfth-century work. 1172.

The abbey was liberally endowed by Llewelyn the Great.² 1198. Soon after his death, the English, encamped at Deganwy, succeeded in crossing the river. They plundered the abbey and burned down the south side of the church. The chancel was widened, on rebuilding, after this sacrilege, and its present south wall extends beyond the original buttress, and is of a little later date. 1245.

On the death of Llewelyn II, near Builth, Edward I finally established his sovereignty over the Principality, and peopled this 1284.

town with English, requiring the Cistercians to vacate their abbey, and take away the bodies of the Welsh princes from the church. The abbey church, however, was not dismantled, but was appropriated as a parish church for the new settlers, to be supplied from the abbey, now fixed at Maenan, ten miles up the river, with three priests—two Englishmen and one Welshman. The structure of the church shows signs of having been much modified at this period. We may presume, therefore, that this was a busy time with the masons in Conway. The church was being rearranged to suit parish purposes, the castle was being rebuilt, and the newly-planned walls were being erected around the town. These alterations took about six years to accomplish. At the end of this time, Edward I and his Queen Eleanor spent Christmas here. 1290.

It was nearly twenty years after the Conquest, before a final settlement for the separate maintenance of a vicar for the parish church was made. Then "The Abbot Tudor, having first sought and obtained a license to express the good will in Christ of the Prince (Edward I) and Sir Caducanes, then Bishop of Bangor," made a settlement as follows:—"This composition made and indented between the Venerable Sir Tudor, abbot of the monastery and convent of Conway, and Sir Rowland Bradchey (or Bradeley) chaplain, and first vicar of the parochial church of the Blessed Virgin, in the town of Conway, of the other part," etc., witnesses "that the said vicar, and his successors in time to come, shall have a half or second part of the tithes of the said parish church of Conway." Then follows a list of other sources of income, similarly to be divided, and a provision that certain lands on the north-east side of the church shall belong to the vicar. Tradition places the original vicarage-house in this position. All this "on condition that the said vicar shall bear and support half the burden, ordinary and extraordinary, belonging to the said church," etc.¹

From this time forth, the conventual element was replaced in Conway by that of the thriving burgher life of a successful free town of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. The parish church was the centre around which the life of such towns circled. Alderman and bailiffs, "Mr. Vicker" and churchwardens, were the joint heads of a united family, whose spiritual and material welfare were not then separated. Every burgess was required to give his "penney" every Sunday, and if he neglected to do so was to be cited by "Mr. Vicker to appere afore" Mr. Hugh Holland.¹

The great chest, or "common coffer," was kept in the church. There is such a one still standing in the vestry, dated 1631. A memo. in the Conway Court Book under this date, states that "the townes moneys was putt in the new Cheast the first time, by the Order of the Councell of the Marches, the 12th daye of March, by Sir Roger Mostyn's meanes." This chest now contains only torn bits of paper, amongst which have been found fragments of bills signed by the alderman, for "soap and blew," to wash the vicar's surplice or the "altar cloath," for repairing the "Comon House," i.e., Guildhall, etc. And a yearly stipend of 2s. to the "dog whipper."

When the town prospered, the church shared in its prosperity; and when the former was approaching the summit of its glory, 1450. the latter received its richest embellishments. The great eastern window was erected in the chancel, and the finest internal decorations of the church were added during this period—about the middle of the fifteenth century. The rood-loft, which even in its present patched condition is still beautiful; the miserere stalls, whose sides, now preserved as ends to the chancel seats, are of even finer workmanship, were at this time given by Wynnes, Hooks, or Hollands, as the various letters and arms thereon testify. One stall-end has carved across it the name "Willim Holand" in full; this, therefore, was undoubtedly presented by either William the father, or William the son, of that Thomas Holland who was married by Richard Porter, Vicar of Conway, in 1477.² The font 1477. also belongs to this period, and the tower was now raised by the belfry stage. The church tower was the recognised official position whence the town-crier made all necessary public announcements—to the burgesses, or called them together in time of danger.

The troublous times of the Reformation do not appear to have disturbed the mutual relation of church and parish so much in

Conway as in many other places. Such a peaceful tiding-over of a great crisis may have been due to its isolated position; coupled with the fact that the vicar, Richard Peicke, appointed by the 1528. abbey, and perhaps educated within its walls, was also a member of an influential family dwelling in the town.

The same applies to his immediate successor, the Rev. Hugh Holland, who became vicar in 1535. His was probably the last 1535. appointment made by the Abbey to this vicarage.

The spoliation of the lesser monasteries began in the next 1536. year, and finally the great ones fell. Maenan, or Conway—it was still called by both names—belonged to the latter class. This destructive movement affected the internal ornaments of the churches to a considerable extent; and it was probably at this time that the crosses were taken off the rood-loft, and the side chapels, dedicated to St. Catherine, St. Nicholas, and others, stripped, to become henceforth mere mortuary chambers, whose walls were now to be adorned only with recording tablets, to the memory of Peickes, and Hookes, and Hollands, etc.

The vicar, Hugh Holland, held his post through all these modifications, and died in 1555. The entry of his burial is the 1555. first of a vicar of Conway.

He was followed by Henry Holland, the younger, spoken of in Bishop Robinson's Returns to Archbishop Parker, as "resident 1560. and keepeth house," and as "able to preche & may do goode."

In 1776 and 1837, there was still in the possession of the church, a silver flagon, bearing the date 1567.¹

In 1572 Henry Holland, the younger, resigned in favour of John Brickdall, who four years before had been appointed rector 1568. of Llangelynin, near by, on the death of Henry Holland, the elder. Presumably the vicar of this parish retained the possessions originally devoted to its support by the Abbot Tudor. The patronage of the living had unmistakably passed into the Royal hands, as Elizabeth herself presented John Brickdall in 1572. 1572. This vicar, at his death, was holding the livings of Conway and Llangelynin.

The first unbridled force of the reforming changes having now passed away, reparation of the damage done by the late high wave of religious feeling was begun in the church. The rood-loft and chancel were patched up with the remains of the miserere stalls; great pews of mahogany and oak were erected, with their doors well carved in the linen-fold pattern, and brass plates attached, engraved with the names and arms of the various families by whom they were occupied.¹ The Wynnes of Voylas invaded the chancel; the Hollands close under the south end of the rood-loft; behind them, in the south transept, Peackes and Hookes; on the south side of the nave Wynnes again (probably of Plas Mawr); then Howards, etc. Opposite these, on the north side, were the pews of the civic and church officials: aldermen, bailiffs, churchwardens, etc., according to rank.

The town had now reached the summit of its glory as a wealthy free borough. The inhabitants and their vicar seem in no wise to have been behind the spirit of the great age to which they belonged.

The records hitherto kept in monastic houses having come to an end, the loss was at once felt, and Thomas Cromwell, as Vicar-General, issued a mandate for the keeping of Register Books in 1538. This and several following orders not taking much effect, it was further enjoined, in the time of Queen Elizabeth, that every minister at his institution should subscribe to the following order: "I shall keepe the Register booke according to the Queene's Majestie's injunction."² The entry on page 25—"Johannes Brickdall incipit 28^o die Junii, Anno Dni 1571," would seem to indicate that this vicar began the Conway records a year before he actually became vicar of the place. A further law to enforce the keeping of registers on parchment, and the copying of previous paper records on to the same material, was made in 1600. It is known, however, that in many parishes the records had already been kept on parchment, before the law was passed enjoining all to be so preserved.

"Liber Register' compositus Quinto die Novembris Ano. Dni. 1576: Johannes Brickdall, Vicario; Henrico Tayler, et Roberto Holland, yeomonns," is another early note on page 28. A ^{1576.} memorandum on the flyleaf states that earlier paper records found in the "towne's chest" were copied into this book, taking us back to 1541. The leather binding is stamped—"1600. J. B. vicar, J. W. and W. S. churchwardens." The vicar Brickdall divided (or caused to be divided) the pages of the Register into three vertical columns. Two lines ruled horizontally across the three vertical lines, formed two little oblong spaces at the top of each column. In the upper space was written "Anno Dni" and the year, in the lower, Baptizati, Nupti, and Sepulti, respectively. This neat method is continued without interruption till the year 1597, when two pages are given up wholly to burials, and no marriages or baptisms are recorded; and at the end of this year, there is a memo. of a "greate darknesse." The next page has a few baptisms, and a few burials of important citizens. For six years after this date, the pages are ruled, and the headings written, in preparation for use each year, but there is not a single entry of any kind. It is difficult to account for this lapse in a book otherwise so well kept, unless the neglect may have been occasioned by the outbreak of plague, which nearly depopulated Conway, and, judging from this and other evidences, raged here between the years 1597-1607.

In this year the vicar Brickdall died, after a long vicariate of thirty-five years, and was buried in front of the altar. His tombstone has been placed against the south wall of the chancel, for preservation.

During the plague years, John Hookes bought the right and title of Richard Peicke to St. Catherine's chapel in the south transept.¹ The record of this transaction, coupled with a note on page 72 of the Register, and an examination of the arms and what remains of the inscription, has been the means of identifying a now undecipherable memorial tablet on the east wall of the south transept, and also the approximate position of St. Catherine and Walton chapels. The piscina at the east end of the south aisle may have served for St. Nicholas' chapel.

The next vicar was William Evans. The virulence of the plague was abating, and the people were returning to the town, but the place seems to have become disorganised, and already beginning to decline. Its citizens now no longer the salt of the earth, the Register reflects these conditions in the gradually-increasing carelessness of its entries. Only once more to figure as a stronghold, viz., during the struggle between Charles I and the Parliamentarians, the castle and walls of Conway were saved from bombardment by the Roundhead army, through the treachery of Williams, Archbishop of York.

The disintegration of the times affected the Register more than ^{1649.} anything else had done before, or has done since. It seems to have been used as a general scribbling-book, on which all sorts of ignorant people tried their hands. One individual gives the conjunction of planets at birth. Another, "John Arundell, Esq.," sometimes "Capten Arundell, Register," enters a marriage "Accordinge to an Act of perlomitt (sic) in that beeholfe." A. 1657 or 1.

The income of the vicar, Hugo Jones, appointed in 1642, was sequestrated in 1650,¹ and he is mentioned in Walker's Sufferings ^{1650.} of the Clergy of this time.

The castle and walls were dismantled at the Restoration, and a ^{1662.} new vicar, Humphrey Prichard, entered in 1662. After a time of gradual improvement, the Conway Register was started afresh ^{1699.} in a neat and quite modern hand, all the early part being pure Elizabethan and the middle a transitional script, and it was continued regularly, till the pages were all filled in 1793.

Translation by T. E. Holland, Esq.

In the bowels of the earth is the body of Edward shut up,
 So willed it Holland's black Fates.
 But his spirit, in spite of the Fates, reigns on high,
 Which neither death, nor the tomb are able to hold in.
 As his body goes to earth, so his fiery mind scales the heavens,
 A man (and his wife) mindful of the fame of virtue.

The arms are on face of tomb and on north side.
