PREFACE.

HE history of the Britains, may not improperly be distinguished into two periods; the former comprehending the interval from Brute to Cadwalader, whilst the Britains are thought to have enjoyed a general possession of the whole island; the other containing the memoirs and transactions of the Britains under their several princes, after their recession to that part of the island, fince called Wales. The former of these has been generally accounted of late, absolutely false and unhistorical; and it is undoubtedly concluded that all the passages in Geoffrey of Monmouth, (the only remaining monument of the affairs of the ancient Britains) which are not confonant to, and agreeable with the Roman historians that speak of Britain, are absolutely fabulous and intincere. The history of the Princes of Wales, has indeed met with better fortune, and the author Caradoc of Lhancarvan is accounted just and authentick; so that there need no other apology for the following work, than that it is for the best part the genuine history of that author. But because the history of Wales has no small dependence upon, and relation to the history of the ancient Britains published by Geoffrey, I think it necessary to make some general reflection, in relation to the truth and authority of that copy.

And here in the first place, I must take notice of two sorts of opinions, most widely repugnant, and as I may say, diametrically opposite to each other;

other; and both in my opinion, equally deviating from the right apprehension of the matter in debate. The one, perfectly rejecting the whole foundation and process of Geoffrey's history, will not believe so much as one passage relating to the ancient Britains, but what is delivered by Roman writers; as if nothing remarkable could happen in Britain, but what must needs fall under their special cognizance and observation. The other, without any allowance to the age when these British affairs were transacted, (not to mention the utmost antiquity of some part of this history, cotemporary with which, nothing is certain among the more civilized Greeks and Romans) will believe the whole frame, and all the circumstances of Geoffrey's history, be they never fo ridiculous and extravagant. But not to infift on fo bigotted an opinion, as to think that the British history is universally true, and altogether authentick; I will confine myself to the examination of the other extream, to fee whether that history published by Geoffrey, be so absolutely fabulous as is frequently represented and generally believed. Now they who difcredit this history, either wholly attribute the frame and invention of it to Geoffrey, or else granting him to be a faithful translator, assure themselves that the copy he received was fictitious, and perfectly owing to the unwarrantable forgeries of the fabulous monks. So that the subject of my prefent enquiries, will naturally fall under these two disquisitions; first, Whether Geoffrey be the real contriver and composer of this history? and fecondly, Supposing him to be innocent of this suspicion, Whe her the history published by him, be perfectly fabulous, and in all respects a monkish legend?

First.

First, As to what relates to Geoffrey, though methinks there need no greater argument to evidence his innocency from so suspected an impo-sture, as his being the contriver of this history, than that he professedly owns the receipt of the British manuscript from Walter, archdeacon of Oxford; yet because the prejudice of some men oftentimes obscures their understanding, in things otherwise very clear and open, it will be requisite to dwell fomewhat more particularly upon that Subject: or if the world be once persuaded, that the whole invention is owing to Geoffrey, and that there was no fuch account of the Britains in being; before he published his history, the whole series of British affairs not mentioned in the writings of the Roman authors, and all that long continued succession of British kings for so many ages, must of necessity be accounted fabulous, and a perfect legend. But before that Geoffrey should be so unreasonably attainted of such notorious forgery, and his history be so generally condemned; one might expect that fuch evident proofs could be produced to evince fo absolute a position, as to render it past all dispute and contradiction. For to charge any one with infincerity, for no other reason, than because it is the common vogue and fentiment of the world, is in my opinion a greater argument of partiality and prejudice, than of folid and judicious reasoning.

Now the greatest reason that I can think of, why the British history is attributed to the invention of Geoffrey, is, that almost upon its first appearance in the world, William of Newbo-

rough and Geraldus Cambrensis exclaim against it, and seem to lay the whole impossure to the charge of Geosser. The words of Newborough are these: At contra quidem (speaking before of Gildas) nostris temporibus pro expiandis bis Britonum maculis scriptor emersit, ridicula de iisdem sigmenta contexens, eosque longe supra virtutem Macedonum et Romanorum impudenti vanitate attollens. Gausridus bic dictus est, agnomen babens Arturi, pro eo quod fabulas de Arturo ex priscis Britonum sigmentis sumptas, et ex proprio auctas per superductum Latini sermonis colorem, bonesto bistoriæ nomine palliavit. Qui etiam majori ausu, cujusdam Merlini divinationes fallacissemas, quibus utique de proprio plurimum adjecit, dum eas in Latinum transfunderet, tanquam authenticas, et immobili veritate subnixas prophetias vulgavit.

From this passage it is apprehended, that Newborough thought that the British history was folely owing to the contrivance and invention of Geoffrey; whereas nothing is more evident than that the only thing he lays to Geoffrey's charge, is, that he augmented, and of his own head made additions to the copy he received. And seeing that Newborough expresly mentions Geoffrey's translating into Latin, some ancient figments of the Britains concerning King Arthur, and unwarrantably adding to the same; it is manifestly apparent that he never took Geoffrey to be the contriver of the whole of what he had published, otherwise it is hardly conceivable, that fuch an inveterate enemy of that history, would conceal any thing that might derogate from the truth and authority of it. Besides, Newborough throughout his whole

preface, wherein he endeavours to invalidate, and render the British history fabulous, chiefly infifts upon the life of King Arthur, and the prophecies of Merlyn; not a word of Brutus and his Trojans, which, though fince accounted as notorious a piece of romance as any at all; it feems he had faith to swallow. Indeed, the passages in King Arthur's life, and the prophecies of Merlyn tending much to the same purpose, were too great and extravagant to be credited by him, (who by his character of them, feems to have bore but very slender affection towards the Welch,) by reason that they derogated much from the fame and valour of the Saxons; fo that I am afraid, that the odium which Newborough bore to Geoffrey and his hiftory, depended more upon national honour and reputation, than the truth and fincerity of history. For furely he could never be fo warmly exasperated against a fabulous history, had he but the candour to confult his own, unless there had been some other motive to raise and soment his passion. As to the scurrilous language he casts upon the British history, and his umannerly treatment of the translator; he therein expresses his ignorance and malice, rather than any love and regard to truth and ingenuity. For who but an ignorant and an unskilful pretender, would confidently affert the Britains never had any metropolitans or archbishops, and would produce this as an invincible argument for the falsity of the British history; whereas it is notoriously manifest, that the Britains had their archbishops long before the arrival of Augustine the monk, whom Newborough pretends to have been the first who underwent that dignity in this island. But as his arguments against Geoffrey's history are weak and invalid, and his whole preface more an invective than a confutation, so his credit should be rejected and undervalued, for charging another history with falshood, when his own seems wholly interwoven with ridiculous legends and monkish sictions.

But be the occasion of Newborough's dislike of the British history what it will, it is evident, that nothing can be concluded from the above quoted passage, more than that Geoffrey made additions to the British copy he received of the archdeacon of Oxford. And this is no more than what may eafily and fafely be granted; for the life of King Arthur, and the prophecies of Merlyn, the main subjects of Newborough's discontent, may probably be inserted into the history by Geoffrey, at least they were augmented, and several traditions were added by him. Bale, affures us, that he writ the life of King Arthur in a distinct treatise; and himself owns in the preface to his fourth book, which comprehends the prophecies of Merlyn, that upon the request of Alexander bishop of Lincoln, he had translated Merlyn's propecies out of British into Latin, before the British copy came to his hands. Now, when Geoffrey had received the manuscript from the archdeacon, and was engaged in translating it into Latin, it is no strange matter to imagine, that as occasion required, he might amplify, and add to it, out of his former tracts. For it is obvious to suppose, that the several things concerning Arthur and Merlyn, might be preserved in the island of Great Britain, which were long ago obsolete among the Britains of Armorica, from whence the British copy is said to have been brought over.

But supposing that Newborough had attributed the whole frame of the British history to Geoffrey, which is evident he does not, his authority cannot balance with far more authentic historians. fuch as H. Huntington, R. Hovedon, Matthew of Westminster and others, but more particularly Matthew Paris, who in express terms, calls Geoffrey, the faithful translator of the British history. And feeing then, that it was in those times ap- Ad Ann. prehended to be an antient manuscript, and none of Geoffrey's contrivance, when the cheat might be best discovered, and there wanted not good inclinations to detect fo notorious a forgery; how in these latter times, it could be so luckily found out, that Geoffrey was the fole inventor and composer of the history, I cannot possibly divine.

The other reason, why Geoffrey is thought to be the author of the British history, is grounded upon a passage in Giraldus Cambrensis, who speaking of the etymology of Wales, rejects the denomination of it from either duke Wallo, or queen Wendolen, Sicut fabulosa Galfredi Arturi mentitur bistoria. Now this is thought an invincible argument against Geoffrey, and a palpable detection of his infincerity, fince Giraldus, his own countryman strikes at him, and accuses him of forgery; whereas upon nicer examination, we may eafily discover how that Giraldus quarrels only with the history which Geoffrey published, and which upon that account bore his name. For had Giraldus thought it to be only a contrivance of Geoffrey's, had he suspected that Geoffrey falfly pretended to have received an antient

antient British manuscript, and by that means to have imposed upon the world; can it be supposed that upon so plain conviction of falshood, he would believe and give credit to an history, which he was satisfied was altogether a fable? But on the contrary, we find him affenting to the story of Brutus, and the division of the island betwirt his three sons; and in short, excepting in this one place, he expresses himself to be an absolute votary of the British history, whence 'tis evident, he apprehended Geoffrey to be no more than a faithful translator of an antient British copy.

I need not take notice of William of Malmsbury, because that by the best account, he is supposed to have been dead before Geoffery published his history, and consequently he could never see it; so that this expression in him, Hicest Arthurus de quo Britonum nugæ hodieque delirunt, must likely refer to the then present traditions and accounts of the Welch concerning king Arthur, which probably might be too great and extravagant. For 'tis certain that a traditional account of any person or action, the farther it recedes from the spring and original, the more corrupt and imperfect it still proceeds; and like a ball of snow, it gathers and augments in its journey; so that it may be reasonably supposed, that the vulgar account which the Welch in Malmsbury's time delivered of king Arthur, was too far incredible and surprising.

But since the reasons produced for proving Geoffrey to be the author of the British history, seem not to be satisfactory and evincing; let us see whether the contrary affertion can be more reasonably maintained. And first, 'tis manifest that Geoffrey could not be the total inventor of the British history,

history, by reason that several things, and some of the most material passages therein contained, are agreeable with the histories of the Gildas and Nen-Notes upon nius, the poetical fragments of Taliesyn, not to Bede. mention the Saxon Manuscript, quoted by Mr. Wheelock, and other authors far more antient than Geoffrey. 'Tis owned indeed Geoffrey might borrow the ground and plat-form of his romance from Merlyn or Taliessyn, or rather from Nennius, in whose writings there is some slight account of the Britains being descended from the Trojans; but the superstructure is all his own, who living in an ignorant age, and well knowing he could not well be disproved, took the liberty to make what invention he pleased, and then recommended it to the world, for a true, undoubted history. But notwithstanding all this concession, I think there is as little reason to attribute the frame and compofition of this history to Geoffrey as there can be, to think him contriver of the ground and plot of it. For it feems to me very unaccountable, that if Geoffrey was to invent and compose this history, why in this account of the transactions betwixt the Britains and Romans, he should so widely difagree with, and deviate from the writings of the Roman historians. Forcertainly, nothing could add more authority to a fable, than exactly to follow the steps of creditable authors, in those things they both had occasion to treat of. This in all probability, would not only render that part of the history unsuspicious, but likewise credit and authorize the rest, of which there was no account in Roman authors. And this disagreement betwixt the British history, and the writings of the Roman historians, though frequently produced to overthrow the authority of it, induces me to believe, not only that Geoffrey was not the author, but likewife that the macuscript was ancient, and much older than the time, in which it was first made public.

The PREFACE.

But besides, Geoffrey dedicates his translation to Robert earl of Glocester, son to king Henry I. which in all likelihood he would never have ventured to do, had the original been of his own contrivance, for fear least that the cheat being discovered, he should be found, to put upon a person of eminent quality, with whom the British history was then in great esteem. For to him it is that Geoffrey owns the receipt of this manufcript from the archdeacon of Oxford, which he affirms to be very antient, and by his request was persuaded to translate it into the Latin tongue. It was a very easy matter for the earl of Glocester to find out Geoffrey's integrity, by enquiring of the archdeacon (who by all accounts is reckoned his co-temporary) whether he had delivered fuch an antient British copy into Geoffrey's hands, and whether the translation justly answered the original. These enquiries were natural, upon the publication of any new history, which made such confiderable noise and clamour in the world, and which gave fuch an account of the antient Britains, as was never before thought or heard of among the English nation. And supposing the earl of Glocester to have omitted these enquiries, yet it is scarce conceivable, but that in case of so open a forgery, the archdeacon would discover the cheat, unless it can be thought that he was privy to, and had a hand in the contrivance. But he was so far from detecting Geoffrey's imposture, that he himself owns too, to have translated the British history first into Latin, and then in his latter latter days, to British again from the Latin, as may be still seen in the Archives of Jesus-College library. Now if there be any heed to, or dependance upon this, if it be true, that the archdeacon did translate, and consequently allow of this history, it appears very evident to me, that Geosfrey can be in no wise the author or contriver of it.

But that Robert of Glocester took a fancy to Geoffrey's translation, more upon the account that his father had lately subdued the Welch, and therefore seemed to add to his father's glory, than that he did credit and believe the history, does not feem to be fo true and evincing. For wherein could the publication of this history contribute to the advancement of his father's name? Was it because he had conquered a people whose ancestors appeared by this history to be formerly valiant and warlike? this was performed by others before him, and I can conceive no great addition to any man's fame, to conquer a handful of people, with a numerous army, tho' their forefathers had been stout and victorious. This is furely too flight a pretence for the reception of the British history by the earl of Glocester, and too weak an argument to destroy the truth and authority of it. It is certain, that it took exceeding well in the world at that time, nor was it opposed till after Robert's death, when William of Newborough more out of malice and discontent than any love he bore to truth, began to charge both the original and translator with infincerity. I cannot see upon the whole, the least reason, why the contrivance and invention of this history should be attributed to Geoffrey, or that the authority of it depends any way upon him, more than the fidelity of his tranftranslation. I shall therefore conclude this subject with the character bestowed upon Geossfrey, and the history by him published by Ponticus Virunnius, who slourished in the year 1290, a man of great reading, and excellent learning of his time, who did not think it lost labour to draw an epitome of the British history: Giraldus (says he) bistoricus egregius et cardinalis, magnæ vir auctoritatis apud Robertum Claudiocestriæ ducem, Henrici regis silium, ac patriæ sue curiossissimus fautor, ex summa philosophia atque archivis, bistoriam antiquissimam continua serie ab ipsis Trojanis collectam translulit. Verissimas Britannorum bistorias arguit regum occidentalium consuetudo; quæ erat, secum semper habere eos, qui veritate præcipua eorum gesta notarent.

Secondly, But supposing Geoffrey to be innocent from this suspected imposture, and that he did no more than faithfully translate a British manuscript he received of the archdeacon; it may be farther objected, that feeing it abounds with fo many unwarrantable matters of fact, and so extravagant fables and prodigies, it appears extremely fuspicious, and sensibly smells of a monkish production. For how is it possible, you will fay, that any account, excepting what is found in the Roman histories, could be had of the Britains, and that not only before, but even after their subjection to the Romans; fince there is so much reason to doubt, whether the Britains, as well as other unlettered nations, had any means to convey any knowledge to pesterity, for want of the art of writing? for if the affairs and transactions of the Britains were only handed down by tradition, and they had no other way or method to preserve their memories, then certainly all pretences to ancient records, and consequently to this British manuscript, supposed to have been translated by Geossfrey, must of ne-

And thus it is supposed, that the Britains had no writing among them, neither before nor after the Roman conquest; whence it follows, that there is no true nor certain account of any matter translated among them, but what is recorded in Roman histories. But tho' this be frequently infinuated, yet I think, the contrary can with greater ease and perspicuity, be made to appear. As to the Britains having no writing among them, during their subjection to the Roman empire, the contrary is so evident and notorious, that I conceive it lost time to go about to disprove it. It is sufficient to lay down the words of Tacitus, an author of unshaken reputation; Jam vero Vita Agric. principum filios liberalibus artibus erudire, et ingenia Britannorum studiis Gallorum anteserre, et qui modo linguam Romanorum abnuebant, eloquentiam concupiscerent. Inde etiam babitus nostri bonor, et frequens toga; paulatimque dis-cessum ad deliniamenta vitiorum, porticus et bal-nea, et conviviorum elegantiam. Now, can any one suppose, that when the British youths were instructed in all the arts and sciences of the Romans, when they began to ape and imitate them in their habits, buildings, and other necessary fooleries, they should neglect so necessary a qualification, as that of writing? and can we imagine, that among fo many able and learned perfons, as the Britains must in reason be, when educated in the Roman way, and owned to be very tractable in their education, not one should prove fo affectionate to his country, as to note down the flate and transactions of it? certainly, if they learnt all the civilites and sciences of the Romans, history was not so slight and trivial a subject of their industry, as to be undervalued; and I know not where they could better employ their skill, than in writing the history of their native country. It was natural for them being once civilized, to enquire into the origin and antiquity of their nation, the state and condition of their country before the Roman conquest; and having made the best search they could, whether by oral or written tradition into these enquiries, they would in all reason, according to the custom and manner of the Romans, commit all to writing.

But allowing the Britains to have learnt the art of writing from the Romans, after their fubjection to the empire, yet it is certain they had no fuch thing among them, before the discovery of this island by Julius Cæsar, and consequently, that all the former part of the British history which precedes that epoch, must be false and fictitious. And that this is no precarious objection, a passage out of Cæsar's Commentaries is produced to strengthen it, which in my opinion, evidently proves the contrary. The words of Cæsar are these: Magnum ibi numerum (speaking of the Druids) versuum ediscere dicuntur, itaque annos nonulli vicenos in disciplina permanent; neque fas esse existimant ea literis mandare, cum in reliquis fere rebus, publicis privatisque rationibus, Gracis literis utuntur. Why any one from hence should conclude, that the superstition of those ancient philosophers the Druids, forbad the Britains to commit to writing the transactions of their country, much more that they had no writing at all among them, does I confess, very far exceed my comprehension. Cæsar, truly does intimate, that the doctrine and mysteries of their religion, the Druids did not think fit to commit to writing; but in all matters besides, whether private or publick (among which, history may be reasonably accounted) they used the Greek characters: for fo I understand these words, Gracis literis utuntur. For it may not be supposed that all publick and private affairs of the Britains were translated in Greek, when they had a different language of their own, and which in all reason must be the common tongue of the country; but only that when the Britains had occasion to put any thing in writing, they used the Grecian character, which probably was the only letter, they then were acquainted with. But to confirm this matter the more, Cæfar makes mention of the like custom among the Gauls; In ca-Lib. In stris Helvetiorum tabulæ repertæ sunt literis Græcis confectæ. Now if he concluded from hence, that the Gauls (for the Helvetians were a Gaulish people) made use of the Greek language, rather than the Grecian characters; I would fain be informed, why Cæsar should write in Greek to Quintus Cicero, Ne intercepta epistola sua, a Gal-Lib. V. lis consilia noscerentur; lest that his letter being intercepted, all his measures and martial intrigues be discovered by the Gauls. Certainly, if he had known (as well he might, in case the Helvetians understood and writ in Greek) that the Gauls were not ignorant of the Greek language, he would not make use of so mean a stratagem to conceal his counsels. But suppose it be acknowledged that the Gauls and Britains used, not only the Greek characters, but the language too (one of which must be allowed) it is evident that they had the art and use of writing before Cæsar made an invasion to either country, and consequently the Britains might have some written memorials of their country, which might be afterwards eafily handed down to posterity. For it seems to me very strange, that men of such reputed learning and knowledge, and so well versed in the mysteries of philosophy, as the Druids are acknowledged to have been, should be ignorant of so necessary and useful a qualification as writing. And fince it is affirmed, that their religious superstitions were interdicted to be committed to writing, we may rationally conclude, by the rule of contrariety, that all other things befides their religion, were allowed to be written, and consequently, that they had the art and use of writing among them.

But supposing the Britains to have recorded the transactions of their country, both before and after the Roman conquest, yet when the Saxons prevailed in the island, all the monuments and writings of the ancient Britains were utterly loft; fo that this pretended history of the Britains, must be modern and fabulous, built upon vulgar and uncertain traditions. For how was it possible that any one could write a true and faithful account of the ancient Britains, and be so particular in the transactions of those times, whereas there was not the least light to guide him to the knowledge of those obscure ages. This is exprefly acknowledged by Gildas, who lived long before Geoffrey, and openly declares, that all the records and monuments of his country were lost in his time; and that in writing those small frag-ments of the history of Britain, he was forced to abstract his materials out of the writings of foreigners. Illa tantum proferre conabor in me- Excid. Brit. dium, quæ temporibus Romanorum Imperatorum et passa est, et aliis intulit civibus, et longe positis mala: quantum tamen potuero, non tam ex scriptis patriæ scriptorum monimentis; quippe quæ vel si suerint, aut ignibus hostium exusta, aut civium exulum classe longius deportata non compareant; quam transmarina relatione, quæ crebris interrupta intercapedinibus non satis claret.

I shall here by the by, observe the levity of Brute; namely, because Gildas makes no mention of Brute and his Trojans, he concludes that the British history must be a real fiction; whereas Gildas in this place manifestly declares his design only of writing the history of the Britains, during their fubjection to the Roman empire. But as to this passage in Gildas, if in his time, there were no remains of his ancestors left in writing; I would fain learn upon what ground and authority, he could so positively affert that the Britains from their first plantation in this island, were proud and irreligious, and their kings cruel and tyrannical. For a little before the above quoted passage, he says of Britain, Hac erecta cervice et mente ex quo inbabitata est, nunc Deo, interdum Civibus, nonnunquam etiam transmarinis regibus ingrata consurgit. And a little after, Tacens vetuftos immanium tyrannorum annos, qui in aliis positis regionibus vulgati funt. Here he passes his judgment very liberally upon the state and condition of Britain from all antiquity; and yet by and by, he confesses, that he had no guide to direct him to the knowledge of those times he so freely censures; so that if he had not the spirit of divination, he may falter in his conjectures, or else he was guided by some British light, of which he was not willing to own the perusal.

But allowing that Gildas, in composing that fmall fragment of the British history, received no light from any British record, but was constrained to borrow out of the writings of foreigners; it concludes no farther, than that he had not the good fortune to meet with British manuscripts, not that there were none really remaining in Britain. And farther, supposing that in Gildas his time, there were no remains of the antient Britains left in this island, but were all utterly loft; yet according to Gildas his own acknowledgment, and upon the Saxons prevailing in the country, they might be carried over by the exuled Britains to Armorica, from whence the archdeacon of Oxford is faid to have brought over the British copy he delivered to Geoffrey. But if there was no written account of the former state of Britain, in the age of Gildas, how comes it to pass, that any such thing should be discovered and brought to light in succeeding ages? And not to infift upon the authority of the British manuscript translated by Geoffrey, we have good reason to presume, that the antient Britains before Gildas had both ecclefiastical and civil histories of their country.

As to the former, Bede, whose authority, I presume, will not be questioned, expresly affirms it. For in his presace to his ecclesiastical history, he says, A principio itaque voluminis bujus, usque ad tempus quo Gens Anglorum sidem Christi percepit, ex priorum maxime scriptis binc inde collectis, ea quæ promemoramus, didiscimus. Here Bede plainly declares, that in writing a church history of Britain, he extracted all his matter, before the conversion of the Saxons to Christianity, out of antient authors. But who can these former writers be? Surely they were not Saxons, for we read of no Saxon writer before Bede; befides, that feveral things contained in this history, were translated before the landing of the Saxons; and as to the ecclefiaftical part, betwixt the arrival, and the conversion of the Saxons to Christianity that cannot be extracted out of their writings. For in the first place they were no Christians, and it is very unreasonable to suppose, that they would write the history of a church, of which they were at that time very fatal and implacable enemies; not to question whether the Saxons before their conversion had any writing or learning at all among them. For though it be pretended, that the Irish, who use the same manner of writing, borrowed their characters from the Saxons; yet 'tis extremely fuspitious, that these received them from the Irish, if not rather from the Britains. As to the former, it is well known, that during the disturbances betwixt the Britains and Saxons here in Britain, the incursions of the Goths, Vandals, and other northern nations into other countries; all the learning of these western parts of the world, sled into Ireland, which for a confiderable time remained to be the nursery of learning and learned men.

Britain,

And that the Saxons, long after their converfion to Christianity, retired to Ireland for this purpose, we have the testimony of their antient and most authentick historian; so that, I think, 'tis Eccl. lib. 3. no presumption to suspect, that as the Saxons chap. 27. borrowed their learning from the Irish, they might for the same reason, receive their characters and form of writing from them. But 'tis again to be doubted, whether both the Saxons and the Irish did not primarily derive their characters from the Britains: for though the British language be now writ in a different character from the Irish and Saxon, yet upon antient British monuments and inscriptions, most of the Saxon letters, different from the present Roman alphabet, are plainly to be feen. Nor was this character originally British, the same being used in the first De Re Di- age of the Roman empire, if we can lay any stress on Julius Cesar's will and testament, represented by Mabillon. But farther yet; if the Irish character be originally Saxon, the Saxons must either bring it along with them from Germany, or else they must have invented it after their arrival and fettlement in Britain: if the first, it may feem wonderful, how it came to be quite lost and forgotten in all parts of Germany; unless we can suppose, that it was limited only to the Saxons, and that they to a man came and settled in this island: for no body can be ignorant, that not only the Germans, but the Swedes and Danes too, use the Latin character; which, if we suppose them to have but lately borrowed, yet in all probability, their former letter was Gothick or Runick, to which the Saxon bears no great resemblance. But if it be said, that the Saxons invented this character after their coming to Britain; I cannot well conceive, why they should put themselves to such unnecessary trouble, when with far greater ease and facility they might copy and borrow from the Britains; unless the odium betwixt both nations made them scorn to ape and imitate an enemy. But be it so, that the Saxons invented this character in

http://storesilebay.com/Andestryl-Found

nor learning before they came over; and confequently, that these authors which Bede mentions to have transcribed out of, could not be Saxons.

As to the civil part of the British history, that the transactions of state were recorded, and that copies thereof came to the hands of posterity, we have the express testimony of Nennius, who flourished about three hundred years after Gildas. For in his preface to the history of the Britains. he openly declares, that he composed his history, Partim majorum traditionibus, partim scriptis, partim etiam monumentis veterum Britanniæ incolarum. Here Nennius says, that he partly extracted his history out of the writings of the antient Britains. And what could these writings be? Certainly, they were not the works of Gildas, the only British author weread of before Nennius; upon the account that the history of Nennius is much larger, and far more complete than that of Gildas; this latter, besides the names of a few British kings, having left nothing historical to posterity; the main, it seems, of his design being to rail, and to inveigh against his country, to which he had taken some displeasure. From whence then else could Nennius extract the materials of his history? Why, 'tis reasonable to suppose, that from some British records, which possibly might be recovered fince the time of Gildas; and if then, why might not more be discovered fince Nennius, and that delivered to Geoffrey by the arch-deacon of Oxon, be one?

But besides, that the Britains kept memorials of their transactions, we may rationally gather from the constitution and profession of the bards.

Diodorus Siculus says, οῦ τοι ἢ μετ' Οργα'νων ταϊς λυξαις ὁμιίων, ες μβὸ ὁμιεσιν, οῦς βλαστημεσι; The bards finging to an instrument like a harp, repeat the praises and commendations of some, the faults and dispraises of others. And in like manner Lib. 15. Marcellinus; Bardi quidem fortia virorum illustrium facta beroicis composita versibus, cum dulcibus lyræ modulis cantitarunt. And above the rest

Pharfal.

Lucan:

Vos quoque qui fortes Animas, belloque peremptas Laudibus in longum vates emittitis ævum, Plurima fecuri fudiftis Carmina Bardi.

But that the Bards did not only commit to memory the famous deeds of their princes and heroes, and so recite and repeat them upon occasions; but also that they wrote down and recorded what they repeated, we have the ample testimony of Giraldus Cambrensis. Hoc ctiam mibi notandum videtur, quod Bardi Cambrenses, et Cantatores seu recitatores, genealogiam habent prædictorum principum in libris corum antiquis et authenticis, sed tamen Cambrice scriptam, eandemque memoriter tenent a Roderico magno usque ad Belinum magnum, et inde usque ad Silvium, Ascanium, et Encam; et ab Enca usque ad Adam, generationem linealiter producunt.

Now that the genealogies here mentioned by Giraldus, were not only a bare account of the feveral descents and successions of the British kings, but also some memorials of their lives and actions, may be easily gathered from the above said manners and customs of the Bards. And seeing these Bards did preserve not only in memory but in writing too, the lineal succession and most famous transactions of their kings; I see no reason why the history of Geoffrey may not, as to a great part of it, pretend to greater authority than is generally attributed to it. And if it be objected, that the Bards, by a poetical liberty outdid the truth of history, in the praises of those princes they were to celebrate; yet thus far it may reasonably be acknowledged, that the names and succession of the several kings are real, and consequently that Geosfrey could never be the inventer of so large a list of nick-names, as he is generally thought to be. For it is very probable, that the history of the Britains translated by Geosfrey, was composed partly out of these genealogies peculiar to the Bards, and partly out of any other records and monuments of the Britains; both which I have shewn to have been preserved,

But to descend to the particulars of this history, the first and most suspicious relation, is that of the landing of Brute with a colony of Trojans, the several crosses and encounters he sustained in his voyage; and then of this island receiving its name from him. Should we indeed reflect upon the particular circumstances of this story, we might upon good reason be satisfied of the vanity and falseness of them; but therefore to conclude, that because the building is suspicious, the foundation consequently must be fabulous, and a perfect contrivance; does, I think, deferve fome better examination: for if we do but reflect upon the contemporary histories of the Greeks and Romans, those more polite and literate nations, we may with equal pretence of reason affirm, that there is no foundation for any matter of fact before the Olympids; or that the relation of Æneas coming to Italy, and all that history, to the building of Rome, are altogether groundless and impertinent, because they are intermixt with fables and impossibilities. Livy assures us, that all the transactions, before the building of Rome, are rather owing to poetical fancy and extravagancies, than to any true and certain matter of fact; and therefore he declined to give either his affent or diffent, to any thing related of those times: Quæ ante conditam condendamve Urbem, poeticis magis decora fabulis, quam incorruptis rerum gestarum monumentis traduntur, ea nec affirmare, nec refellere in animo est. And Plutarch goes farther, and tells us, that the original and etymology of Rome, that famous city, fo well known afterwards over all the world, could not be agreed upon among the diversity of authors, and confequently must be very obscure and uncertain. Τὸ μέγα της "Ρωμής όνομα η δόξη δία πάνουν ἀνθεώπων Κεχωενκός ἀφ' ότα κὰ δὶ Ϋν αἰτίαν τῆ πόλει γέςονεν, έχ ώμολογηθαι παρά τοίς συγγρα φεδοιν.

Vita Rom.

Præfat.

But for all their own historians do allow that the history of those times are fabulous and uncertain; yet there are none that question the being of Æneas, and that the Romans were descended from him. The like may be urged for the hiftory of Brutus, and the landing of the Trojans in this island; that though many particular circumstances are fabulous, and entirely poetical, yet it does not thence necessarily follow, that there is no manner of ground or foundation for fuch a relation. Neither is it sufficient conviction, to urge, that the very being of Brute is all a fiction, by reason that the Roman historians make no mention of such a person to be the son of Silvius; because, that through the whole Succession from Æneas to Romulus, the Histories of those times take notice only of the fon that was to fuc-

ceed; it being unreasonable to suppose, that all the kings of Latium during that period, should beget each of them, but one son. And therefore, what by the obscurity of those ages, and what by bearing regard to the line of succession, many collateral princes escaped the cognizance of future historians. Nor is it enough to affirm, that the history of Brute is but lately known and discovered to the world; whereas the fabulous Roman history has been recorded from antiquity; because, that though we are not certain that the British history has been handed down to posterity in writing; yet we are sure, that it was an antient tradition, long before Geosfrey's publishing of it; and one should think, that an ancient national tradition, might require a stricter examination, than hastily to throw it aside, as

But the question is not, whether the British history, as related by Geoffrey, be, as to all the circumstances of it, true and real matter of fact; for that, no man, I prefume, can reasonably maintain; but whether there be any ground or foundation of truth couched under these poetical and fabulous narratives. Now the first thing we meet with in the British history, is, an account of Brutus his pedigree, how he was descended from the Trojans, and having accidentally flain his father Silvius, how he was forced to flee into Greece, whence, after several scuffles with Pendrasus, a petty prince of that country, he thought fit to retire, and to feek his fortune by fea. But he had not wandered long, when he met with Corinæus, with another party of desolate Trojans, with whom having joined his forces, he followed the counsel of the Oracle.

Oracle, and at last arrives in this Island, from him afterwards called Britain. Now as to the particular circumstances related in the life of Brutus, they may properly be placed in the same class with Homer's account of the travels of Ulysses, or Virgil's description of Æneas, his adventure to Italy; that is to fay, that they are poetical fictions, and perfectly confonant to the humour of that fabulous age. But the question in hand will be, whether there be any probability for the ground of this story, that Brute should bring over a colony of Trojans, and seat himself in this island. Now what is most materially urged against it, is the novelty of this discourse, that none of the Roman historians make the least mention of such a person as Brutus; and that Cæfar and Tacitus, who feem to have enquired more narrowly into the original of the Britains, found no fuch tradition in their time; otherwise in giving their opinion whence the Britains were derived, they would never have omitted fuch an ancient national tradition, of their being descended from the Trojans. Besides, that Gildas, who was a Briton, takes no notice of fuch a tradition, which in all probability he would never have omitted, had there been such an account of their origin in his time.

As to what is objected against the antiquity of this tradition, is certainly very erroneous; for it is so far from being first known to the world, at the publication of Geoffrey's history, that Nennius, long before that time, and Merlyn much antienter than he, speak of the Britains being descended from Troy. Nay the Saxons themselves, before Geoffrey, were not unacquainted with this tradition, as plainly appears from the antient Saxon poet, mentioned by Mr. Wheelock, whom he thus translates:

Notes on Bede.

—Hæc unica fæmina prima Ante omnes fævit Irojani semina belli, Hanc Britones dixere Helenam, sed Dardanus ille Excelsus Bruti pater extitit, unde Britanni Heroum sumpsere genus; sortissimis idem Hunc orbem primus regere, & dominarier ausus.

And again:

Insula di Eta fuit Britannia nomine Bruti.

That Gildas should make no mention of this British tradition, is no great wonder, and as little to the purpose, to invalidate the antiquity of it; for we must not regard the intent and purport of Gildas's writing, which was not to give an account of the history and antiquity of the Britains, as much as to inveigh against the prophaneness and licentiousness of the age; wherein his zeal and passion carried him so far, that he did not spare either princes or the greatest perfons; and therefore he might well omit to give an account of the origin of the Britains, feeing it was remote from, and exclusive of his purpose. Cæsar indeed seems to have been somewhat more inquisitive about the antient state and descent of those people he invaded; but his stay in Britain was fo short, and his knowledge of the country so defective, being he had no communication with the inland Britains, whom he owns himself to be the antient inhabitants, that it can be no great wonder he should be ignorant of this tradition: for if this curious person person had had the opportunity of a free conversation with the Britains, he would in all likelihood have left a large discovery of their manners and customs, and given a more perfect description of Britain; which at that time would have been a very acceptable performance, to all the perfons of learning and curiofity in Rome, who as yet had but very shallow knowledge of the island. Or if we suppose that he made the strictest enquiry about the state of the Britains, which he might probably have learnt from Mandubratius the fon of Imanuentius, king of the Trinobantes, who, for fear of Cassibelan, had come over to him to Gaul, and fided with him during the British wars, it is very possible he might be ignorant that the Britains were descended from the Trojans, and that to be an antient and a current tradition among them. Tacitus was never in Britain, but from the relation of his father-in-law, Julius Agricola, and others, he made a guess, that from the different shapes and colour, they were descended from different nations; some from Germany, fome from Gaul, and others from Spain; but yet, as to the primitive Britains, those who seemed to be the ancient inhabitants of the island, he concludes after the usual pagan manner, Britanniam qui mortales initio coluerint, indigenæ an advecti, ut inter Barbaros parum compertum. The Britains, indeed, in Tacitus's time, were well known to the Romans, and confequently thefe latter might have been eafily instructed, as to what knowledge the Britains had of their antiquity; but it does not therefore necessarily follow, that because this historian does not mention any fuch tradition, there was none really among them;

them; because possibly he might never have heard of it; or if he did, he might have omitted inserting of it in his history: for what he has de-livered relating to the antiquity of the Britains, was but contingent to his purpose, the whole scope of his design being to describe the actions of his father-in-law, during his lieutenancy in this island; and therefore it is not at all wonderful, that he has given but a flight and an im-perfect account of what he never defigned to make a narrow inspection into. Besides, if we suppose him to have made a diligent enquiry into the matter, and to have mind to know the ancient state and origin of the Britains; yet since he wonted the opportunity of conversing with them, having been never in Britain; and none of the Britains that we know of, being at Rome, except those who from their youth were educated there, and conesquently were in all probability ignorant of the traditions of their own country; he might very well at fuch a distance have been never acquainted with fuch a national tradition, which for all that, might have been current and prevailing among the Britains themfelves. As to other Roman historians, who have writ of the antiquity and primitive state of Rome, that they have made no mention of any fuch perfon as Brutus the fon of Sylvius; I have already observed, is not of that force as to overthrow this tradition, by reason that, from Æneas down to Romulus, there is regard only had to the line of fuccession, and those only recorded who succeeded in the throne.

Let us confider now, in the next place, what probable reasons may be affigured to vindicate this supposed Trojan origin from an utter fiction; and whether whether the history of Brutus have any probable dependance upon some real foundation. And not to infift on the antiquity of this tradition, nor the authority of the British history published by Geoffrey, nothing gives greater confirmation to affert some real foundation for this supposed fable, than the near alliance and affinity betwixt the Britains and the Grecians. All learned men allow that the Greek was the ancient language of the Trojans, and that their customs were not much different; and whoever will compare the manners, religion and customs of the Britains with those of the Grecians will easily discover a palpable conformity betwixt both nations, but more especially in the language; in which, as Mr. Camden says, Maximum est disputationis firmamentum et certissimum originis gentium argumentum. Qui enim (as he goes on) linguæ societatæ conjuncti sunt, originis etiam communione suisse conjunctos, homo opinor nemo inficiabitur.

I shall not at present trouble the reader with a particular enumeration of that assinity; but will refer him to Sir John Price's Defensio Hishoriæ Britannicæ, and Mr. Sheringham's treatise De Gentis Anglorum Origine. Now, since there is such demonstrable assinity betwixt the Britains and the Grecians in all these respects; we must either suppose, with Mr. Camden, that they are of the same origin, at least that a colony of either Greeks or Trojans came over to this issand; or essentially the Britains had correspondence, trassick and communication with the Grecians. Now, that the Grecians had no knowledge of the Britains till very late, may be gathered from hence, that even the name of Britain is not so much as mentioned by any Greek author before Polybius, who lived less than two hundred years before the Roman invasion, and by him but just named, as betokening a very remote and distant country, wherein indeed it was reported that there was plenty of tin. Nay, Britain was so far unknown to the eastern parts of the world, long after this, that even Cæfar himfelf, when he intended an invasion, was perfectly ignorant of the state of the island; and tho' he made what enquiry he could of the British merchants in Gaul, yet for all that, he says himself, Neq; quanta esset insula magnitudo, neq; quæ aut Bell. Gall. quantæ nationes incolerent, neq; quem usum belli ha-Lib. 4. berent, aut quibus institutis uterentur, neq; qui essent ad majorum navium idonei portus reperire poterat: and therefore he was forced to fend Caius Volusenus before him to search into the state and condition of the island. Such strangers were the Romans at this time to the isle of Britain. And can it be supposed, that the Grecians had a better knowledge of it, fince, in all probability, if they had had a commerce with the Britains, the Romans, who were mafters of the fea long before this, would have quickly discovered their merchandizing; which, if as profitable as is imagined, they were no fuch enemies to gain but they would share in the booty. At least, had the Grecians had any correspondence with the Britains, the Romans would in all probability have known it, and confequently they must needs have received better intelligence of the Island than what they feem to have had at Cæsar's landing. But Dion Cassius seems to put this matter out of dispute, and gives us a very plain account of what knowledge the Greeks and Romans had of this island, which I will

I will fet down in the Latin translation, Primis Gracorum Romanorumque ne esse quidem Britan-niam compertum suit, posseriores in controversiam adduxerunt, continens ea terra, an verò insula esset: multaque de utraque opinione conscripta sunt ab iis, qui certi quidem nil noverant (quippe qui nec vidissent, nec ab indigenis qualis esset accepissent) sed conjecturis tantum, quantum vel otii vel studii fingulis aderat uterentur. And the antient poet, in Eustathius upon Dionysius, reckoning up the greatest islands of the world in his time, makes no mention of Britain, which shews it was not then known. And that Britain was the antient Caffiterides of the Grecians, from whence they received their tin, is altogether uncertain; for Herodotus, making mention of those islands of Cassiterides, fairly declares he knew not where they were; which cannot well be supposed, if the Grecian merchants traded thither in his time; it being rational to imagine that, in treating of any country, fuch a learned historian would endeavour to get the best intelligence he possibly could; and learning being at the highest pitch in Greece at this time, it is very strange we had not a better account of this island, which is supposed to be so well known to those who had a constant traffick here. But indeed, all authors who have mentioned these Caffiterides do not feem to have known where they were fituated, only Dionysius, in his περιήσιος, makes them plainly to be the same with the Hesperides, those Islands lying in the Atlantick Ocean, far enough from Britain, concerning which the poets have invented so many fables.

- Aurag ow anpnv, "Ιρην ην ενέπασι κάρην εμβι Ευρωπείης, Νήσες 3' Εασέριδας τόθι καινιτέροιο γειέθλη, 'Αρνειοί ναίκου ά γαυών παιδες 'Ιδήρων.

But admitting the Grecians to have been ignorant of any fuch place as Britain, and that there never was any traffic or communication betwixt these two nations; yet fince the Gauls spoke Greek, it is not very improbable but that the Britains might borrow from them. That the Gauls used the Greek tongue, we have the testimony of Cæsar; and it is very certain, that all the Grecian learning flourished at Marseils, which was an ancient and and famous university, and is very much celebrated by all almost, both Greek and Latin writers. And by this means, it may be reasonably concluded, how the British and Gaulish Druids became acquainted with the Grecian philosophy, which being as to all the different sects and opinions of it, taught at Marfeils, the Druids more particularly adhered to the Pythagorean, to which the Druid philosophy bears a very near resemblance, both as to the doctrine of the Mereulizwas, or the transmigration of the foul, and the rest of their mystical Cabala, which they so superstitiously kept fecret and close from the people.

But in opposition to this, it may be with greater certainty urged, that neither the Gaulish nor British Druids had any correspondence with the Grecians, and consequently could not borrow their philosophical mysteries from them. For if Cæsar may be believed, The art and learning of the Druids was first found out in Lib. VI. Britain, and from thence is thought to be brought into Gaul; and at this time, as he goes on, such as will attain to the perfect knowledge of that discipline, do for the most part travel thither to learn it. Now if this be true, that the British Druids were the inventors of this kind of learning, and that the Gauls came over hither to be instructed in the way and method of it; I can see no reason, why they should have any communication with the Grecian academy at Marseils, much less that they borrowed it from the disciples of Pythagoras, especially since they accounted their mysteries so sacred, that they would communicate them to none, besides those of their own order. Nay, it may be better questioned, whether Druidism be not much antienter than Pythagoras, and antecedent to that æra, when the Grecians began to philosophise. And for the same reason, that the Druids of Britain did not derive their philosophy from Marfeils, it will follow, that they could not borrow their language; for if we suppose, which is the most we can, that the Gauls had fome communication with those Grecians, and upon that account that their language was in some measure mingled with the Greek; yet in their travel to Britain, they came not to communicate, but to horrow; and it is not likely that the Britains should be effected with the language of those who came to learn of them. Besides, of all the number of Gaulish words collected by Cambden, which agree with the British, few or none seem to be of Greek derivation; fo it is highly improbable, as far as we can see into this matter, that the Gauls should ever communicate the Greek tongue to the Britains. And therefore, fince this difficulty cannot be removed by any other way, it is not unreasonable to suspect, that there is some real foundation lodged in the ruins of the story of Brutus.

boundless accession of poetical invention.

I should tire the reader, and exceed the just bounds of what I at first proposed, if I should take a particular view of the British history, published by Geoffrey, and therefore I shall now only take notice of the life of King Cadwalader, where the history of Wales begins, and where a palpable mistake, I may call it forgery, has been committed by one fide or another. For the very same things, which the British history relate of Cadwalader, the Saxon writers attribute to Ceadwalla King of the West Saxons, how he was driven by a famine out of his dominions, came afterwards to Rome, and was received by Pope Sergius, with other particulars here too tedious to relate. But that which feems to charge the fault upon Geoffrey, or whoever else was the author of the British history; is; that Bede an author of established credit, and one who lived near those times, says that it was the West Saxon King Ceadwalla that went to Rome in Pope Sergius's time. But then on the other fide, it is hardly conceivable, supposing the British history a perfect contrivance, that Geoffrey or any other should be so grosly over-feen, as to borrow the transaction of a real king, and one fo well known, to make up the life of a fictitious one cotemporary with him. Bede's reputation was too firm, to be shaken by an upftart history, and therefore it cannot well be supposed that the author of the British history was fo unwary, in case he designed a cheat, as to let himfelf open to fo easy a detection of forgery. All then that can be faid, is, that the agreeableness of the names and time that these two princes lived in; and possibly their both 1 2 going going to Rome, which was not unusual in those days, might without any design of putting upon the world, make a confusion in their histories. But whether the life of Cadwalader be a fable, the reader is at his own liberty to judge; it being presixed to the history of Wales, not as it is more authentic, or any way of greater certainty than the rest of Geosfrey's history, but only because the author, Caradoc of Lhangarfan, began his continuance of the British history with it.

This Caradoc of Lhangarfan, an author of undoubted integrity, was cotemporary with Geoffrey, who taking his rife from the place where the British history concluded, made a continuation of it through the reigns of several of the princes of Wales, till the year 1157, about which time he flourished. After him, all things of moment that happened in Wales, were kept and recorded in the abbies of Conwey in North-Wales, and Ystratflur in South-Wales, where the princes and noblemen of Wales were buried, as appears by the testimony of Gutryn Owen, who lived in the time of Edward IV. and writ the most exact and perfect copy of the same. All the most notable occurrences being thus registered in these abbies, were most generally compared together every third year, when the Beirdh or Bards belonging to these two houses went their ordinary visitations, which was called Clera. And this continued until the year 1270, a little before the death of the last Prince Lhewelyn, who was slain at Buelht. Humphrey Lloyd, Gent. who flourished in the reign of Henry VIII. and one greatly skilled in the British antiquities, continued this history to the death of Prince Lhewelyn; and afterwards having translated the whole into English language, had defigned to commit it to the press. But his death prevented what he purposed, and stopped the publication of this history for a long time after, until David Powel, D.D. in the time of Queen Elizabeth, having met with Humphrey Lloyd's translation, collected what he could out of English historians, which he added by way of annotations, and so published it in the year 1584. This being the fole history of the princes of Wales, and the only edition of this history, I was moved to prepare it for another impression, by a new modelling the language, making the body of the history intire, without troubling the reader to fee the fame thing by way of annotation, Dr. Powel's notes being for the greatest part but a repetition of the same matter of fact out of the English historians, with what other improvements could be made. The additions which I made to the former history, I chiefly took out of the notes of that late great antiquarian Mr. Robert Vaughan of Hengwrt; by whose help also I have corrected, fupplied, and continued the chronology. John Price's description of Wales will pretty well answer the geographical part of this history, till we shall be able to recover and fix several of those places whose names are only left to us at present, which we have great hopes, will be successfully perfected, by the unwearied labours of my ingenious friend Mr. Edward Lhwyd, in his intended Etymological Dictionary. I have added by way of appendix, the feveral records belonging to this history, and chose rather to insert the articles of peace betwixt Prince Lhewelyn and John Peckam Archbishop of Canterbury, in the original, with reference thereunto, than to infert all the grievances which the Welch then made in the English language, which do not so handsomely bear a translation. d 3

WALES.

Drawn first by Sir John Price, Knight, and afterward augmented and made perfect by Humphry Lloyd, Gentleman.

HE three fons of Brutus having divided the whole ifle of Britain into three parts; that part contained within the French feas, with the rivers of Severn (called in British, Hafren) Dee and Humber fell to the eldest son Locrinus, which was after his name called Lhoyger, which name it hath in the British tongue to this day, and in English now it is called England, and is augmented northward to the river Tweed. The fecond fon Albanactus, had all the land northward from Humber to the fea Orkney, called in the British tongue Mor Werydh, and in the Latin Mare Caledonicum. The third fon Camber had to his part, all that which remained undivided, lying within the Spanish and Irish seas, and separated from England, with the rivers Severn and Dee; and this part was after his name called Cambria, and the inhabitants thereof Cambryi and their language Camberace, and so they are at this day. So that they have kept the same country and language this 2700 and odd years, without commixtion with any other nation, especially especially in North-Wales, as it shall hereafter ap-

And because the name of this country is changed, or rather mistaken by the inhabitants of England, and not by them called Cambry, but Wales: I think it neceffary to declare the occasion thereof, which is, that where the Saxons a people of Germany were the first that after the Britains inhabited and ruled the greatest part of this isle, and drove the Britains to that corner, which according to the manner of their country they called Wales, and the people Welch-men, and the tongue Welch, that is to fay, Strange, or not of them understood. For at this day the inhabitants of the Low Countries call their next neighbours language of Henegaw, or other that speak French, Walsh, as a language to them unknown. Likewise the dwellers of Tyroll and other the higher countries of Germany do name the Italian their next neighbour a Welchman, and his language Welsh. And this is an evident proof, that they which harped upon a Queen Gwalaes, and of a Prince Wala (of whom neither British, Latin, nor English maketh mention) were foully deceived; and fo likewise was a great historiographer of late days, which faith, that it was called Wallia, quafi Italia, because the rest of the Romans which remained in the isle were driven thither. Neither is this any new invention, although Polydore Virgil with an Italian brag doth glorify himself to be the first that efpied it out, for divers antient writers do alledge the same cause of the name of Wales, of whom Sylvester Giraldus is one, who wrote in the time of Henry the fecond, after the conquest, before 380 years passed; which is an evident token, that the faid Polydore did either never fee nor read the antient histories of this realm, or diffembleth the fame to the advancement and praise of himself and his country; which to the learned and indifferent reader shall appear to be the only occasion he took that work in hand, for all his book redoundeth only to the praise and honour of the Romans, as well spiritual as temporal, and to blase d 4 for

for their acts and deeds within this realm: and upon the other part doth either openly flander, or else privily extenuuate, or shamely deny the martial prowess and noble acts, as well of Saxons, Danes, and Normans, as of the Britains, all inhabiters of this ifle. Which thing he that lift to prove, let him read and confer Cæsar's Commentaries, Cornelius Tacitus, Herodianus, and other antient writers, as well in Latin as in Greek, with his work. As for the antient writers of the British history, as the British chronicle, the history of Gildas, Ponticus Verunnius, yea the golden work of Matthew Paris, monk of St. Alban, which wrote from William Bastard, to the last years of Henry the third; I dare well fay he never faw them, they be in divers places to be had, fo that the truth may be easily proved. To make an end I say, that he being first a stranger born, and also ignorant as well in the histories of this realm, as of those tongues and languages wherein the fame were written, could never fet forth the true and perfect chronicle of the same. But he having a good grace, and a pleafant stile in the Latin tongue, and finding himself in a country where every man either lacked knowledge or spirit to fet forth the history of their own country, took this enterprise in hand, to their great shame, and no less dispraise, because he a blind leader shall draw a great number of undiscreet and rash followers, as well geographers and cosmographers, as chroniclers and historiographers, to the dark pit of ignorance, where I leave them at this time, remitting the reader to the apology of Sir John Price, Knt. and his British history, written by him of purpose, against the envious reports, and flanderous taints of the faid Polydore, where he shall see a great number of his errors consuted at large. And to return to my former matter of the name of Wales, which name to be given of late by a strange nation may be otherwise proved: for the Welchmen themselves do not understand what these words WALES and WELCH do fignify, nor know any other name of their country or themselves but Cambry, norof of their language but Cambraec, which is as much as to fay, as Camber's language or speech. So likewise they know not what England or English meaneth, but commonly they call the country Lhoyger, the English men, Saison, and the English tongue, Saisonaec. Which a Lorino is an evident token that this is the same language A Saxon which the Britains spake at the beginning; for the works of Merdhyn and of Taliessin, who wrote above 1000 years past, are almost the same words which they use at this day, or at the least easy to be understood of every one which knoweth perfectly the Welch tongue, especially in North Wales.

Beside this, where at this day, there do remain three remnants of the Britains, divided every one from other with the feas, which are in Wales, Cornwall (called in British Cerniw) and little Britain, yet almost all the particular words of these three people are all one, although in pronunciation and writing of the fentences they differ fomewhat, which is no marvel, feeing that the pronunciation in one realm is often fo diverse, that the one can scarce understand the other. But it is rather a wonder, that the Welchmen being separated from the Cornish, well nigh these 900 years, and the Britains from either of them 290 years before that, and having small traffic or concourse together since that time, have still kept their own British tongue. They are not therefore to be credited, which deny the Welch to be the old British tongue. And here I cannot pass over what one of these fine Chronicler's wrote of late, of the name of Britain, affirming that it should be so called of Britanie in France, as the elder of that name. But furely he had either never feen Ptolomy nor Cæsar, nor any other antient writer, or read them with small judgment and memory. For there he might have learned, that when this land was called Britain, the other was called Armorica, and how in Rob. Ca-

Britain, the other was called Armorica, and how in Rob. Cac. Maximus's time, Conan Meriadoc was the first that nall lib. 2. gave it that name, and inhabited it with Britains out of this isle. Other derivations of these words,

Britannia

Britannia and Albion, out of Greek and Latin, I am ashamed to rehearse; for unto such errors do they commonly fall, that either puffed up with vain-glory of their own wits, or pinched with despite and envy at other men's works, or blinded with ignorance, do go about to write and fet forth any history or chronicle. But paffing over this matter until another time. and bounds I will return to the description of Wales, which (as of Wales. I faid) was of old time compassed almost about with the Irish seas, and the rivers Dee and Severn, although afterwards the Saxons won by force from the Britains all the plain and champion country over the rivers, and specially Offa King of Mercia, who made a ditch of great breadth and depth, to be a mear betwixt his kingdom and Wales, which ditch began at the river Dee, by Baffingwerk, between Chefter and Ruthlan, and ran along the hills fides to the South fea, a little below Briftol, reaching above a hundred miles in length, and is in many places to be feen at this day, bearing the name of Clawdh Offa, that is to fay, Offa's ditch, and the country between it and England is commonly called in Welch, Y Mars, although the greatest part of it be now inhabited by Welchmen, namely in North Wales, which yet keepeth the antient limits to the river Dee, and in fome places over it. Other (as Sylvester Giraldus) make the river Wy, called in Welch Gwy, to be the mear between England and Wales, on the fouth part, called South Wales, who measureth the breadth of Wales, from Salow or Willoweford, called Rhyd yr helig upon Wy, to St. David's in Menevia 100 miles, and the length from Caerlheon upon Ysc in Gwentland, to Holyhead, called Caergybi in Anglefey, in Welch, called Môn, above 100 miles, and these be the common mears at this day, although the Welch tongue is commonly used and spoken in England, beyond these old mears a great way, as in Herefordshire, Gloucestershire, and a part of Shropshire. And thus for the general description of Wales, which afterward, about the year of Christ 870. Rodericus dericus Magnus, King of Wales, divided into three territories which they called kingdoms, which remain-

These three were Gwynedh, in English North Wales, Deheubarth, in English South Wales, and Powys Land; in every of the which he ordained a princely feat or court for the prince to remain at, most commonly; as in Gwynedh (which fome old writers call Venedotia for Gwynethia) Aberffraw in the ifle of Aberffraw. Môn or Anglesey. In Deheubarth, called in Latin Demetia, Caermardyn, from whence it was afterward removed to Dynefowr, eight miles thence. In Powys, Dynefowr. Pengwern, called Y Mwythic, and in English Shrewsbury, from whence it was removed to Mathrafal in Mathrafal. Powys Land. And because this history doth as well treat of wars betwixt these three provinces, as betwixt them and the Saxons, Normans and Flemings, I think it good to fet forth the particular description of every part by itself. And first of North Wales as the North Wales. chiefest part, which he gave his eldest son, ordaining that either of the other two should pay him yearly 2001. of tribute, as it appeareth in the laws of Howel Dha, which are to be had in Welch, and also in Latin. Therefore Gwynedh (called North Wales) had upon the north fide the Sea, from the river Dee at Bafingwerke to Aberdyfi, and upon the West and South West the river Dysi, which divideth it from South Wales, and in some places from Powys Land. And on the South and East, it is divided from Powys, fometimes with mountains, and fometimes with rivers, till it come to the river Dee again. This land was of old time divided to four parts, of which the chiefest was Môn, in English called Anglesey, where the Mon. prince's chief house was at Aberffraw, which is an island separated from the main land, with an arm of the sea called Mænai, and had in itself three cantreds or hundreds, which were fubdivided to fix comots, as cantref Aberffraw to comot Lhion, and comot Malhtraeth, cantref Cemais, to the comots Talibolion and Twr Celyn; cantref Roffyr to the comots Tyndaethwy daethwy and Mænai. And at this day there is a fine town in that ifle called Bewmoris, and a common paffage to Ireland at Caergybi, called in English Holyhead. But here I cannot wink at that notable error of Polydore, which (after his accustomed fashion) denieth this ifle to be called Môna, but Anglefia, or Anglorum Infula, because it is called in English Anglesev, and gives this name Mona to Man, and so hath loft the names of both isles: which ignorance and forgetfulness might be forgiven him, if he had not drawn a great number to this error with him. which in their charters do daily wrong name thefe ifles, which may be eafily proved. First, because the inhabitants of the ifle do know none other name but Môn; and it is called through all Wales, Tîr Môn, that is to fay, the land of Mon, unto this day. So that neither by memory of man, neither by any monument in writing in the British tongue can it appear, that ever it had any other name but Môn, yet there be manifest monuments for these 1000 years. It is also grown to a proverb through Wales, for the fertility of the ground, Môn mam Gymry, that is to fay, Môn mother of Wales.

THE DESCRIPTION OF WALES.

The antient history of Cornelius Tacitus (which belike age had beaten out of l'olydore's head) faith. that the foldiers of Paulinus Suetonius, and afterward of Julius Agricola, after they had paffed through North Wales, then came over against Môna, where they did swim over an arm of the sea of 200 paces, and fo by force won the ifle. Now whether it is more reasonable thus to swim over 200 paces, or 20 miles? I know there is no man that believeth Polydore in this point; let all men therefore judge the rest. As for that which he faith of the great woods, it is nothing; for both the Romans, and after when the christian faith took place in this realm, the christians did fall and root them out, for the idolatry and abfurd religion which was used there; that the King of Man fent for timber to Mon; read the life of Hugh Earl of Chester, which also is evident by the great beeches and other trees found in the earth at these days. His other reason is, because it is called Anglesey in the English tongue: fo is Lhoyger England, and Cambry Wales: Are those therefore the old names? No furely. And what if the inhabitants called it so? (as they did not) had it not a name before the Angles won it? Yes, I warrant you, but he had forgotten that. Now to the name of Man, it was ever, or at least these 1000 years named in British Manow, of which cometh the English name Man. The inhabitants thereof call it so. and no nation about it did ever call it Môn, no nor any writer but Polydore, which was too young a godfather to name fo old a child. For Gildas who wrote above 900 years paffed, whose writings Polydore never faw, but untruly fathers upon him his own device; Giraldus in his description of Ireland to Henry the Second, and Henry Huntington, do plainly call Man in Latin Eubonia, adding thereto either Manaw or Man, for the better understanding of the name; Will you believe them or Polydore? Other arguments there are which I will pass over, till I have more leisure and occasion to write of this matter.

The fecond part of North Wales was called Arfon, Arfon, which is as much as to fay, over against Mon; and had in it four cantreds, and ten comots.

Cantref Aber had in it three comots, Y Lhechwedhuchaf, Y Lhechwedh-isaf and Nant-Conwey.

Cantref Arfon had two comots, Ywch Gwyrfai, and Ifgwyrfai.

Efionyth.

Cantref Lhyn containeth three comots, Cymytmayn, Tinlhayn and Canologion. This is now called Caernarvonshire, as Môn is called Angleseyshire, and have the same division at this day. In this shire are Snowden-hills, called Eryri, neither in height, fertility of the ground, wood, cattle, fish and fowl, giving place to the samous Alps, and without controversy the strongest country within Britain.

Here

Here is the town of Caernarvan, called in the old time Caerfegonce; and there is also Conwey called Caergyffyn. And the see of Bangor, with divers other antient cattles and places of memory, and was the last part of Wales that came under the dominion of the kings of England. It hath on the north the sea and Mænai, upon the cast and south east, the river Conwey, which divideth it from Denbighshire, although it now pass the river in one place by the sea shore. And on the south west and west, it is separated from Merionyth by high mountains and rivers, and other mears.

Merionyth.

The third part of Gwynedh was Merionyth containing three cantreds, and every cantred three contots.

As cantref Meyreon hath three comots, Talybont,

Pennal and Ystumaner.

Gwarthrenium.

Cantref Penlhyn had these, Vwchmeloch, Ismeloch, and Micnaint, and this keepeth the said name till this day, but not within the same mears, and is full of hills and rocks, and hath upon the north the sea, notable at this day for the great resort and number of people that repair thither to take herrings. It hath upon the east, Arson and Denbigh-land, upon the south, Powys, and upon the west, Dysi and Cardiganshire.

Tegyd.

In this country standeth the town of Harlech, and a great lake called Lhyn-Tegyd, through which the river Dee runneth, and mingleth not with the water of the lake, which is three miles long, and also the salmons, which are commonly taken in the river hard by the lake, are never seen to enter the lake. Likewise a kind of fish called Gwyniaid, which are like to whitings, and are full in the lake, are never taken in the river. Not far from this lake is a place called Caergay, which was the house of Gay, Arthur's foster-brother. This shire, as well as Arson, is full of cattle, fowl and sish, with great number of red deer and roes; but there is great scarcity of corn.

The fourth part of Gwynedh, was called y Berfedh. Berfedh. wlad, which may be englished, the in-land or middle wlad. country, which contained five cantreds and thirteen comots, as cantref Rhyfonioc had in it these comots, Uwchalet and Isalet.

Cantref Ystrad had Hiraethoc and Cynmeirch.

Cantref Rhos thefe, Uwchdulas, Ifdulas and Creuthyn, all which are in the lordship of Denbigh, saving the Creuthyn which is in Caernaryonshire, wherein the castle of Dyganwy did stand, which was the earls of Chester, and is commonly called in the Latin and English chronicle, Gannoc.

The fourth cantref was Dyffryn Clwyd, which may Dyffryn be englished the valley of Clwyd, and now is called Clwyd. the lordship of Rhuthyn, and hath these comots, Co-leigion, Lhannerch and Dogueilyn.

The fifth cantref is Tegengl, and now is a part of Flintshire, having these comots, Counsylht, Prestatyn. and Ruthlan. And in this part is one of the fairest vallies within this ifle, containing 18 miles in length, and 4, 5, 6 or 7 in breadth, as the hills either draw inward together, or backward afunder, which high hills do inclose it on the east, west, and south parts, and northward the fea. It is plentiful of cattle, fish and fowl, corn, hav, grafs, and wood, and divided along in the midst with the river Clwyd, to whom runneth Clywedoc, Ystrat, Whilar, Elwy, and a great number of other rivers from the hills. In this valley, two miles from the fea, is the town and castle of Ruthlan, where fometimes a parliament hath been Ann. 12. kept. And two miles above it is the fee of St. Afaph, Edw. I. between the rivers Clwyd and Elwy, called in the old time the bishop's fee of Lhan Elwy. Four miles thence, and two miles from the river, is fituate upon a rock the town and castle of Denbigh, where is one of the greatest markets in the marches of Wales, and one of the fairest and strongest castles within this realm, which being the house of David brother to Lhewelyn, the last prince of the Welch blood, was enlarged and strengthened by Henry Lacy, Earl of Lincoln.

Lincoln, to whom King Edward gave the fame lordship; it is also the shire-town of that shire. Five miles above this, is the town of Ruthyn with a fair castle, which sometimes belonged to the lords Gray earls of Kent. This part of North-Wales, hath upon the north the river Dee, and the sea. Upon the west, Arson, and the river Conwey. South and east, Merionyth, and the country then called Powys. And these be the mears and bounds of Gwynedh or Venedotia for the name of North-Wales containeth, besides this, all Powys, at these days. So there was under the territory of Abersfraw sisteen cantreds, and in them thirty-eight comots.

Mathrafal or Powys.

The fecond kingdom was Mathrafal, which in right order was the third, which came to the third brother. vet for the better understanding of the history following. I have placed it here. To this kingdom belonged the country of Powys, and the land between Wy and Severn. Which part had upon the fouth and west, South-Wales, with the rivers Hy and Tywy, and other mears. Upon the north, Gwynedh, and upon the east the marches of England, from Chester to Wy, a little above Hereford; and therefore it was most troubled with wars, as well of the Saxons, as afterwards of the Normans, lords marches, who daily won fome part thereof, and by that means it was the first part that ferved the Kings of England, and therefore less esteemed of all the rest. This part called Powys, was divided again into Powys Fadoc, and Powys Wenwynwyn. Powys Fadoc contained in itself five cantreds and fifteen comots.

Cantreff Y Barwn, which had three comots, Dynmael, Edeyrneon, and Glyndourdwy, which are now in Merionythshire (faving Dinmael which is in Den-

Cantref Uwchnant hath thee comots, Merfforth in Flintshire; Maelor Gymraeg, in English Bromfield, now in Denbighshire, and Maelor Saesneg in Flint-shire.

Cantref Trefred containeth these comots, Croessain, Tref y Wayn, in English Chirke, and in Denbighshire. Croesoswallt, in English Oswestrey, and in Shropshire.

Cantref Rhaiyder with his comots Mochnant Israiyder, Cynlhaeth and Nanheudwy all in Chirke-land, and in Denbighshire. Also the lordship of Whytington, now in Shropshire, was in this part of Powys, which part at this day, hath lost the name of Powys, and is situated in divers shires, as it appeareth by the discourse before passed. In this part is the cassed of Holt in Bromssed, and the cassed of Chirke in Chirkeland. Likewise the lordship and cassed of Whytington, which came by marriage to Foulk Fitz-Warren. There is beside these, the lordship of Oswestry, of the which the Fitz-Alans have been lords these 300 and odd years, and of divers other lordships in those marches, as Shrarden, the eleven towns, Clun and many others, which are all now in Shropshire.

The fecond part called Powys Wenwynwyn, had

and Ystrat Marchelb.

Cantref Cydewen had comot Conan and Comot Hauren.

Cantref Gonan had Cyfeilioc and Mouthwy, which is in Merionythshire. Of all these, the three first cantreds do only at this day bear the name of Powys, which are upon the north-side of Severn, and are all sive (saving the comot of Mowthwy) in Montgomery-shire.

This is a country full of woods, hills, and rivers, and hath in it these towns, the Poole, New-Town and Machylhaeth, Arustly was in old time in this part, but afterwards it came to the princes of Gwynedh.

Thefe

These lordships came by just descent from the princes thereof, to a woman named Hawys, the daughter of Owen ap Gruffydh. Arustly and Cyfeilioc came to the baron of Dudley, and afterwards it was fold to the king.

The third part belonging to Mathrafal, was the land between Wy and Severn, containing four cantreds, and thirteen comots.

Cantref Melienyeth hath these comots, Ceri, Swydhygre Rhiwalalht, and Glyn Iiethon.

Cantref Elfel hath these, Uwchmynydh, Ismynydh,

Cantref y Clawdh these, Dysfryn Teyfediat, Swydhyno-

gen, and Pennwelht.

Cantref Buelht hath these, Swydh y Fam, Dreulys, and Ifyrwon. Of this part there is at this day some in Montgomeryshire, some in Radnorshire, and some in Brecknockshire. In this part, and in the lordships marching to it, which although at the time of this divifion, which was in the time of the last prince, were not in his subjection, yet to this day speak Welch, and are called Wales, and in these comots are these towns and castles. Montgomery called in Welch Trefaldwyn, a pretty town and a fair castle. The castle of Clun, called Colunwy, which is the earls of Arundel. The town Knighton, in Welch Trefyelawd. The castle of Cymaron. Presteyn in Welch Lhanandras. The town and castle of Radnor, in Welch Maesyfed, at this day the shire town. The town of Kington and the castle of Huntingdon, called in Welch Y Castell Mayn, which were the Bohuns earls of Hereford, and after the dukes of Buckingham. Castle Payne, Haye, Lhanfair in Buelht. These lordships with Brecknock and Abergefenny, were belonging to the Bruces lords of Brecknock. and after came divers times, and by fundry means to the Bohuns, Nevils, and Mortimers. And fo (as I have rehearfed) in this territory or kingdom were found fourteen cantreds, and forty comots. Two of thefe parts, which are Powys and Gywnedh, are at this day called North-Wales, and divided into fix shires, Mon called Anglesey, Caernarvon, Merionyth, Denbigh, Flint.

Flint, and Montgomeryshire, and are all on the north-fide Severn, saving a piece of Montgomeryshire.

And here I think it good to let the reader understand what the British chronicle faith of North-Wales, which affirmeth that three times it came by inheritance to women. First to Stradwen, daughter to Cadfan ap Conan ap Endaf, and wife to Coel Godeboc, mother to Genaw, Dyfyr and Gwawl. The fecond time to the fame Gwawl wife to Edeyrn ap Padarn, and mother to Cunetha Wledic; which Cunetha inhabiting in the north parts of England, about the year 540, after the incarnation of Christ, and hearing how the mingled nations of Irish-Scots, and Picts, had over-run the seashore of Cardigan, which was part of his inheritance, fent his fons thither to enjoy their inheritance, of whom Tibiaon his eldest son died in Man, which land the said Irish-Scots had won. For Gildas saith, that the children of Glam Hector, which peopled a great part of Ireland, Yscroeth with his people inhabited Dalrieuda, which is a part of Scotland: Builke with his people came to Man. But I think it good to put in Gildas's words which faith; Builke cum filiis suis inhabitavit Euboniam insulam vulgo Manaw, quæ est in meditullio maris inter Hyberniam & Britanniam; that is to say, Builke with his children inhabited the isle Eubonia, commonly Manaw (for fo it was and is named in British) which lieth in the middle of the fea, between Ireland and Britain. This was not called Môna, as Polydore faineth. The children of Bethoun inhabited Demetia, which is South-Wales, with Gwyr and Cydweli, till they were chased thence by the children of Cunetha. Thus far Gildas. Therefore the fons of Cunetha, being arrived in North-Wales (as well I think being driven by the Saxons, as for their inheritance) divided the country betwixt them. And first Meiredon the fon of Tibiaon, the fon of Cunetha, had cantref Meireaon to his part. Arustel ap Cunetha had cantref Arustly. Caredic ap Cunetha, had Caerdigion, now called Cardiganshire. Donod had cantref Dunodic. Edeyrn had Edeyrnion. Mael had Dynmael. Coel had Coleyon. Doguael had Dogueilyn. Rhyfaon had e 2 Rhyfonioc

Maelor the Rhyfonioc, now Denbighland. Eineon Yrch had fon of Caereneon in Powys. Uffa had Maefufwalht near Offwran, fon Caereneon in Powys. Uffa had Maefufwalht near Offwrand Maelor King of Northumberland, to be flain there, and of the two well that fprung where his arm was carried, nothing for Maelor. For Beda and all other writers teftify that Peanda flew Offwrand Maelor, wald at Maferfelt, in the kingdom of Northumberland, called Br. and Maelor and his body was buried in the abby of Bradney, in the Saesneg. province of Lhyndesey. But to my former matter. These names given by the fons of Cunetha, remain to this day. After the Irish-Picts or Scots, which which the Britains called Y Gwydhyl Phictiaid, which is to say, the Irish-Picts, did over-run the isle of Môn, and were driven thence by Caswalhon Lhawhir, that is Caswalhon with the long hand, the son of Eineon Yrch ap Cunedha, who slew Scrigi their king with his own hands, at Lhan y Gwydhyl, which is the Irish church at Holyhead. This Caswalhon was father to Maelgon Gwynedh, whom the Latins call Maglocunus, Prince and King of Britain.

In his time was the famous clerk and great wife man Talieffyn Ben Beirdh, that is to fay, the chiefest of the Beirdh or wisemen; for this word Bardh in Cæfar's time, fignified (as Lucan beareth witness) such as had knowledge of things to come, and so it fignificth at this day. This Maelgon had a fon called Run, in whose time the Saxons invited Gurmond into Britain from Ireland, who had come thither from Afric, who with the Saxons was the utter destruction of the Britains, and flew all that professed Christ, and was the first that drove them over Severn. This Run was father to Beli, who was father to Iago, (for so the Britains call James) who was father to Cadfan, and not Brochwel called Brecyfal (as the English chronicle faith) for this Brochwel called Yfgithroc, that is, long toothed, was chosen leader of such as met with Adelred alias Ethelbertus Rex Cantiæ, and other Angles and Saxons, whom Augustine had moved to make war against the christian Britains, and these put Brochwel twice to flight, not far from Chester, and cruelly flew 1000 priefts and monks of Bangor, with a great number of lay-brethren of the fame house, which lived by the labour of their hands, and were come bare-footed and woolward to crave mercy and peace at the Saxons hands. And here you shall understand that this was not Augustine Bishop of Hippona the great clerk, but Augustine the monk, called the apostle of England.

Then this Brochwell retired over Dee, hard by Bangor, and defended the Saxons the paffage, till Cadfan King of North Wales, Meredyth King of South Wales, and Bledrus or Bletius Prince of Cornwal, came to fuccour him, and gave the Saxons a fore battle, and flew of them the number of 1066, and put the reft to flight. After the which battle, Cadfan was chosen King of Britain, and was chief ruler within the isle; after whom his son Cadwalhon, who was father to Cadwalader, the last of the British blood, that bare the name of King of Britain, was king.

The third time that North Wales came to a woman, was to Efylht the daughter of Conan Tindaythwy, the fon of Edwal Ywrch, the fon of Cadwala-She was wife to Merfyn Frych, and mother to Rhoderic the Great, as shall be hereafter declared. By this you may understand, that North Wales hath been a great while the chiefest seat of the last kings of Britain, because it was, and is the strongest country within this ifle, full of high mountains, craggy rocks, great woods, and deep vallies, strait and dangerous places, deep and fwift rivers, as Dyfi, which springeth in the hills of Merionyth, and runneth north west through Mowthwy, and by Machynlaeth, and so to the sea at Aberdysi, dividing North and South Wales afunder. Dee, called in Welch Dourdwy, springing also on the other fide of the same hills, runneth east through Penlhyn, and the lake Tegyd,

Corwan and Lhangolhen, between Chirkeland and Bromfield, where it boweth northward toward Bangor, to the Holt, and to Chefter, and thence north west to Flint-castle, and so to the sea.

There is also Conwey, rifing likewise in Merionythshire, and dividing Caernarvon from Denbighshire, runeth under Snowden north east, by the town of Aberconwey to the fea.

Alfo Clwyd, which rifing in Denbigh Land, runneth down to Ruthyn, and plain north, not far from Denbigh to St. Asaph, and so by Ruthlan and to the fea. There be many other fair rivers, of which fome run to the sea, as Mawr at Traethmawr, and Ason y Saint at Caernarvon, and other that run to Severn, as Murnwy in Powys, and to Murnwy, Tanat; fome other to Dee, as Ceirioc betwixt the lordships of Chirke and Whittington; Alyn through Yal and Moldsdale, and Hopedale, and so to Dee, a little above Chester. And this shall suffice for the perfect description of that which in old time was called Gwynedh and Powys, and at these days the fix shires of North Wales.

Now remaineth the last kingdom of Wales, called Dynefawr, which although it was the greatest, yet was it not the best, as Giraldus witnesseth, chiefly because it was much molested with Flemings and Normans, and also that in divers parts thereof, the lords would not obey their prince, as in Gwent and in Morganwc, which was their own confusion, as shall hereafter appear. This was divided into fix parts, of the which Caredigion. Caredigion was the first, and contained four cantreds and ten comots, as cantref Penwedic had in it these comots, Geneurglyn, Perfedh and Creuthyn.

Cantref Canawl had these, Mesenyth, Anhunoc, and Pennarth.

Cantref Castelh had these comots, Mabwynion and Caerwedros.

Cantref Syrwen had these, Gwenionyth and Iscoed; and this part is at this day called in English Cardiganshire, and in Welch Swydh Aberteifi. This is a champion country without much wood, and hath been divers times overcome with Flemings and Normans, which builded many castles in it, and at the last were beaten out of them all. It hath on the east North Wales with the river Dyfi and part of Powys, upon the fouth Caermardhynshire, upon the west Pembrokeshire, with the river Teiss, and upon the north the Irish sea. In this part is the town of Cardigan upon Teiss, not far from the sea. The town of Aberystwyth upon the river Ystwyth, by the sea, and Lhanbadarn Fawr, which was a great fanctuary, and a place of religious and learned men in times past. And in this shire were a great number of cassles, as the cassle of Ystratmeyric, of Walter, of Lhanrysted, of Dynerth, of the sons of Wyneaon, of Aber-Reidol, and a great number more, with the town of Tregaron and Lhandhewibress.

The fecond part was called Dyfed, and at this day Dyfed, Pembrokeshire, and had in it eight cantreds, and twenty-three comots, which were these. Cantref Emlyn had these comots, Uwchcuch, Iscuch and

Cantref Arberth had these, Penrhyn ar Elays, Esterolef and Talacharn.

Cantref Daugledheu had these, Amgoed, Pennant

Cantref Y Coed had thefe, Lhanhayaden and Caftelh Gwys.

Cantref Penfro hath these, Coed yr has, Maenor byrr, and Penfro, Cantref Rhos hath these, Hulfforth Castelh Gwalch-mai and Ygarn.

Cantref Pubidioc hath these, Mynyw, Pencaer and Pebidioc.

Cantref Cemais hath these, Uwchnefer, Isnefer and Trefdraeth.

In this part are divers towns and havens at this day, as Pembroke, Tenby, in Welch Dynbegh-y-pyscot, Hereford-West, in Welch Hulfforth, with the fair haven of Milford, called in Welch Aberdaugledheu, St. David's or Menevia, called in Welch Mynyw, the chiefest see in all Wales. Then Fiscard called Abergwayn; and Newport, named Tresdraeth; these be along the sea coast, or not very far off. Besides these there be divers castles, as Cilgerran, Arberth, Gwys,

Lhanhayaden, Walwyn, and divers others. This part was won first by the Montgomery's earls of Shrewsbury, and after given to the Marshalls, and so to Valence, and from thence were the princes of Wales most troubled with the Normans and Flemings, who do remain and inhabit about Tenby, Pembroke and Rhos to this day, which can neither Welch nor good English as yet. Dyfed (for so will I call it hereafter) hath on the west and north the Irish sea, upon the south the Spanish sea, and upon the east Caermardhynshire, and on the north east Cardiganshire. The third part was Caermardhynshire, having sour cantreds, and sifteen comots, as cantref Finioc with the comots of Harfryn, Derfedh, and Isgeneny.

Cantref Eginoc with these Gwyr, now in Glamorgonshire, Cydweli, and Carnwilheon.

Cantref Bachan with these, Malhaen, Caeo, and Maenor Deilo.

Cantref Mawr with these, Cethineoc comot mab Elfyw, comot mab Uchdryd and Wydigada. In this shire are the towns and castles of Caermardhyn, Dynefowr, which was the prince's feat of the country, Newtown, Lhandeilo, Lhanymdhyfri, Emlyn, Swanfey, now in Glamorganshire, called in Welch Abertawy upon the fea, the castle of the sons of Uchtryd. of Lhanstephan, and others. It hath upon the west Dyfed or Pembrokeshire, on the north Cardiganshire, upon the fouth west the sea, and upon the south east Glamorgan, aud upon the east Brecknockshire. This is counted the strongest part of all South Wales, as that which which is full of high mountains, great woods, and fair rivers, especially Tywy. In this, and in the other two parts of South Walcs, were the notablest acts that this history treateth of, atchieved and done.

Morganwc.

The fourth called Morganwc, now Glamorganshire, containing four cantreds, with fifteen comots. As cantref Croneth, with these comots, Rwngneth ac Afan, Tir yr Hwndrwd, and Macnor Glynogwr.

Cantref

Cantref Pennythen with these, Meyscyn, Glynrhodny, Maenor Talafan, and Maenor Ruthyn.

Cantref Brenhinol with these, Cibowr, Senghennyth, Uwchcaeth, and Iscaeth.

Cantref Gwentlhw, which is now in Monmouthfhire, with these comots, y Rhardh Ganol, and Eithafdylgion. In this part are these towns and castles. Lhandaf the bishop's see, Caerdysse, called Caerdhys. Cowbridge, called in Welch Y bont faen, which is as much as to fay Stonebridge, Lantwyd, Caerffyli, and others, and hath divers rivers which run to the fouth fea, as Lay, Taf, Tawy, Neth, Afan, Ogwr, and Lhychwr; it hath on the fouth, the fea of Severn, which divideth it from Devonshire and Cornwall: upon the west and north west, Caermardhynshire; upon the north east, Brecknockshire; and upon the east. Monmouthshire. Of this you shall read very little, for one Iestyn being chief of the country, and having war with his neighbours, called one Robert Fitzhamon. with a great number of strangers to his succours, which after they had atchieved the enterprise, liked so well the country, that they found occasion to fall out with Iestyn, and inhabited the country themselves and their heirs to this day.

The fifth part was called Gwent and now in Monmouthshire, which had three cantreds, and ten comots, as cantref Gwent, which hath these comots, Y mynyth, Iscoed Lhefnydh, and Tref y grug.

Cantref Iscoed these, Brynbuga, Uwchcoed, y Teirtref, and Erging ac ewyas, now in Herefordshire.

Cantref Coch was the feventh cantred of Morganwc, which is now in Gloucestershire, and is called the Forest of Dean.

In this part was the antient city of Caerlheon upon Usk, where was the archbishop's see of Wales; here are also divers towns and castles, as Chepstow, Glyn, Strigul, Rhos, Tyntern upon the river Wy; there is also Newport, called y Castelh Newydh, Usse called Brynbuga, Grosmont, Raglan, White-castle, Abergefenny, and many others. This is a fair and a fertile country, of which likewise the gentlemen were never obedient to their prince, which was the cause of their own destruction. It hath on the west Glamorgan and Brecknockshires, upon the north Herefordshire, upon the east Gloucestershire, with the river Wy, and upon the south and south east Severn.

Brecheinoc.

Last of all cometh Brecheinoc, now Brecknockshire, which hath three cantreds, and eight comots. As cantref Selef which hath these comots, Selef and Trahayern.

Cantref Canol thefe, Talgarth Ystradyw and Brwynlhys or Eglwys Yail.

Cantref Mawr these, Tir Raulff, Lhywel and Cerrig-Howel. In this part is the town of Brecknock upon the meeting of Usk and Honddi, and is called Aberhonddi, and Hay called Y Gelhy, with Talgarth, Buelht, Lhangors; it hath west Caermardhynshire, with the river Tywy, upon the north Radnorshire with Wy, upon the east Herefordshire and Monmouth, upon the south Glamorgan. This for the most part is full of mountains, woods and rivers, especially Buelht. And the lords of this country called Bruces with the Mortimers, most of all others lords marches, sometimes by might, but oftener by treason, have molested and grieved the princes of Wales. This land came after the Bruces to the Bohuns earls of Hereford, and so to the Staffords dukes of Buckingham.

These fix shires being subject to the territory of Dynesawr with Radnorshire, which was belonging to Mathrasal, are now commonly called South Wales, which country is both great and large, with many fair plains and vallies for corn, high mountains and rocks sull of pasture for cattle; great and thick woods, with forests and parks for red deer and fallow; clear and deep rivers sull of fish, of which Severn is the chiefest, which with Wy and Rheidol spring out of a high mountain called Pymlhymon, in the edge of Cardiganshire, and are called commonly the three sisters. Severn runneth sull east through Cydewen by the pool, and under the castle of Shraden to Shrewsbury, from whence it turneth fouthward and runs to Bridgenorth, Bewdley, Worcester, Glocester and so to the sea by Briftol. The fecond fifter is Gwy, in English Wy, which took her journey fouth east, by Rayader Gwy to Buelt, where Irwon meeteth her, thence to Glafbury, and fo to Hereford and Monmouth, and to the fea of Severn at Chepstow; for so they call Môr Hafren the sea which severeth Wales from Somersetshire, Devonshire and Cornwal. The third fifter named Rheidol, ran northward to the fea being not far off, at Aberystywth. There be other fair rivers as Usk, which rifing in a high mountain called y Mynydh dy in the fouth part of Brecknockshire runneth to Brecknock. and fo through Monmouthshire to the town of Usk, Caerlheon and Newport, and so to the faid fouth sea. Tywy also rising not far from Wy, runneth south to Lhanymdhyfri, and thence south west by Lhandeilo and Dynefawr to Abergwily and Caermardhyn, and fo by Lhanstephan to the sea.

Teifi likewise which riseth in the edge of Caermardhynshire, and runneth north west by Emlyn, Cilgerran, Cardigan, and so to the north sea. In Teisi above all the rivers in Wales, were in Giraldus's time a great number of caftors, which may be englished kárwe bevers, and are called in Welch afanc, which name Greek, Fiberers, and are called in Welch afanc, which name Greek, Fionly remaineth in Wales at this day, but what it is Peaver only remaineth in Wales at this day, but what it is Peaver an otter, but that it is bigger, all hairy faving the tail, Briotin, which is like a fish tail, as broad as a man's hand. This in Itiner, beast useth as well the water as the land, and hath very sharp teeth, and biteth cruelly, till he perceives the bones crack, his stones be of great efficacy in physic. He that will learn what strong nests they make, which Giraldus calleth castles, which they build upon the face of the water with great boughs which they cut with their teeth, and how some lie upon their backs, holding the wood with the fore feet, which the other draweth with a cross stick, the which he holdeth in his

of Wales. There be besides these a great number of rivers, of which some run to the fouth, and some to the west and north sea, as Tywy in Glamorganshire. Taf also in Caermardhynshire, which runneth to Cledheu, two rivers either called Cledheu, which do give Milford the name of Aberdaugledheu in Pembrokeshire, Arth, Aeron, and Ystwyth, in Cardigan. There be also divers lordships which be added to other shires, and were taken heretofore for parts of Wales, and in most part of them at this day the Welch language is spoken, as Oswestry, Knocking, Whittington, Elfmer, Masbroke, Chirbury, Caurs, Clun, which are now in Shropshire, Ewyas-Lacy, Ewyas-Haroald, Clifford Winforton, Yardley, Huntingdon, Whitney, Loghardneys in Herefordshire. Also this country of South Wales as all the rest of Britain, was first inhabited by the Britains, which remain there to this day, faving that in divers places, especially along the sea shore, they have been mingled with Saxons, Normans (which the Welch history calleth Frenchmen) and Flemings; fo that the princes of Wales, fince the conquest of the Normans, could never keep quiet posfession thereof, but what for strangers, and what for difloyalty of their own people, vexation and war, were for the most part compelled to keep themselves in Caermardhynshire.

The winning of the Lordship of Glamorgan or Morgannwc out of the Welshmen's Hands, and first of the Description of the same Lordship.

Reprinted from the Edition of 1584.

IN primis, the faid lordship in length from Rymny bridge on the east side, to Pwib Conan on the west side, is 27 miles. The breadth thereof from the haven of Aburthaw alias Aberdaon, on the south side, to the confines of Bredinockshire, above Morleys castle, is 22 miles.

Item the fame lordship, being a lordship marcher, or a lordship royal, and holden of no other lordship, the lords ever fince the winning of the same, owing their obedience only to the crown, have used therein jura regalia: that is, the trial of all actions, as well real as personal, with pleas of the crown, and authority to pardon all offences, treason only excepted.

Item there were II lordships, to wit, Sengbennyth, Myskyn, Ruthin, Lhanblethian, Tir Iarlh, Glyn Rothney, Auan, Neth, Coyty, Talauan and Lhantuit, alias, Bouiarton, that were members of the said lordship of Clamorgan. In every of the members were the like jura regalia used in all things, saving that if any wrong judgement were given in any of the courts of the said members, it should be reversed by a writ of salfe judgement in the county court of Glamorgan, as superior court to the said members. Also all matters of conscience happening in debate in any of the said members, should be heard and determined in the chancery of Glamorgan, before the chancellor thereof.

Item, the body of the faid lordship of Glamorgan was (before the alteration of the laws in Wales) a county of itself, wherein the lord had two castles and three market towns, to wit, the castle and town of Kynsigs, alias Kesnsigen, in the west part thereof, and Cerebridge town, alias Pont vaen, in the middest. And the town and castle of Cardyss, or Caer-Dbydb, in the east part, in which castle of Cardyss, the lord did most inhabit; and therein he had his Chancery and Exchequer, and a fair court house, wherein the county court was monthly kept on the Monday for all the suiters of the shrievalty, that is, of the body of the said lordship itself, without the said members.

Item, within the faid fhrievalty, or body of the faid lordship, were 18 castles, and 36 knight's fees and an half, that held of the said lordship of Glamorgan by knights service, besides a great number of freeholders.

Item, in eight of the faid members were ten castles and four borough towns.

Item, the annual revenues of the faid lordship, with Thevalue of the members, was 1000 marks, whereof was allowed the feniory, in fees 400 marks; of the which members aforesaid, before the purchase John Gamage, Efg; occupieth one at this day, descendthereof. ed unto him from the Turberuiles his ancestors, that is to wit, the lordship of Coytie: and the heir of John Baffet enjoyeth another, to wit, the lordship of Talauan, by purchase from King Edward the fixth. other nine members, with four of the aforesaid knights fees, and all the castles, market towns, and borough towns, with the demesses of the same; and all the lands that were in the lords hands, parcel of the faid lordship and members, the earl of Penbroke hath pur-The value of chased. # The Manner of the winning of the faid Lordship.

N the year of our Lord 1091, and in the fourth year of the reign of King William Rufus, one Ieftyn the fon of Gungant, being lord of the faid lord-thip of Glamorgan, Rees ap Theodoc, prince of South Wales, Wales, that is, of Caermarthyneshire and Cardiganshire, made war upon him. Whereupon the faid leftyn, understanding himself unable to withstand the said Rees without some aid otherwise, sent one Eneon, a gentleman of his, to England, to one Robertus Fitzhamon. a worthy man, and knight of the privy chamber with the faid king, to retain him for his fuccour. The which Robert, being defirous to exercise himself in the feats of war, agreed foon with him thereto for a falary to him granted for the fame. Whereupon the faid Robert Fitzhamon retained to his fervice for the faid journey, twelve knights, and a competent number of foldiers, and went into Wales, and joining there with the power of the faid Iestyn, fought with the faid Rees ap Tewdor and killed him, and one Conan his fon. After which victory, the faid Robert Fitzbamon, minding to return home again with his company, demanded his falary to him due of the faid Ieflyn, according to the covenants and promises agreed upon between him and the aforesaid Eneon, on the behalf of the faid Iestyn his master. The which to perform in all points, the faid Iestyn denied; and thereupon they fell out, so that it came to be tried by battle. And forfornuch as the faid Eneon faw his master go from divers articles and promifes that he had willed him to conclude with the faid Robert Fitzhamon, on his behalf, he forfook his mafter, and took part, he and his friends, with the faid Robert Fitzhamon. In the which conflict, the faid Iestyn with a great number of his men were flain, whereby the faid Robert Fitzbamon won the peaceable possession of the whole lordship of Glamorgan, with the members, of the which he gave certain castles and manors, in reward of service, to the faid twelve knights, and to other his gentlemen.

Sum. Four Lordships Members, and Thirteen Knights Fees.

TEM, he gave to the aforefaid Eneon that took his part, the lordship of Senghennyth, being another of the faid members.

Item,

Item, he gave the castle and lordship of Auan, ano-14 ther of the faid members, to Caradoc Fitz Iestyn, the eldest son of the said Iestyn.

Item, he gave the lordship of Rutbyn, another of 15 the faid members, to another fon of the faid Iestyn.

Item, the rest of the foresaid knights fees, being 16 twenty-two and an half, he distributed part to gentlemen that ferved him, and part to the Wellhmen, right owners of the fame.

The Portion that the Lord kept for himfelf and his Heirs.

THE castle of Cardyff and Kenfigg, with the fore-faid three market towns of Cardyff, Kenfigg, and Cowbrige, and the shrievalty, being the body of the faid lordship of Glamorgan, and all the demesnes of the same, with the rest of the said members; to wit, Miskyn, Glynrothney, Tyr Iarl, and Boviarton, alias Lentwit: and the chief feniory of the whole, the Said Robert Fitzhamon kept to himself. And in the faid lordship of Boviarton, he had a large grange or house of husbandry, with lands to the same belonging, that ferved him for the provision of corn to his house. He dwelt himself most in the said castle or town of Cardyff, being a fair haven town. And because he would have the aforesaid twelve knights and their heirs give attendance upon him every county day (which was always kept by the sheriff in the utter ward of the faid castle, on the Monday monthly as is before said) he gave every one of them a lodging within the faid utter ward, the which their heirs, or those that purchased the same of their heirs, do enjoy at this day.

Also the morrow after the county day, being the Tuesday, the lord's chancellor fat always in the Chancery there, for the determining of matters of conscience in strife, happening as well in the said shrievalty as in the members; the which day also, the said knights used to give attendance upon the lord; and the Wednesday every man drew homeward, and then began the courts of the members to be kept in order, one after another.

The Pedigree of Robert Fitzhamon, and of his Heirs, Lords of Glamorgan.

THE faid Robert Fitzbannon, was fon to Hamon, a great lord, and kinsiman of William firm that he the Conqueror, who came into the realm with him. This Robert (as is before said) was knight of the Normandy. privy chamber with King William Rusus; who (as it appeareth in the Chronicles) dreamed the night before the king was killed, that he saw the king torn in pieces by wolves; and therefore, by his persuasilib.2, p. 21. on, he willed the king to forbear to go abroad that forenoon. But the king, when he had dined, there page 22. was no man able to stay him, but that he would ride forth a hunting into the new forest, where he was stain by Walter Tyrrell, by the glancing of his arrow shooting at a red deer.

2 Mawd, the only daughter and heiress of the said Robert, was married to Robert, Earl of Glocester, base son to King Henry the first.

3 William, Earl of Glocester, son to the said Robert and Mawd, died without issue male, leaving behind him three daughters; of the which, Isabel, the eldest, was married to King John, then Earl of Oxenford and Lancaster (as some chronicles do declare) who so soon as he was made king was divorced from her. And then she was married to Geffrey Mandevile, Earl of Essex, and died without issue, as far as I can find.

4 The second daughter named Amicia, was married to Sir Gilbart de Clare, then Earl of Clare, by whom he had the earldom of Glocester. And Mabile, the third daughter was married to the Earl of Eureux.

he

5 Sir Gilbart de Clare, son to the said Gilbart, was the fourth Earl of Glocester.

6 Sir Richard de Clare's son was the fifth earl.

7 Sir Gilbart's fon was the fixth earl.

8 Sir Gilbart's fon, who married Jane de Acres, daughter to King Edward I. was the seventh earl.

Sir Gilbart de Clare their fon was the eighth earl, and he was slain by the Scots in King Edward the Second's time; and then the earldom fell between his three sisters. Of the which Elianor the eldest was married to Hugh Spenser the son, in her right Earl of Glocester. Margaret the second was married to Peires Gaueston, and after to the Lord Awdeley. Elizabeth the third was married first to William Lord Burgh, Earl of Ulster, and after to Ralph Roch, Baron of Armoy, in Ireland; she was married the third time to Theobald I. Verdoun, and lastly to Sir Roger Damory, and had issue by every one of them.

faid lordship of Glamorgan.

- Sir Hugh Lord Spencer their fon enjoyed the fame, and died without iffue.
- 12 Edward Lord Spencer; fon to Edward, brother to the faid Hugh, succeeded the faid Hugh therein.

14 Richard Lord Spencer, his fon, succeeded him, and died in ward.

15. Ifabell, fifter to Richard, fucceeded him, and married with Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Worcefter, and Lord Burgavenny, who had iffue by her a daughter only, and died. The which daughter was married to Edward, the fon of Dawraby, Ralph Neuel, Earl of Westmoreland. And after the death of the said Earl of Worcester, the said Isabell married married with Richard Beauchamp, Earl of War-

16 Henry Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and after Duke of Warwick, their fon died without iffue.

Anne his fifter of whole blood fucceeded him, and married with Richard Neuel, after Earl of Salifburie, and in her right Earl of Warwick; and had iffue two daughters, Marie, married to the Duke Clarence, and Anne, married first to Prince Edward, slain at Teuxburie, and after his death with Richard, Duke of Glocester, who was afterward King of England.

18 The faid Anne and King Richard (being then Duke of Glocester) had the said lordship given unto them by the said Anne, Countess of Warwick, her mother.

19 King Henry the Seventh enjoyed the fame after the death of King Richard.

20 Iasper, Duke of Bedford, enjoyed the same by the gift of King Henry the Seventh, and died without iffue; and by reason thereof it remained to the king again.

21 King Henry the Eighth enjoyed the same after his

22 King Edward the Sixth fucceeded him therein, and fold almost all the lands thereof.

23 Queen Mary fucceeded him in the feniory.

24 Queen Elizabeth our most dread sovereign that now is, doth succeed her in the same seniory, and hath sold the lordship of Neth from it; so that now there remain no more lands appertaining to the seniory, but the moity of the manor of Deinaspowys only.

The Pedigree of Londres, Lord of Ogmere, one of the faid Twelve.

manor of Ogmore (as is before faid) won afterwards the lordships of Kydwelbey and Carnewilbion, in Caermarthenshire, from the Welshmen; and gave to Sir Arnold Butler, his servant, the castle and manor of Dunreeven, in the lordship of Ogmore aforesaid. The which ever since hath continued in the heirs male of the said Arnold Butler, until within these few years that it fell to Walter Vaghan, sister's son to Arnold Butler, the last of the Butlers that was owner thereof.

3 William de Londres succeeded his father Simon, and had issue one son.

4 Moris de Londres, his fon, succeeded him, and had

5 The faid daughter married with one Seward, a man of great possessions.

6 They had iffue a daughter only, married to Henrie, Earl of Lancaster, brother to Thomas, Earl of Lancaster.

7 Henrie their fon, made afterwards Duke of Lancafter, did fucceed them; and so the said three lordships, Ogmore, Kydwelbey, and Carnewilbion, became parcels of the Duchy of Lancaster ever after.

The Pedigree of Greenefeeld.

SIR Richard Greenefeeld before faid (to whom the lordship of Neth was given in reward) was lord of the castle and manor of Bydysord, in Devonshire, at the time he came into Wales with the said Robert Fitzhamon, and sounded an abby of white monks in Neth, and gave the whole lordship to the maintenance of the same, and then returned back again to Bydysord, whereas the issue male of his body doth yet remain, and enjoyeth the same.

Gilbert de Humfreuile, his Pedigree.

SIR Gilbert Humfreuile aforesaid, to whom the castle and manor of Penmarke was given, and his issue male, enjoyed the same till the said King Edward the Third's time; and then the inheritance of the said castle and manor descended to Sir John S. John, of Fonmon, Knt. to whom the forenamed Lord S. John, of Bledso, is sole heir.

Roger de Berkerolles, Knt. his Pedigree.

SIR Roger Berkerolles aforesaid knight, to whom the manor of East Orchard was given; and his issue male, enjoyed the same till the thirteenth year of Henric the Fouth; that Sir Laurence Berkerolles, Knt. died, whom Sir Edward Stradling, Knt. as sole heir did succeed, being son to Sir William Stradling, Knt. son to Sir Edward Stradling, Knt. and Wenlbian sole sister and heir to the said Sir Laurence, of whom Edward Stradling, Knt. (that now is) is lineally descended.

Reginald de Sully, Knt. his Pedigree.

SIR Reginald de Sully, to whom the cassle and manor of Sully was given, and his issue male, enjoyed the same until about King Edward the First's time. And then it fell to a daughter married to Sir Morgan de Avan, Lord of the lordship of Avan above named; whose son, Sir John de Avan, had but one daughter, of whom Sir George Blunt, of Shropshire, is lineally descended as sole heir, whose ancestor gave the said lordship of Avan, and the cassle and manor of Sully to the Lord Spencer, in exchange for other lands in England.

Peter le Score, Knt. his Pedigree.

SIR Peter le Soore, Knt. to whom was given the castle and manor of Peter's Towne, and his issue male, enjoyed the same until King Henry the Fourth's time, and then died without issue, and his inheritance fell between divers.

John le Fleming, Knt. his Pedigree.

SIR John le Fleming, Knt. to whom the castle and manor of S. George was given, and his issue male, enjoyed the same until King Henry the Fourth's time; and then it fell to Edmond Malesant, who had married a daughter to the last Fleming. And in King Henry the Seventh's time the Malesants issue by Flemings daughter sailed; and then it fell to John Butler, of Dunreeven above named, Esq. and after the death of him and of Arnold his son, both the inheritances of Fleming and Butler fell to Walter Vaghan, of Brodemard, in the county of Heresord, Esq. now living, sister's son to the said Arnold Butler.

Oliver de S. John, Knt. his Pedigree.

SIR Oliver S. John, Knt. to whom the castle and manor of Fonmon was given, and his heirs male have ever fince enjoyed the fame, to whom the above named Lord S. John, of Bledso, that now is, is sole heir; whose ancestors from the winning of the said lordship or Glamorgan out of the Welshmens hands, have continually dwelt at Fonmon aforesaid, until the latter time of King Edward the Fourth. That John S. John, Efg, had the said lordship of Bledso, and many other possessions besides, by the death of dame Margaret Beauchampe, his mother, who was also mother to Margaret, Duchess of Somerset, mother to King Henry the Seventh. Since which time the faid John S. John, and Sir John S. John, Knt. father to my lord that now is, have always dwelt in Bledso, but they do keep their lands in Wales still in their hands.

William le Esterling, alias Stradling, his Pedigree.

SIR William Esterling, Knt. to whom the castle and manor of S. Donat's was given.

2 Sir John le Esterling, Knt. his fon, succeeded him.

3 Sir Moris le Esterling, Knt. his son, succeeded him.

4 Sir Robert le Esterling, Knt. (most commonly called Stradling by shortness of speech and change of some letters) succeeded him.

5 Sir Gilbert Stradling, Knt. his fon, fucceeded him. 6 Sir William Stradling, Knt. his fon, fucceeded him.

7 Sir John Stradling, Knt. his fon, fucceeded him. It doth not appear in what flock or firname any of these seven knights above named did marry; but the names of the wives of William the first, Robert, and John the second, were Hawisia, Mathilda, and Cicilia.

8 Sir Peter Stradling, Knt. his fon, succeeded him, who in the beginning of King Edward the First's time and reign married Iulian, sole daughter and heir of Thomas Hawey, by whom he had three manors, Hawey and Comhawey, in Samersetshire, yet remaining to his heirs, and Compton Hawey, in Dorcetshire, sold of late years.

9 Sir Edward Stradling, Knt. their fon, fucceeded them, and he quartered the Haweys' arms with his, and married with Elianor, daughter and heir to Gilbert Strangbow, a younger brother, whose wife was daughter and heir to Richard Garnon, and had by her two manors in Oxefordsbire.

him, and married with Wenlbian, daughter to Roger Berkrolles, Knt. and fole fifter and heir to Sir Laurence Berkrolles, Knt. as it happened afterward.

II Sir William Stradling, Knt. his son, married with Isabel, daughter and heir to John S. Barbe, of Somersetshire; but he had no lands by her, for it was entailed entailed to the heirs male. This Sir William, in King Richard the Second's time, went a pilgrimage to Ierusalem, and received there also the orders of knighthood of the sepulchre of Christ.

12 Sir Edward Stradling, Knt. his fon, succeeded him, who, because he was sole heir general to the faid S. Barbe, did quarter S. Barbe's arms with his. To whom also (in the thirteenth year of King Henry the Fourth) fell the whole inheritance of the Berkerolles, and the right of the fourth part of Turberuile's inheritance, Lord of Coyty aforesaid; the which, for lack of iffue male of the faid Berkerolles, remained to Gamage and to his heirs male by the especial entail aforesaid. The which Sir Edward did quarter not only the faid Berkerolles' arms with his, but also the Turberuiles and Iestynes arms; of whom the Turberuiles had in marriage one of the inheritors, as is before faid; because the faid Sir Edward was one of the four heirs general to Sir Richard Turberuile, to wit, fon to Sir William Stradling, fon to Wenlbian, fifter and heir to the faid Laurence Berkerolles, and daughter to Catharine, eldest fister, and one of the four heirs general to the aforefaid Sir Richard Turberuile.

The faid Sir Edward married with Jane, daughter to Henry Beauford, afterwards Cardinal, begotten (before he was prieft) upon Alice, one of the daughters of Richard, Earl of Arundell; and in the beginning of King Henry the Seventh's reign, he went likewise on pilgrimage unto Ierusalem, as his father did, and received the order of the sepulchre

there.

This Sir Edward had to his brother Sir John Stradling, Knt. who married with the heir of Dauncy, in Wiltsbire, and had iffue Sir Edmond, who had iffue John and Edmond. John had iffue Anne, Lady Davers, of whom the Davers, Hugerfordes, Fynes, and Leuet, and a great progeny of them are descended; and of the said Edmond correcth Carnysoyes, of Cornewal.

The

The faid Edward had another brother called William, of whom Stradling of Ruthyn and others are descended; the same William had a daughter named Wenlbian, who, by the Earl of Ryuers, had a daughter, married to Sir Robert Poynes, of whom cometh all the Poynes, the Newtons, Perots, and others.

13 Sir Harrie Stradling, Knt. his fon, succeeded him, and married with Elizabeth, sister of whole blood to Sir William Herbert, Knt. Earl of Penbrooke, and had iffue by her one son and two daughters; one of them was married to Myles ap Harry, of whom Mrs. Blanch ap Harrie and her brethren and uncles are descended; the other daughter was married to Flening, of Monton, in Wales.

This Sir Harrie, in the fixteenth year of King Edward the Fourth, went in like manner on pilgrimage to Ierusalem, and received the order of the sepulchre there, as his father and grandsather did, and died in the Isle of Cypres in his coming home; whose book is to be seen as yet, with a letter that his man brought from him to his lady and wife. The saying is, that divers of his said ancestors made the like pilgrimage, but there remaineth no memory in writing but of these three.

This Sir Harrie, failing from his house in Somerfetshire to his house in Wales, was taken prisoner by a Brytaine pirate, named Colyn Dolphyn, whose redemption and charges stood him in 2000 marks; for the payment whereof he was driven to sell the castle and manor of Besselek and Sutton, in Mon-mouthshire, and the manors in Oxfordshire.

14 Thomas Stradling, Esq. his son, succeeded him, and married Ienet, daughter to Thomas Matthew, of Rayder, Esq. and had issue by her two sons, Edward and Harrie, and one daughter named Jane, and died before he was twenty-six years of age. After whose death, his wife married with Sir Rice ap Thomas, Knight of the Garter. Harrie married with the daughter and heir of Thomas Iubb, learned in the law, and had issue by her Francis Stradling, Stradling, of S. George, of Bristow, yet living Iane was married to Sir William Gruffyth, of North Wales, Knt. and had iffue by her three fons, Edward, Sir Rice Gruffyth, Knt. and John, and seven daughters. The eldest married to Stanley, of Hongbton, the second to Sir Richard Buckley, Knt. the third to Lewys, the fourth to Moston, the fifth to Conwey, the fixth to Williams, the seventh to Pers Motton, and after to Simon Theloal, Efg. whose wife at this time she is; the eighth to Pbilips. Of which daughters there be a wonderful number descended. Edward married Jane, daughter to Sir John Puleston, Knt. and had iffue by her three daughters; Jane married to William Herbert, of S. Julian; Catharine married to William Herbert, of Swanley, and another daughter married to Sir Nicholas Bagnoll, Knt.

15 Sir Edward Stradling, Knt. fucceeded his father, and married with Elizabeth, one of the three daughters of Sir Thomas Arundell, of Lanbeyron, in Cornewall, Knt. The other two were married to Speke and S. Lowe, and had iffue four fons; Thomas, Robert, Edward, and John. Robert married Watkyn Lodber's daughter, and by her many children; Edward married with the daughter and heir of Robert Baglan, of Lantwit, and hath also divers children; and John is a priest. Also the faid Sir Edward had two daughters; Jane married to Alexander Popham, of Somersetshire, of whom is a great number descended; and Catharine married to Sir Thomas Palmer, of Suffex, who hath a son named William.

16 Sir Thomas Stradling, Knt. his fon, succeeded him, and married Catharine, the eldest daughter to Sir Thomas Gamage, of Coyty, Knt. and to dame Margaret his wife, daughter to Sir John S. John, of Bledfo, Knt. by whom he hath living yet two fons, Edward and Dauid; and five daughters, Elizabeth, Damafyn, Iane, Toice, and Wenlbian.

17 Sir Edward Stradling, Knt. that now is, married Agnes, second daughter to Sir Edward Gage, of Susser, Knt. and as yet in the year 1572 hath no issue.

Memorandum, that of the heirs male of the aforefaid twelve knights that came with Sir Robert Fitzbamon to the winning of Glamorgan, the lordship aforesaid, there is at this day but the Stradling alive, that dwelleth in Wales, and enjoyeth the portion given in reward to his ancestors.

There be yet of the younger brothers of the Turberuiles and Flemings.

Greenefeeld and Syward do yet remain, but they dwell in England, and have done away their lands in Wales.

The Lord S. John, of Bledso (although he keepeth his ancient inheritance in Wales) yet he dwelleth in Eugland.

Thus far the copy of the winning of Glamorgan, as I received the same at the hands of Mrs. Blanch Parrie, penned by Sir Edward Stradling, Knt.

HISTORY

WALES.

WHEN the Roman empire, under Valentinian, the younger, began to decline, and became fenfibly unable to repress the perpetual incursions of the Goths, Huns, Vandals; and other barbarous invaders; it was found necessary to abandon the remotest Parts of that unweildly body, and to recal the Roman forces that defended them, the better to secure the inward, and the provinces most exposed to the depredations of the Barbarians. And in this exigency of the Roman affairs, Britain, as lying far remote from the heart of the empire, was deprived of the Roman garrisons; which, being transported into Gaul upon more urgent occasions; left it naked and exposed to the inveterate cruelty of the Scots and Picts: for no fooner had they understood of the Romans departure out of Britain; and that the Britains were to expect no further help from the empire; but they descend in greater number than formerly, and with greater courage and expectation, being now rid of the fear they entertained of the Roman legions, who always used to hinder their progress, and to prevent their incursions into the Roman province. The Britains perceiving their antient and implacable enemies to fall upon them, and finding themselves far too weak to repel their endless devastations: with a lamentable narrative of their own Mileries, and the cruel oppressions of their enemies, they fent over to Gaul, imploring aid of Ætius præfect of that province; who, being moved with the deplorable condition of that province, dispatched over a legion under the command of Gallio, which unexpectedly furprifing the Picts and Scots, forced them, with great loss and destruction, to retire over the seas or friths to their own habitations. Then helping them to build a wall of stone cross the land, for a bulwark against any future irruptions; the Romans, at their departure, told them, they could not any more undertake fuch dangerous expeditions for their defence. and therefore admonished them to take arms, and like Men vindicate their country, their wives, children and liberties from the injuries or their barbarous enemies.

But as foon as the Roman legion was transported into Gaul, back return the Picts and Scots; and having by a desperate assault passed the wall, pursued the Britains with a more dreadful and bloody flaughter than formerly. The Britains, perceiving their condition most desperate, once more send their miserable complaints to Ætius in these tragical words: "To Ætius thrice conful the groans of the Britains: the Barbarians drive us to the sea, and the sea drives us back to them; and so, distracted betwixt two deaths, we are either drowned. or perish by the sword." But they solicit to no purpose; the Romans having already bid absolutely farewel to Britain, and the empire being cruelly oppressed by the Goths, and other barbarous nations, was not in a condition possible to assist them. The Britains therefore finding themselves absolutely forsaken by the Romans, and conceiving it utterly impracticable to drive away the barbarians by their own strength; saw it urgently necessary to call in the aid of some foreign nation, whose labour in repelling their enemies should be gratefully and fatisfactorily rewarded.

The reason that the British nation was at this time fo weak and impotent, and so manifestly unable to withstand these barbarous enemies, who were far inferior as to extent of country, and probably in number of people, may in great measure be attributed to the ease and quietness the Britains enjoyed under the Roman government. For whilft the Roman legions continued in Britain, they ever undertook the fecurity and prefervation of it; fo that the Britains heretofore were little concerned at the incursions of the Scots and Picts, depending wholly upon the strength and valour of the Romans, infomuch, that within a while, they fell into a fit of luxury and effeminacy, and quickly forgot that martial prowefs, and military conduct which their ancestors so famously excelled in. For after their entire subjection to the Roman empire, they had little or no opportunity to experience their valour excepting in some home bred commotions, excited by the aspiring ambition of some male-contented general, which were quickly composed and reduced to nothing. And after the Scots and Picts grew formidable, and durst venture to make incursions into the Roman province; the Britains were the least concerned in opposing them, leaving that to the care and vigilancy of the Roman garrisons. And this easiness and supinity of the Britains, may not be untruly attributed to the policy of the Roman constitution: for when the Britains were brought subject to the empire, the first thing the Romans effected towards the confirmation of their obedience, was to take the fword out of their hands. They were fensible how bold and valorous the Britains naturally were, how unlike to fubmit their necks to a foreign yoke, and therefore they found it impracticable to obtain a quiet possession of this province, as long as the Britains had power and opportunity to oppose them. This course they found very effectual, and when they had once lulied them afleep, they were not over folicitous to roufe and awaken them.

The Britains also might possibly be too much taken with this sedentary and unactive life; and as long as they lived secure under the protection of the Roman empire, they little seared their country would become a prey to any barbarous nation. No one would have B 2 inagined

THE HISTORY OF WALES.

imagined that that glorious empire would be fo foor crushed to pieces, which could not otherwise be effected. than by the insupportable pressure of its own weight. The apprehension of the greatness and strength of the Romans, made the Britains probably less folicitous of enabling themselves to defend their country, not thinking they would ever forfake and relinquish the province of Britain. But to their forrow they experienced the contrary, the affairs of the empire elsewhere requiring the help of the British legions, so that they were left exposed to the cruelties of the northern invaders, having not as yet recovered any power or conduct to oppose them. For had not the Scots and Picts come on so forcibly at first, but had given time to the Britains to shake off that lethargy they had for many years been buried in, and to renew their ancient difcipline and vigour, there had been no need of calling in the Saxons, feeing they would in all probability been able to maintain their ground against any oppofition, and likely had been in possession of their whole country to this time. But next to the decree of heaven, the ruin of the British nation must be attributed to its too much luxury and effeminacy, and to the univerfal lapse of the nobility and people, into an averfion of all military action and martial discipline. For though a continued peace be in itself desirable, yet oftentimes nothing tends more to the future ruin and downfal of a nation. For peace begets in men generally a habit of loofeness and debauchery, is the occafion of many notorious extravagancies and vicious practifes, which weakens their hands, and cools their courage and greatness of mind, so that in case of any open danger, they are uncapable to defend their country. and unfit to oppose the common enemy. Scarce any kingdom or nation was subverted, but the ruin of it was ushered in by these means; witness the Assyrian under Sardnapalus, the Persian under Darios, and the Egyptian under Cleopatra; fo that it was most prudently urged by a Roman fenator, that Carthage might not be demolished; lest that for want of an enemy abroad, the valour of the Romans might degenerate, and their conduct conduct be forgotten. Had the Britains had the fortune to be continually in action, and not exchanged their courage and discipline for ease and laziness, they had no reason to dread the incursions of the Scots and Picts, nor any need of the Aid and Assistance of a foreign Nation; but the condition of their affairs then required it, and help must be had, or else their country must unavoidable become a prey to those northern invaders.

To prevent therefore and repel their violence, King Vortigern held a council of his great men and nobles, where it was concluded to be most advantageous to the Britains, to invite the Saxons out of Germany to their aid, who in all probability would gladly embrace the opportunity, by reason that their own country was grown too scanty for their superfluous numbers, This message of the Britains, however originally delivered, is by an antient Saxon Writer repeated in this manner: " Most noble Saxons, the miserable Britains, shattered and quite worn out by the frequent incursions of their enemies, upon the news of your many signal victories, have fent us to you, humbly requesting that you would affift them at this juncture, A land large and spacious, abounding with all manner of necessaries, they give up entirely to your disposal. Hitherto we have lived happily under the government and protection of the Romans: Next to the Romans we know none of greater valour than yourselves, and therefore in your arms do now feek refuge. Let but that courage and those arms make us conquerors, and we shall refuse no service you shall please to impose." To this message the Saxons returned this short answer: " Assure yourfelves, the Saxons will be true friends to the Britains, and as fuch, shall be always ready both to relieve their necessities, and to advance their interest."

The Saxons being thus happily courted to what themselves had a thousand times wished for, arrived foon after in Britain, in three gallies, called in their own language Kiules, under the conduct of two brethren Hengist and Horsa. Being honourably received by the king, and affectionately treated by the people, their faith was given of both fides; the Saxons stipulating to defend the Britains country, and the Britains to give the Saxons a farisfactory reward for all the pains and dangers they should undergo upon their account. At first the Saxons shewed themselves very diligent in their employment, and successfully repelled the Scots and Picts; who being probably ignorant of the landing of the Saxons, and fearing no opposition, boldly advanced to the heart of the country. But when the Saxons became better acquainted with the island, and happily discovered the weakness and inability of the Britains; under pretence that their pay was not answerable to their service and deserts, they quarelled with the Britains, and instead of supporting them according to oath, entered into a league with their enemies the Scots. Moreover, Hengist perceiving with whom he had to do, fent over to acquaint his countrymen with the beauty and fertility of the island, the infirmity and effeminacy of the inhabitants; inviting them to be sharers of his future success and expectations. To his invitation they readily comply, and failing over in great numbers, they thought to take possession of that country, which fortune promised should be their own: but they must fight for it first; the Britains being resolved to the last to defend themfelves and their country against these treacherous practices of the Saxons; and if possible, to drive them to their primitive habitations. For when the Britains became fensible of the undermining aim of the Saxons, how they fecretly endeavoured the total extirpation of the British nation, they presently betook themselves to their swords, and in a short time became fignally famous for their valour and conduct. This the Saxons afterwards grievously felt, though the total recovery of Britain proved impracticable for want of power; the Saxons having by massacres and other treacherous means, most un-mercifully lessened the force and number of the Britains. King Vortigern loved his ease too well to observe their practices; and besides, became so foolishly enamoured with the daughter of Hengist, which purposely, posely was laid to intrap him, that the Saxon upon the strength of their marriage began to carve for himfelf, and during Vortigern's reign, laid fo firm a foundation for the Saxon conquest, that the fucceeding British kings, though famously valiant, could never undermine it. This Scottishness of his father, young Vortimer could not at length endure; to fee himfelf and his country fo openly and shamefully imposed upon by ftrangers; and therefore he refolved to take the British government upon himself, and to endeavour the universal expulsion of the Saxons. With him the British nobility willingly join, and after several famous victories over the Saxons, he was unhappily poifoned by a Saxon lady. After him the Britains bravely defended themselves against the prevailing greatness of the Saxons, under these valiant princes, Aurelius Ambrofius, Uter Pendragon, Arthur, Constantine II. Aurelius Conanus, Vortiper, and Maelgon. To him fucceeded Careticus; in whose time the Saxons aspiring to a total conquest of Britain, invited over one Gur-mundus, a Norwegian pirate, who had lately fignalized himself in Ireland, and obtained a conquest over that kingdom. Him they employ to march against Careticus, who being overcome and vanquished by him, the Britains were forced, some to retire beyond the rivers Severn and Dee, some to Cornwal, and the rest to Little Britain in France. The British affairs were now brought very low, and their government reduced within a very narrow compass; so that the title of the Kings of Britain, can be but superficially attributed to the fucceeding princes, Cadwan, Cadwallan, and Cadwalader,

B 3 the

CADWALADER.

CADWALADER, furnamed Bhendiged, or the Bleffed, was the last of British race, that enjoyed the title of King of Britain; after him, the Welch, who were the most numerous remains of the Britains, difdaining to own any subjection to the oppressing Saxons, fet up a new government among themselves, and altered the slile of British kings to that of princes of Wales. But whilst Cadwalader ruled in Britain. a very severe famine, attended with a raging pesti-Ience, which affuredly fprung from the continued war, which was fo eagerly carried on betwixt the Britains and Saxons, happened in the island, which occasioned a most lamentable mortality among his fubjects; infomuch that he was compelled, together with a great number of his nobility and others, to retire for refuge to his cousin Alan, King of Lhydaw, or Little Britain in France. There he was fure to meet with all civility fuitable to his quality and condias well, because of his own near relation and confanguinity to Alan, as upon the account their fubjects were originally one and the fame people: for the Britains of France, about the year of Christ 384, went over out of this island under the command of Conan, Lord of Meriadoc, to the aid of Maximus the tyrant, against the emperor Gratianus. For this fervice Maximus granted to Conan and his followers the country of Armorica, where the Britains having driven out the former inhabitants, feated themfelves, and erected a kingdom, which lasted for many years under feveral kings, whose names and succession are as follows:

Alan II. then reigned in Little Britain, when Cadwalader was forced to forfake his own dominions, and to retire beyond the seas. He was descended from Rune the fon of Mailgon Gwyneth, King of Great Britain, by a daughter married to Howel the second, King of Little Britain. This kingdom remained firm, till Salomon III. who was treacherously stain by his own fubjects; upon which unlucky accident, the kingdom was converted to an earldom, whereof one Alan was the first, a valiant and warlike prince, who stoutly refisted the Normans, and frequently vanguished and overcame them.

But after that Cadwalader had continued fome time with Alan, the plague being abated in Britain he purposed to return, and if possible, to recover that part of his kingdom which the Saxons were now in poffession of. He received frequent intelligence of their number and increase, how they fairly bid for the conquest of that country, which had been governed by British kings for the space of 1827 years. This troubled him exceedingly, and though he had little hopes of prevailing by the strength and number of his forces, yet he made the best preparation that the opportunity would permit, and dispatched his fleet for the transportation of his army, which confifted confifted partly of his own subjects, and partly of fuch fuccours as he received from Alan. Whilft he vigorously prosecuted this design, and was ready to strike fail for Britain; his voyage was prevented by a message from heaven; which counseled him to lay aside the thoughts of recovering his kingdom, because it was already decreed above, that the Britains should no longer enjoy the government of Britain, till the prophely of Merlyn Ambrose was fulfiled. And instead of a voyage to Britain, he is ordered to take his journey to Rome, where he should receive holy orders at the hands of Pope Sergius, and instead of recovering the British crown, have his own crown shaved off, and be initiated into the order of the monks. Whether this vision was signified to him in a dream, or by the impositious illusions of some wicked spirit; or whether it may be a fantastical conceit of his own, being a man of a mild and eafy temper, wearied with troubles and miseries, is very dubious: only this is certain, that he never returned again to Britain, after he had gone over to Alan. But Cadwaladar had no fooner received this Vision, but immediately he relates the whole to his friend Alan, who presently consults all his prophetical books, chiefly the famous works of the two Merlins, Ambrose and Silvester: the first is said to be begotten on a spirit, and born in the town of Carmarthen, whence he received the name of Merlin, and to flourish in the reign of King Vortigern. latter called Caledonius, from the forest Caledon in Scotland, and Silvester or Merlyn Wylht, by reason he fell mad, and lived desolately after that he had seen a monftrous shape in the air, prophesied in the time of King Arthur, and far more full and intelligible than the former. Both these were in great reverence and reputation among the Britains, and their works very religiously preserved, and upon any considerable occasion most venerably consulted. They were of opinion, that nothing could escape their knowledge; and that no accident of moment or revolution could happen, which they did not foretel, and was to be difcodiscovered in their writings. In the consultation therefore of their prophefies, and the words which an eagle is faid to have spoken at the building of Caer Septon, now Shaftsbury; namely, that the Britains must lose the government of Britain till the bones of King Cadwalader were brought back from Rome. Alan found out that the time was now come. when these prophesies were to be accomplished, and the Britains forced to quit their native inheritance to strangers and invaders. Upon this he advised Cadwalader to obey the commands, and follow the counfel of the vision, and to hasten his journey for Rome. This he was willing to fubmit to, being defirous to spend the remainder of his days in peace and quietness, which before he had no opportunity to enjoy. To Rome therefore he haftens, where he was kindly received by Pope Sergius: and after eight years spent there in piety and devotion, he died in the year 688, and with him the kingdom and total government of the Britains over this island.

King Cadwalader is faid to have been a confiderable benefactor to the abby of Clynnoc Vawr in Arvon, upon which he bestowed the Lordship of Grayanoc. This place was primarily founded by S. Beuno, to whom it is dedicated, who was the fon of Hywgi ap Gwynlliw ap Glywis ap Tegid ap Cadell, a prince or Lord of Glewisig, brothers son to S. Cadoc ap Gwynlliw, fometime bishop of Beneventum in Italy. He was by the mothers fide coufin German to Laudatus the first abbot of Enlli, or the island of Bardsey; and to Kentigern bishop of Glasgow in Scotland, and of Lhanelwey, or S. Afaph in Wales; which last was fon to Owen Regent of Scotland, and grandson to Urien King of Cumbria. The building of a monastery at Glynnoc happened upon this occasion: Beuno having raifed to life, as the tradition goes, S. Wenifryd, who was beheaded by one Caradoc, a lord in North Wales, upon the account that she would not yield to his unchaste desires, became in very great esteem with King Cadvan, who bestowed upon him certain lands whereon to build a monastery. Cadwallon wallon also, Cadran's son, gave him the lands of Gwareddoc, where beginning to build a church, a certain woman with a child in her arms prevented his further progress, affuring him, that those lands were the proper inheritance of that child. Beuno was fo exceeding troubled at this, and without any more confideration on the matter, taking the woman along with him, he went in all hafte to Caer Sevant (called by the Romans Segontium, now Carnarvon) where King Cadwallon then kept his Court; when he was come before the king, he told him with a great deal of zeal and concern, that he had not done well to devote to God's fervice what was another man's inheritance, and therefore demanded back of him the golden scepter he had given him in lieu and confideration of the faid land, which the king refufing to do, was prefently excommunicated by Beuno, who thereupon departed and went away. But a certain person called Gwyddeiant, the king's cousingerman, hearing what had happened, immediately purfued after Beuno; whom when he had overtaken, he bestowed upon him (for the good of his own soul and the kings) the township of Clynncovawr, being his undoubted inheritance, where Beuno built a church, about the year 616, about which time King Cadvan died, leaving his fon Cadwallon to fucceed him. And not long before this time, Eneon Bhrenin, or Anianus King of the Scots, a confiderable prince in the north of Britain, leaving all his royalty in those parts, came to Lhyn in Gwyneth, where he built a church, which is still called from him, Lhan Eingan Bhrenin; where he is faid to have spent the remainder of his days in the fear and service of God. He was fon to Oven Danwyn, the fon of Eneon Yrth, fon to Cunedha Wledig king of Cambria, and a great prince in the north, and cousin-german to the great Maelgwyn Gwyneth King of Britain, whose father was Caswallon-law-hir, the brother of Owen Danwyn; and his mother Medif the daughter of Voylda ap Talu Traws of Nanconwey. This Maclywn died about the year 586,

WHEN Cadwaladar was departed for Rome, Alan began to reflect upon the state and condition of Great Britain; he imagined with himself that the recovery of it was not impracticable, but that a confiderable army might regain what the Saxons now quietly possessed. Therefore he was resolved to try the utmost, and to fend over all the forces he was able to draw together; not doubting the conquest of fome part of Britain, in case the whole should prove irrecoverable. He was the more encouraged to this expedition, by reason that the advantage was like to be his own, and no one could challenge the government of Britain, in case fortune should deliver it to his hands. Cadwalader was gone to Rome, and in all probability never to return; his fon Edwal Ywreh, or the Roe, was young and under the tuition of Alan; so that the event of this expedition must of necessity fall to himself, or by his concession to his son Ivor. who was to be chief in the undertaking. Having raifed a confiderable army, confisting chiefly of his own fubjects, with what remained of the Britains that came over with King Cadwaladar, he dispatched it for Britain, under the command of his fon Ivor, and his nephew Ynyr: they fafely landed in the western parts of Britain, which put the Saxons into fo great a fright, that immediately they drew up all their power to oppose them, and to hinder their progress into the country. The Britains, though fomewhat fatigued with their voyage, however gave them battle, and after a very great flaughter of the Saxons, possessed themselves of the countries of Cornwal, Devon, and Somersetshires. This proved a fortunate beginning for the Britains, and gave them great hopes of farther fuccess in the recovery of their country;

country; but that could not be expected without great opposition, and several hot engagements with the Saxons. This they were immediately made fenfible of; for they had scarce time to breath, and to recover their spirits after the last battle, but Kentwinus, King of the West-Saxons marched against them with a powerful army, confifting of Saxons and Angles. The Britains resolved to fight them; but whilst both armies were in view of each other, they thought it more adviseable to cease from any hostility, and to enter into articles of composition. Ivor seemed already fatisfied with his conquest, and willingly agreed to marry Ethelberga, Kentwyn's coufin, and peaceably to enjoy for his life fo much as he was already in possession of. This he faithfully observed during the reign of Kentwyn, and his nephew Cadwal who, after two years, religned the kingdom of the West-Saxons to his cousin Ivor. And now Ivor was become unexpectedly powerful, being King as well of the Saxons, as Britains that inhabited the Western parts of the island. He was now able to undertake somewhat considerable, and therefore began to fall foul upon his neighbours the kings of Kent, the West-Saxons, and Mercia, whom he vanguished in feveral battles. But being at length tired with the weight of government, he went to Rome, after the example of Cadwaladar, and refigned the rule of the Saxons to his cousin Adelred, leaving the Britains to the care of Roderick Molwynoc, the fon of Edwal Ywrch.

This Ivor founded the abby of Glastenbury, called in the British tongue Ynys Avalon; where there had been a christian church for several years before, and the first that was ever erected in Britain. For Joseph of Arimathea being sent by Philip the apostle in the days of Arviragus, An. Chr. 53. to preach the gospel in Britain, seated himself here, and built a church for the British christians. This church afterwards Ivor converted into an abby, which he endowed with very large possessions; being famous for the burying-place of Joseph of Arimathea, and King Arthur. He bestowed also fome lands upon the church of Winchester.

But there happened several casualties in his time. Brythe, a Subject to Egfride King of Northumberland, passed over to Ireland, and wasted and destroyed a great part of that Kingdom. In the fourth year of his reign there happened a remarkable earthquake in the Isle of Man, which much difturbed and annoyed the Inhabitants; and the year following it rained blood both in Britain and Ireland. This occasioned the butter and milk to refemble the colour of blood; and two years after the Moon also appeared all bloody. These accidents of nature might prefage some tumults and difturbances in the kingdom; which were very great in his time. For he was almost in perpetual hostility with the Kings of Kent, West-Sex, and Mercia; which occasioned great bloodshed and slaughter in Britain. His Journey to Rome put an end to all these commotions, from whence he never did return, but ended his days there in the practice of piety and religion.

RODERICK MOLWYNOC.

THE Government of the Britains Ivor refigned to Roderick Molwinoc the fon of Edwal Ywrch, who began his reign An. 720. But Adelred, King of the A.D. 720 West-Saxons, was displeased that Ivor had not bestowed upon him his whole kingdom; and upon that account he is resolved to trouble and plague Roderick and his Britons. He raifed immediately a powerful army, and with all his forces marched to Devonshire, which he destroyed with fire and sword. From thence he proceeds to Cornwal, intending to make that country, fenfible of the same misery; but he came far short of his expectation; for upon his entrance into the county, the Britains opposed him, and gave him battel, where he was vanquished, and forced to retire with all speed to his own dominions. This victory the Britains called Gwaeth Heilyn, from the place where this battle was fought. The year following, the Britains again obtained two notable victories over the Saxons, the one at a place called Garth Maclawch in North-Wales, the other at Pencost in South-Wales.

But the joy and satisfaction which the Britains entertained of these successes, was somewhat abated by the death of Belin the son of Elphin, a Man of noble birth; and great worth among them.

About the fame time Celredus King of Mercia died; and was succeeded by Ethelbaldus, who being very desirous to annex that fertile and pleasant country lying between the rivers Severn and Wye to his kingdom of Mercia, entred Wales with a puissant army. He destroyed and ravaged the country before him, to Carno, a mountain lying not far from Abergavenny, where he was met with by the Britains between whom a bloody and fore battle was fought in the year 728. but the victory proved very dubi-

A.D. 733. Not long after died venerable Bede, who was edu-cated and brought up in the Abby of Wyrnetham or Iarewe; a man of great learning and extensive knowledge; who wrote feveral books, one of which entitled, the Eclefiastical History of the English Nation; he dedicated to Cleolwolfe King of Northumberland. The fame time Adelred King of the West-Saxons, and Ethelbald King of Mercia, united their forces, and jointly marched to fight against the Britains. The Welch were now put to very hard streights, and forced to oppose the numerous armies of two powerful kings. However, fight they must, or suffer their country to be miferably over-run by their inveterate enemies. Both armies being engaged, a very dismal battle enfued thereupon, and a very great flaughter happened on both fides, but the Saxons prevailing by the number of their forces, obtained a very bloody victory over the powerless Britains. But Adelred, who was shortly followed by Edwyn King of the Picts, did not long furvive this battle; and Cudred took upon him the government of the West-Saxons.

The

The Welch found themselves unable to cope with the Saxons, and too weak to reprefs their endless incurfions; therefore they apply themselves to Cudred and joined in league with him, who upon some occasion or other, was actually fallen out with Ethelbald King of Mercia. But Ethelbald was fo proud with the fuc- A.D. 746 cess of the last engagement, that notwithstanding the league with Cudred, he must needs again fall upon the Welch. He advanced as far as Hereford, where the Britains, by the help of Cudred, gave him a fignal overthrow, and caused him to repent of his rash and precipitous expedition. But shortly after, Cudred and Ethelbald were unluckily reconciled, and made friends together, and Cudred relinquishing the Welch, joined his forces to Ethelbald's. Hereupon enfued another battle, in which the Welch being greatly overpowered, were vanguished by the Saxons; after which victory, Cudred shortly died. To him succeeded Sigebert, a A. D. 743. man of a loose and victous inclination; who for his ill behaviour in the management of his kingdom, was in a short time expelled and deprived by his nobility, and at last miserably slain by a rascally swineherd. After him Kenulph was chosen king of the West-Saxons, Ann. 750. in whose time died Theodore the fon of A.D. 750. Belin, a man of great effeem and reputation among the Britains. And about the fame time, a remarkable battle was fought between the Britains and the Picts, at a place called Magedawc; in which the Picts were put to a total rout, and Dalargan their king cafually flain. But the Britains did not fucceed fo well against the Saxons; for Røderic Molwynoc was at length forced to forfake the western countries of Britain, and to claim his own inheritance in North Wales. The fons of Bletius or Bledericus Prince of Cornwal and Devonshire, who was one of them that vanquished Adelred and Ethelbert at Bangor on the river Dee, had enjoyed the government of North Wales ever fince Cadfan was chose King of Britain. Roderic therefore demanded the government of this country as his right, which he was now willing to accept of, feeing he was forced to quit what he had hitherto poffeffed.

But he did long enjoy it, but died in a fhort time, leaving behind him two fons Conan Tindaythwy and Howel; after that he had in all reigned over the Britains thirty years.

CONAN TINDAYTHWY.

A.D. 755. ROderic Molwynoc being dead, his fon Conan Timdaythwy took upon him the government and principality of Wales, in the year 755. He was scarce fettled in his throne, but the Saxons began to make in-roads into his country, to spoil and destroy what they conveniently could meet with. They were animated hereto by the bad success of Roderic; and having forced the Britains out of Cornwal and Devonshire, they thought it practicable to drive them out of Wales too, and so to reduce the possession of the whole Island to themselves. This was their aim, and this they endeavoured to put in execution; but they were met with at Hereford, where a severe battle was fought between them and the Welch, in which Dyfwal the fon of Theodore a ftout and valiant foldier. was flain. And fhortly afterwards died Athelbert King of Northumberland, and was fucceeded by Ofwald.

About the same time happened a religious quarrel between the Britains and Saxons, concerning the obfervation of the feast of Easter, which Elbodius a learned and a pious Man, endeavoured to rectify in Wales, and to reduce it to the Roman calculation, which the Saxons always observed. The Britains did differ from the church of Rome in the celebration of this feast; and the difference was this. The church of Rome according to the order of the council of Nice, always observed Easter-day the next Sunday after the 14th day of the Moon; so that it never happened upon the 14th day utself, nor passed the 21st. The

Britains

Britains on the other hand, celebrated their Eafter upon the 14th and so forward to the 20th, which occasioned this difference; that the Sunday observed as Easter-day by the Britains; was but Palm-Sunday with the Saxons. Upon this account the Saxons did most uncharitably traduce the Britains, and would fearcely allow them the name and title of Christians. Hereupon, about the year 660, a great contest happened, managed on the one part by Colman and Hylda, who defended the rites and celebration of the Britains; and Gilbert and Wilfride on the part of the Saxons. Hylda was the niece of Edwine king of Northumberland, educated by Pauline and Aedan. She publickly opposed Wilfride and other superstitious monks, as to fuch trifles and bigotry in religion, alledging out of Polycrates, the fact of Irenæus, who withstood Victor bishop of Rome upon the same account; and the custom of the churches of Asia observed by St. John the Evangelist, Philip the Apostle, Polycarpus and Melito; and likewise observed in Britain by Jofeph of Arimathea, who first preached the gospel

Offa was made King of Mercia, and Brichtrich of A.D. 763. the West-Saxons; about which time died Fermael the son of Edwal and Cemoyd King of the Picts. The Saxons did daily encroach upon the lands and territories of the Welch beyond the river Severn, but more especially towards the fouth part of the country. These encroachments the Welch could not en-dure, and therefore were resolved to recover their own, and to drive the Saxons out of their country. The Britains of South-Wales; as receiving the greatest A. D. 779 injury and disadvantage from the Saxons, presently took up arms and entered into the country of Mercia; which they ravaged and destroyed with fire and fword. And shortly after, all the Welch joined their forces together, fell upon the Saxons, and forced them to retire beyond the Severn, and then returned home, with a very considerable spoil of English cattle. The Welch finding the advantage of this last incursion, and how that by these means they gauled and vexed the Saxons, frequently practifed the fame; and entering their country by ftealth, they killed and destroyed all before them; and driving their cattle beyond the river, ravaged and laid wafte the whole country. Offa King of Mercia not being able to endure these daily incursions and depredations of the Welch, entered into a league with the rest of the Saxon Kings, to bend their whole force against the Welch; who having raised a very strong and numerous army, passed the Severn into Wales. The Welch being far too weak to oppose and encounter so great an army, quitted the even and plain country, lying upon the banks of Severn and Wye, and retired to the mountains and rocks, where they knew they could be most safe from the inveterate and revengeful arms of the Saxons. But as foon as the Saxons decamped, being not able to effect any thing against them in these strong and natural fortifications, the Welch still made inroads into their territories, and feldom returned without some considerable booty and advantage. The Saxons were heartily nettled at these bo-peeping ravagers, and would compliment them still to their holes, but durst not pursue them further, for fear they should be entrapped by such as defended the streights and passages into the rocks. King Offa perceiving that he could effect nothing by these measures, annexed the country about Severn and Wye to his kingdom of Mercia, and planted the fame with Saxons. And for a farther fecurity against the endless invasions of the Welch, he made a deep ditch, extending from one sea to the other, called Clawdh Offa, or Offa's dike; upon which account, the royal feat of the Princes of Powys was translated from Pengwern, now Shrewsbury, to Mathraval in Montgomeryshire.

A.D. 795. While these things are transacted in the west, the Danes began to grow powerful at sea, and durst venture to land in the north of England; but without doing any great hurt, being forced to betake themselves to their ships again. Within six years after, they landed again in greater numbers, and proved much more terrible; they ravaged and destroyed a great part of Linsey and Northumberland, over-run the best part of Ireland, and miferably wasted Rechreyn. At the same time a considerable battle was fought at Ruthland between the Saxons and the Welch, wherein Caradoc King of North Wales was killed, The government of Wales was as yet green, and not firmly rooted, by reason of the perpetual quarrels and disturbances between the Welch and the Saxons; fo that the chief person or lord of any country assumed to himself the title of king. Caradoc was a perfon of great esteem and reputation in North Wales, and one that did very much contribute towards the fecurity of the country, against the incursions of the Saxons. He was fon to Gwyn, the fon of Colhoyn, the fon of Ednowen, fon to Blethyn, the fon of Blecius or Bledericus Prince of Cornwall and Devonshire. Offa King of Mercia did not long furvive him, and was fucceeded by his fon Egfert, who in a short time left his kingdom also to Kenulphus, a year after that Egbertus was created King of the West Saxons. About the same time died Arthen son to Sitsylht, the son of Clydawc King of Cardigan; and fometime after, Run King of Dyfed, and Cadelh King of Powys: who were followed by Elbodius Archbishop of North Wales, before whose death happened a very severe eclipse of the sun. The year following, the moon was likewife eclipfed upon Christmas-day. These fatalities and eclipses did portend no success to the Welch affairs; the laying of St. Davids in ashes by the West Saxons being followed by a general and a very grievious murrain of cattle, which was like to impoverish the whole country. The following year Owen the fon of Meredith, the fon of Terudos, dyed; and the Castle of Deganwy was ruined and destroyed by thunder.

But these several losses which the Welch sustained could not reconcile Prince Conan and his brother Howel; but they must needs quarrel and contend with one another, when they had the greatest occasion to embrace and unite their endeavours against the common enemy. Howel claimed the isle of Anglesey, as part of his father's inheritance, which Conan would by no means hearken to, nor confent that his brother should take possession of it. It was the custom of Wales, that a father's estate should be equally distributed between all his fons; and Howel by virtue of this custom, commonly called Gavelkind from the word Gafel to hold; claimed that island, as his father's estate. The custom of Gavelkind has been the occasion of the ruin and diminution of the estates of all the ancient Nobility in Wales; which being endlesly divided between the several sons of the same family, where at length reduced to nothing. From hence also proceeded several unnatural wars and disturbances between brothers; who being either not fatisfied with their portions, or displeased with the country they were to possels, disputed their right by dint of the sword. This proved very true in this present instance; for Howel would not suffer himfelf to be cheated out of his paternal inheritance, and therefore he would endeavour to recover it by force of arms. Both armies being engaged, the victory fell to Howel, who immediately thereupon possessed himself of the island, and valiantly maintained it against the power and strength of his brother Conan.

The Welch being thus at variance and enmity among themselves, and striving how to destroy one another; had yet another disaster added to their missortune. For the following year they received a very considerable loss by thunder, which very much spoiled and annoyed the country, and laid several houses and towns in ashes. About the same time, Gruffith the son of Run a person of considerable quality in Wales, dyed; and Griffri the son of Kyngen, was treacher outly murthered by the practices of his brother Elis.

But Conan could not rest satisfied with his brother Howel's forcible possession of the Island of Anglesey; and therefore he was resolved to give him another battle, and to force him to restore and yield up the possession of that Country, which he had now violently kept in his hands. Howel on the other hand, being as resolutely bent to maintain his ground, and not to deliver up a foot of what he was now, upon a double respect, viz. his father's legacy, and his late conquest, owner of; willingly met his brother, put him to flight, and killed a great number of his forces. Conan was cruelly enraged at this shameful overthrow, and therefore made a firm resolution, either to recover the Island from his brother, or to facrifice his life and his crown in the quarrel. Having drawn up all the A. D. 817, forces he could raise together, he marched to Anglesey to seek his brother Howel; who being too weak to encounter and oppose so confiderable a number, was compelled to make his escape to the Isle of Man, and to leave the Island of Anglesey to the mercy of his brother. But Conan did not live long to reap the fatisfaction of this victory, but died in a short time, leaving iffue behind him, one only daughter called Efylht, married to a nobleman of Wales named Merfyn Frych. He was fon to Gwyriad or Uriet, the fon of Elidure, who lineally descended from Belinus the brother of Brennus king of the Britains. His mother was Nest, the daughter of Cadelh king of Powys, the fon of Brochwel Yscithroc; who together with Cadfan king of Britain, Morgan king of Demetia, and Bledericus king of Cornwall, gave that memorable overthrow to Ethelred king of Northumberland, upon the river Dee, in the year 617. This Brochwel by the Latin writers named Brecivallus and Brochmaelus, was a very confiderable prince in that part of Britain, called Powys-land; as also Earl of Chester, and lived in the town then called Pengwern Powys, now Salop; in the house where since the college of St. Chad stands. He was a great friend and a favourer to the monks of Bangor, whose part he took against the Saxons that were fet on by Augustine the monk, to prosecute them with fire and fword, because they would not forsake the customs of their own church, and conform to those of Rome.

MERFYN FRYCH and ESYLHT.

ONAN being dead, Merfyn Frych and his wife Efylht, who was fole keir to Conan, took upon them the government or principality of Wales. This Merfyn was king of Man, and fon to Gwyriat and Nest the daughter of Cadelh ap Brochwel ap Elis king of Powys. Howel being forcibly ejected out of Anglesey by his brother Conan Tindaethwy, escaping to the Island of Man, was honourably and kindly received by Merfyn; in return of whose civilities Howel used such means afterwards that Mersyn married Efylht, the daughter and heir of his brother Conan, (though others fay, that he died presently after his escape to Merfyn.) Howel after that he had for about five years enjoyed the Isle of Man, and other lands in the north, given him by Merfyn to hold under him, died about the year 825; after whose death, they again returned to Merfyn, whose anceftors had always held the fame, under the kings of the Britains; and fo, upon his marriage with Efylht, the Isle of Man was annexed to the crown of Wales.

In the first year of their reign, Egbert, the powerful king of the West Saxons, entered with a mighty army into Wales, destroyed and wasted the country as far as Snowden Hills, and seized upon the lordship of Rhyvonioc in Denbighland. About the same time a very sore battle was fought in Anglesey, between the Saxons and the Welch, called, from the place where this fight happened, the battle of Lhanvaes. Fortune seemed all this while to frown upon the Welch, and their affairs succeeded very ill; for shortly after that Egbert had advanced his colours as tar as Snowden, Kenuiph king of Mercia wasted the pountry of West Wales, over-ran and destroyed Powis-land,

Powis-land, and greatly diffurbed and incommoded the Welch nation. Soon after this, Kenulph died, and was fucceeded by Kenelm; and he in a short time by Ceolwulph, who, after two years reign, left the kingdom of Mercia to Bernulph.

Egbert, king of the West Saxons, was grown very ftrong and powerful, able to reduce all the petty kingdoms in Britain, under one fingle monarchy; upon the thoughts of which, he fet upon Bernulph, king of Mercia, and vanquished him at Elledowne; and afterwards brought under subjection the countries of Kent and of the West Angles. But the Britains could not be so easily subdued; for after a long and a cruel fight at Gavelford, between them and the West Saxons of Devonshire, in which several thousands were flain on both fides, the victory remained uncertain. He had better fuccess against Wyhtlafe, king of Mer- A.D. 829, cia, whose dominions he easily added to his now increasing Monarchy; and passing the Humber, he quickly reduced that country to his subjection. The Saxon heptarchy was now become one kingdom, and Egbert fole monarch of all the countries that the Saxons possessed in Britain; which name he ordered should be changed to England, his people to be called Englishmen, and the language English.

They who came over out of Germany into this island to aid the Britains against their enemies the Picts and Scots, were partly Saxons, Angles, and Juthes; from the first of which came the people of Effex, Suffex, Middlefex, and the West Saxons; from the Angles, the East Angles, the Mercians, and they that inhabited the north fide of the Humber; from the Juthes, the Kentishmen, and they that settled in the Isle of Wight. These Germans, after that they had drove the Britains beyond Severn and Dee; erected feven kingdoms called the heptarchy in the other part of the Island; whereof, I. Kent. 2. Of the South-Saxons, containing Suffex and Surrey. 3. The Eaft-Angles, in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridgeshire. 4. The kingdom of the West Saxons, comprehending Berkshire, Devonshire, Somersetshire, and Cornwall.

5. Mercia,

5. Mercia, containing Glocester, Hereford, Worcester, Shropshire, Stafford, Cheshire, Warwick, Leicester, Darby, Nottingham, Lincoln, Northampton, Oxford, Buckingham, Bedford, and half Hertfordshire. 6. The East-Saxons, containing Essex, Middlesex, and the other part of Hertford. 7. Of the Northumbrians, taking in all the country beyond Humber, which was divided into two parts, Deyra and Bernicia; the first from Humber to Tyne, the other from Tyne to the Scottish Sea.

Egbert, king of the West-Saxons, having severally conquered thele kingdoms, annexed them together, and comprehended them under one monarchy, which was called the kingdom of England, 968 years after the coming of Brute to this Island; 283 years after the landing of Hengist; and 149 af-these several kingdoms, which used continually to moleft, and to incroach upon each others territories; might reasonably have expected to enjoy his new A.D. 883. kingdom quietly, and not fear any diffurbance trouble in his dominions. But no fooner was he established king of England, but the Danes began to threaten new commotions, and landed in great numbers, and in divers places of the kingdom. Egbert fought several battles with them, and with various fuccess: at length the Danes landed in West Wales, marched forward for England, being joined by a great number of Welch, and met Egbert upon Hengist-down, where a fevere battle was fought, and the Danes put to a total rout. The Welch suffered severely for this; Egbert, being highly incensed that the Danes were supported by them, laid siege to Caer Lhêon ar Dhyfrdwy, or Chefter, the chief city of Venedotia, which hitherto had remained in the hands of the Welch; took the town, and, among other tokens of his indignation, he caused the brazen effigies of Cadwalhon, king of Britain, to be pulled down and defaced, and upon pain of death forbad the erecting of fuch again. He iffued out also a proclamation, by the inftigation of his wife Redburga, who always bore an inveterate malice to the Welch; commanding all that were any ways extracted from British blood, to depart, with all their effects, out of his kingdom, within six months upon pain of death. These were very severe and insupportable terms; but he did not live long to see them put in execution; for dying shortly after the battle of Hengist-down, he was succeeded by his son Ethelwulph. This King Ethelwulph married his daughter to Berthred, who was his tributary king of Mercia, by whose help he successfully opposed the cruel incursions of the Danes, who miserably destroyed the sea-coasts of England with fire and sword. These Danish commotions being indifferently well appeased, Berthred, king of Mercia, set upon the Welch, between whom a remarkable battle was sought at a place called Kettell; where Mersyn Frych, king of the Britains, was killed, leaving to succeed him in the government of Wales, his son Roderic Mawr, or the Great.

RODERIC THE GREAT.

ERFYN FRYCH having loft his life, and A.D. 843. with it his kingdom, in the battle of Kettell; his fon Roderic, furnamed the Great, without any opposition or contest, succeeded in the principality of Wales. The first thing he effected after his advancement to the crown, was the dividing of Wales into several provinces, which he distinguished into these three; Abersfraw, Dineyowr, and Mathraval. Berthred, king of Mercia, being animated by his late success against Mersyn Frych, purposed to perform the like exploits against his son Roderic. And having gained the aid and affistance of King Ethelwulph, he entered North Wales, with a strong army, and advanced as far as Anglesey, which he cruelly and miserably destroyed.

Roderic met him feveral times, and the Welch did at length fo gaul and torment him, that, in fine, he had little or nothing to boast of; only Meyric, one of the chiefest princes among the Britains, was slain.

But he was foon forced to quit his expedition against the Welch, and to convert his forces another way; his own dominions requiring their constant residence, being severely threatened by a foreign in

A.D. 846. vasion. For the Danes were by this time grown so very powerful, that they over-ran a great part of England, fought with Athelstan, king of Kent, brother to Ethelwulph; and obtained so much conquest, that whereas before they returned to their own country when the weather grew too cold for action, they now took up their winter-quarters in England.

The Welch, in the mean time, being secure from any violence, which might otherwise be expected, from the English; began to quarrel and fall out amongst themselves. Ithel, king of Gwent, or Wentland, for what occasion not known, fell foul upon the men of Brecknock, who were so resolute as to fight him; and the event proved very unfortunate to Ithel, who was slain upon the spot. It is the unhappiness of a nation that is governed by several petty states, when it is apprehensive of no danger from an outward enemy that it will fall at variance, and create disturbances

Had the Britains, instead of falling upon one another, taken the advantage of this opportunity, when the Saxons were altogether employed in opposing and repelling the Danes, to increase and strengthen their number, and to fortify their towns; they might at least securely have possessed their own dominions, is not extended their government to a great part of England. But a fort of an equality in power, begat an emulation between the several princes, and this emulation for the most part ended in blows and contention; so that instead of strengthening themselves whilst they had respite from the English, they rather weakened their power by inward differences,

Konger

Kongen, king of Powys, was gone to Rome, there A.D. 854 to end his days peaceably and religiously, but his death did not prove so natural as he expected, being barbaroufly flain, or (as fome fay) choaked by his own fervants. Shortly after died Cemoyth, king of the Picts, and Jonathan, lord of Abergeley. It was now become customary for princes wearied with government to go to Rome, and the Pope willingly dispensed with the refignation of their crowns, by reason that his Holiness seldom lost by it. King Ethelwulph paid very dear for his entertainment there, made his kingdom tributary to the Pope, and paid the Peter-pence to the church of Rome. The Saxon genealogists bring the pedigree of Ethelwulph for several fuccessions and generations, up to Adam, as may be feen in Matthew of Westminster, who in like manner derives the pedigree of Offa, king of Mercia. This has been the custom of most nations, both antient and modern: and is always practifed by them whose families are any thing antient and honourable; fo that it is a very great mistake to scoff at, and deride the Welch because they keep up this antient and laudable cufton.

Berthred, king of Mercia, became at length far too weak to repel the daily increasing power of the Danes, who fo numeroufly poured upon him, that at last he was forced to relinquish his kingdom and fly to Rome, where in a short time he forrowfully ended his days. Ethelwulph shortly followed, and left his fons, Athelbald, king of the West-Saxons, and Athelbright, king of Kent, and the East-Saxons. Ethelwulph is reported to have been fo learned and devout, that the church of Winchester elected him in his youth bishop of that fee, which function he took upon him about feven years before he was made king. He is faid also to have conquered the kingdom of Demetia or South-Wales; which together with the kingdom of the South-Saxons he bestowed upon his fon Alfred, upon condition he would bring a thousand men out of Wales to Winchester, to the aid of his brother Ethelbert against the Danes. Athelbald succeeding his father in the kingdom of the West-Saxons, kept his mother-in-law, the wise of Ethelwulph, for his concubine, and afterwards married her in the city of Chester. But he did not live long to enjoy this unnatural conjunction, but dying without issue after that he had reigned eight years, left his kingdom to his brother Athelbright.

About the same time the Danes began again to beffir themselves and fell upon the city of Winchester and destroyed it, which Athelbright perceiving; after a long fight forced them to quit the land, and to betake themselves to sea again: But the Danes quickly returned to the Isle of Thanet, where they remained for that winter, doing much mischief upon the fea-coast, and destroying all places near the shoars of England. The English were very glad that they durst venture no further, and the more, because the Welch began again to be troublesome, against whom an army must be speedily dispatched, otherwise they would certainly advance to the English country. Both armies met at Gweythen, where a fierce battle was fought, and a great number flain on either fide, but the victory was not plainly discoverable: But the Welch not long after, received a confiderable lofs by the death of Conan Nant Nifer, a stout and skilful commander, who oftentimes had valiantly repulsed the English forces, and obtained many fignal victories over them.

The Danes had been for some time quiet, being unable to venture upon any considerable action, and therefore they thought it adviseable to secure only what they had already won, and to expect a re-inforcement from their own country. This was quickly sent them, under the command of Hungare and Hubba, who landed in England with a very considerable army of Danes. King Athelbright, whether terrised with a dismal apprehension of these invaders, or otherwise being indisposed, quickly afterwards gave up the ghost, leaving the management of his kingdom, together with that of his army against the Danes, to his brother Ethelred. The Danes in the mean time got fure footing, and advanced as far as York, which they miferably destroyed, killing Osbright and Elba two Kings of Northumberland that opposed them. From hence they proceeded, and over-run all the country as far as Nottingham, destroying and spoiling all before them, and then returned back to York. But having once tasted how sweet the Spoil of a country, much more fertile than their own was, they could not rest satisfied with what they had already obtained, but must needs make a farther progress into the country, and fall upon the kingdom of the East-Angles. Edmund king of that country being not able to endure their infolencies, endeavoured to oppose them, but in the undertaking was unfortunately flain. And now after the same manner that the Saxons had formerly attained to the conquest of Britain, the Danes proceeded to the conquest of England. For the Saxons having found out the sweetness of this island, and withal, discovered the weakness and inability of the Britains to oppose them, brought over their numbers by degrees, and in feveral companies, by which they wearied and tired out the British armies. For it is certain that nothing can produce more to the conquest of an island, than the landing an army at several places and at feveral Times, which diftracts the counfels and proceedings of the inhabitants, and which at this time for want of sufficient power at sea, could not be prevented. And so the Danes being informed of the good success of Hungare and Hubba in England, fent over another army under the command of Basreck and Alding, who landed in West-Sax, and fought five battles with King Ethelred and his brother Alfred, namely at Henglefield, Eastondown, Redding, Basing and Mereton, in which two first the English overcame, and the three last the Danes got the victory.

Soon after this Ethelred died, leaving his kingdom to his brother Alfred, who no sooner had taken the government upon him but considered with himself what a heavy burthen he was to sustain, and therefore he began to enquire after the wifest and learnedoff men that he could hear of, to be directed by them. whom he worthily entertained, making use of their advice as well in the publick government of the kingdom, as in his private studies and conference of learning. He fent for two men famously learned out of Wales, the one called John de Erigena, furnamed Scotus; the other Afferius, surnamed Menevensis. De Erigena was born at Menevia or St. Davids, and was brought up in that college; who, for the fake of learning; having travelled to Athens, and bestowed there many years in the study of the Greek, Hebrew. and Caldaick tongues, and the fecret mysteries of philosophy, came to France; where he was well accepted of by Carolus Calvus, or Charles the Bald, and Ludovicus Balbus, or Lewis the Stammerer: and there translated the works of Dionysius Areopagita, De Cœlesti Hierarchia out of the Greek into the Latin tongue. Being returned home to Wales, he was fent for by this King Alfred, who was then founding and erecting the university of Oxford, of which Erigena became the first professor and publick reader. But King Alfred bore so great a respect to learning, that he would fuffer none to bear any confiderable office in his court but fuch as were learned; and withal, exhorted all persons to embrace learning, and to honour learned men. But though a love to learning be feldom reconcileable with a warlike and a military life, King Alfred was also forced to regard the discipline of war to defend his kingdom against the increasing power of the Danes. For he was scarce settled in his throne, but this restless and ever troublesome people began to molest and destroy his country, infomuch that he was of necessity forced to oppose them, which he did twice upon the fouth fide of the river Thames, in which engagements he flew of the Danes one king, nine earls, together with an innumerable multitude of inferior foldiers. About the same time Gwgan ap Meyric ap Dunwal ap Arthen ap Sitfylht, prince of Cardigan, died, being as some fay, unfortunately drowned. But the

late victories which Alfred had obtained over the Danes, did not fo much weaken and dishearten them, but that in a short time they recovered their spirits and began again to look terrible and threatening. For as foon as they could re-unite their scattered forces, they fet upon and destroyed the town of Alclyde, won the city of London and Reading, over-ran all the inland country, and the whole kingdom of Mercia. Another army of Danes at the fame time proved very fuccessful in the North and possessed themselves of the country of Northumberland, which action did not fo much grieve the English, as trouble and vex the Picts and Scots, who were inceffantly gauled, and frequently beat off by these Danish troops. The next year three of the Danish captains marched from Cambridge towards Warham in Dorsetshire, of which expedition King Alfred being informed, presently detached his forces to oppose them, and to offer them battle. The Danes were fo startled at this, that they immediately defired peace, and willingly confented forthwith to depart out of the country, and to forswear the fight of English ground, According to which capitulation, the horse that night marched for Exeter, and the foot being shipped off, were all of them drowned at Sandwich. The Danes having thus abjured England, were not willing to return home empy, but thought it prudent to bend their course against Wales. They fancied that they were like to meet with no great opposition from the Welch, and therefore could carve for themselves according as their fancy directed them. But having landed their army in Anglesey, they quickly experienced the contrary; Prince Roderic opposing them, gave them two battles, one at a place called Bengole, and the other at Menegid in Anglesey. At the same time another army of Danes under the command of Halden and Hungare landed in South-Wales, over-ran the whole country, destroying all before them, neitheir sparing churches nor religious houses. But they received their due reward at the hands of the West Saxons, who meeting with them on the coasts of Devonshire.

vonshire, slew both Halden and Hungare, with 1200 of their men. The same year Einion, bishop of St. Davids died, and was the following year succeeded by Hubert, who was installed in his place.

A. D. 876. The English being rid of their powerful and ever reftless enemies the Danes, began now to quarrel with the Welch, entering into Angleley, with a numerous army, fought a fore battle with Roderic, who together with his brother (or as others fay his fon) Gwyriad. was unhappily flain in the field, which battle is called by the Welch, Gwaith Duw Sul y Mon. This Roderic had iffue by his wife Angharad, Anarawd, Cadelh and Merfyn, the last of which, Giraldus Cambrenfis, contrary to the vulgar and received opinion, will have to be the eldest son of Roderic, upon whom was bestowed the principality of North-Wales. For it was unanimously granted that Roderic was undoubted proprietor of all the dominions of Wales, North-Wales descending unto him by his mother Esylht, the daughter and fole heir of Conan Tyndaethwy; South-Wales by his Wife Angharad, the daughter of Meyric ap Dyfnwal ap Arthen ap Sitsylht, King of Cardigan; Powis by Nest, the fifter and heir of Congen ap Cadelh, King of Powis his father's mother. These three dominions Roderic divided between his three fons, appointing North-Wales for his eldest fon Anarawd, South-Wales to Cadelh, who shortly after' his father's death, forcibly feized upon his brother Merfyn's portion, upon whom Roderic had bestowed Powis-Land. Wales being thus divided between these three princes, they were called Y Tri Tywysoc Talaethioc, or the three crowned princes, by reason that each of them did wear on his helmet a coronet of gold, being a broad head band indented upward, fet and wrought with precious stones, which in the British Tongue is called Taleath. To each of these princes Roderic built a royal feat, for the Prince of Gwyneth or North-Wales, at Aberffraw; of South-Wales, at Dinefawr; for the Prince of Powis, at Mathrafel. Roderic had iffue also, besides these three, Roderic, Meyric, Edwal or Tudwal, Gwyriad and Gathelic.

But Roderic having divided his principality betwixt his eldest sons, namely, Aberstraw, with the sisteen cantreds thereunto belonging to Anarawd; Dinesawr with its 15 cantreds extending from the mouth of the river Dosi, to the mouth of Severn to Cadelh; and Powis with sisteen cantreds from the mouth of the river Dee, to the bridge over Severn at Glocester to Mersyn: Ordained, "That his eldest son Anarawd, and his successors, should continue the payment of the ancient tribute to the Crown of England; and the other two, their heirs and successors should acknowledge his sovereignty; and, that upon any foreign invasion, they should mutually aid and protect one another."

And he farther appointed, "That when any difference should arise betwixt the Princes of Abersfraw and Cardigan or Dinesawr, the three Princes should meet at Bwlch y Pawl, and the Prince of Powis should be umpire. But if the Prince of Abersfraw and Powis sell at variance, they should meet at Dol Rhianedd, probably Morva Rhianedd, on the bank of the river Dee, where the King of Cardigan was to adjust the controversy; and if the quarrel happened betwixt the Princes of Powis and Cardigan, the meeting was appointed at Llys Wen upon the river Wye, and to

And the better to frustrate any attempt of the English, he ordained moreover, "That all strong holds, castles and citadels, should be fortified and kept in repair; that all churches and religious houses should be re-edified and adorned, and that in all ages the history of Britain, being faithfully registered and transcribed,

ANARAWD.

HE Welch had often forrowfully felt the unnatural effects of inward feditions, and of being governed by feveral princes, which were now unavoidably to be renewed by reason of Rodric's imprudent division of his dominions between his three sons. For the feveral principalities being united in him, it was certainly the most politic means for the preservation of the country from the inveterate fury of the English, to compose the inward differences which would otherwife happen, by perpetuating the whole government of Wales in one prince. For it was impossible effectually to oppose the common enemy by separate armies, and where a different interest interfered, as if the fafety of the fame country, and the honour of the prince were unanimously regarded. This was the unhappiness of the ancient Britains, when the Romans invaded their country; domestic broils and inward diffentions being fown among themselves, they could not agree to unite their powers, and jointly to oppose the common enemy; fo that Tacitus wifely concludes. Dum singuli pugnant universi vincuntur.

There are few nations but have experienced the folly of being rent into several portions, and the downsal of that great body the Roman empire, may not be absurdly attributed to Constantine's dividing of it between his sons. But the Welch at this time presently selt the unhappiness of it; Cadelh, Prince of South-Wales, being distaissted with his portion, and desirous to feed his ambition with larger territories, could not spare his brother Mersyn's country, but must needs forcibly disposses him of his lawful inheritance, and so involve the Welch in a Civil

But the fuccession of the Princes of Wales pro-Seeds in Anarawd, the eldest son of Roderic, who began his reign over North-Wales, in the year 877. At that time Rollo, with a numerous army of Normans descended into France, and possessed themselves of the country of Neustria, which from them has since received the name of Normandy. But the treacherous Danes in England, who had retired to the city of Exercit, quickly violated the capitulation which they had lately fwore to observe, and upon that account were fo warmly purfued by King Alfred, that they gladly delivered up holtages for the performance of the articles formerly agreed upon between them: But it was not their intention to keep them long, for the next year they again broke lose, possessed themselves of all the country upon the north side of Thames, and passing the river, put the English to flight, and made themselves masters of Chippenham in West-Sax. But their whole army did not fucceed fo well, for Alfred meeting with a party of them, flew their captain and took their standard, which the Danes called RAVEN. After this he vanquished them again at Edendown, where after that the Danes had given hostages for their peaceable behaviour; Godrun, their commander, received the Christian faith, and so reigned in East-Angle. But this opportunity feemed to threaten a great storm upon Wales; for besides the death of Aedan, the son of A. D. 878. Melht, a nobleman of the country, the articles of composition between the English and the Danes, occasioned these last to join their power with the people of Mercia to fight against the Welch, between whom a fevere battle was fought at Conwey, wherein the Welch obtained a very fignal victory, which was called "Dial Rodri, or the Revenge of the Death of Prince Roderic."

The reason why the Mercians were so irreconcilably enraged against the Welch at this time, was this: After the death of Roderic the Great, the northern Britains of Stratclwyd and Cumberland were mightily infested and weakened through the daily incursions of the Danes, Saxons and Scots, infomuch that as many of them as would not submit their necks to the yoke were forced to quit their country, and to seek for more quiet habitations. Therefore towards the beginning of Anarawd's reign, several of them came to Gwyneth, under the conduct of one Hobert, whose distressed condition the prince commisserating, granted them all the country betwixt Chester and Conwey to seat themselves in, in case they could drive out the Saxons who had lately possessed themselves of it.

The Britains having returned their thanks to Anarawd, presently fell to work, and necessity giving edge to their valour, they eafily dispossessed the Saxons who were not as yet warm in their feats. For some time they continued peaceably in this part of Wales; but Eadred, Duke of Mercia, called by the Welch Edryd Wallthir, not being able any longer to bear fuch an ignominious ejection, made great preparations for the re-gaining of the faid country. But the northern Britains, who had fettled themselves there, having intelligence of his defign, for the better fecurity of their cattle and other effects, removed them beyond the river Conwey. Prince Anarawd in the mean time was not idle, but drawing together all the strength he could raife, encamped his army near the town of Conwey at a place called Cymryt, where himfelf and his men having made gallant refiftance against the pressing efforts of the Saxons, obtained a very compleat victory.

This battle was by fome called Gwaeth Cymryt Conwey, by reason that it was fought in the township of Cymryt, near Conwey. But Prince Anarawd would have it called Dial Rodri, because he had there revenged the death of his father Rodri.

In this battle Tudwal, Rodri's ion, received a wound in the knee, which made him be donominated Tudwal Gloff ever after; but for his fignal fervice in this action his brethren beflowed upon him Uchelogoed Gwynedd. But the Britains purfuing their victory, chaled the Saxons quite out of Wales into Mercia, where having burnt and destroyed the borders, they returned heme laden with rich spoils, and so took possessions.

possession of the country betwixt Chester and Conwey, which for a long time after they peaceably enjoyed. But Anarawd to express his thankfulness to God for this great victory, gave very considerable lands and possession to the collegiate churches of Baugor and Clynnoc Vawr in Arton. After this, those Danes that lay at Fulhenham near London, crossed the sea to France, and passing to Paris along the river Seyn, spoiled the country thereabouts, and vanquished the French that came against them; but in their return towards the sea coast, they were met with by the Britains of Armorica, who slew the greatest part of them, and the rest consused we necessary to escape to their

Thips, were all drowned.

One should think that the several misfortunes the Danes fustained first at Sandwich, then by King Alfred, and now in France, would have quite drained their number, and utterly have rid Britain from fo troublesome an enemy. But like ill weeds, the more you root them, the faster they will grow; the Danes were still supplied from abroad, and if an army was vanquished here, another was fire to come in their room. This the Welch found too true, for not long after this famous defeat by the Armorican Britains, the Danes not able to venture upon thefe, were refolved to revenge themselves upon their friends of Wales, and therefore landing in North-Wales, they cruelly harraffed and destroyed the country. Nor is it strange to consider from whence such a wonderful number of Danes and Normans could come. For the kingdom of Denmark had under it, not only Denmark, which is a small country divided by the fea into Infulas and Peninfulas, as that which joins tipon Saxony and Holfatia, called Cymbrica Cherfonefus, with the islands of Zealand and Finnen, but also Norway, and the large country of Sweden, reaching to Muscovy, and almost to the North-Pole. This country being then scarce known to the world, did of a sudden pour out fuch a multitude of people, which like a fudden storm unexpectedly over-ran all Europe, with a great part of the country of Africa. From D 4 hence

h nce proceeded these Danes who annoyed England; and the Normans, who conquered France; both nations being originally derived from the same stock.

A. D. 890.

The Danes had not appeared in England for some time, and therefore are now refolved to take fo fure a footing, as they cannot eafily be repulsed. Two hundred and fifty fail being landed at Lymene in Kent, hard by the great forest of Andreslege, they built the castle of Auldre or Apledore. The same time Hasting with a fleet of eighty fail ventured to the Thames mouth, and built the castle of Mydlton; having first made an oath to King Alfred, not to molest him or any of his subjects: but having built the castle of Beamfleer, he thought himself to have obtained so great a strength, that there was no necessity of observing the oath lately sworn to King Alfred, and therefore invaded the country round about him. But he foon found his miltake, and was forced to betake himself back to his caftle, which was quickly pulled down upon his head, and his wife and two fons taken prifoners; who being christened, were again restored to their father. Upon this Hasting and his Danes departed from England, and made their way for France; where laying fiege to the city of Limogis, and despairing of a speedy surrender of it, betook himself to his usual way of dealing finistrously, and devised this trick to win the town: He feigned himself to be dangerously fick, and fent to the bishop, and the conful of the city, defiring of them most earnestly, that he might be admitted to the Christian Faith, and be baptized before his departure out of this world. The bishop and conful fulpecting no deceit, were very glad, not only to be delivered from the present danger of being besieged, but also to win so great a person to the congregation of Christ. Whereupon a firm peace being concluded betwixt both nations, Hasting is baptized, the bishop and conful being his godfathers; which being ended, he was carried back by his foldiers to his ships, in a very infirm condition, as he outwardly pretended. About midnight he caused himself with his arms about him to be laid on a bier, and commanded his foldiers foldiers to carry their weapons with them under their coats, and fo to be ready when he should give them the word. The next day, all things being in a readinefs, he was folemnly brought by his foldiers with great clamour and conterfeit mourning, to be interred in the chief church of the city; where the bishop and conful, accompanied with all the most honourable members of the town, came to honour the funeral. but when the bishop had made himself ready to bury the body, and all the citizens being in the church, up starts Hasting with his Sword drawn, and killing first the bishop and the conful, afterwards fell in with his armed foldiers upon the naked people, putting all to the fword, and fparing neither age, fex, nor infirmity. Having ranfacked the town, he fent messengers to Charles the French king, to mediate for peace, which he eafily obtained, together with the town of Chartres towards the defraying of his charges.

At this time Hennith ap Bledrie, a baron of Wales, A. D. 8978. died; and two years after, Anarawd prince of North 8933. Wales, with a confiderable number of English, marched against his brother Cadelh, and spoiled the countries of Cardigan and Ystradgwy. At the same time the Danes laid siege to the city of Exeter; and when Alfred had marched to oppose them, they that continued in the castle of Auldre passed over to Essex, and built another castle at Scobrith, and from thence, marched to Budington, seated upon the Severn. When Alfred came near to Exeter, the Danes presently raised the Siege, and betaking themselves to their ships, sailed towards Wales, and spoiled the sea-cost thereof, and

But the Danes at Budington being informed that king Alfred marched against them, fled back to their castle in Essex: so that the king was fain to alter his march, and to convert his forces against Leicester; where a party of Danes was so warmly besieged, that at length they were reduced to that extremity, as to feed upon their horses. But the season of the year for action being ended, and the extremity of the weather being advanced, Alfred was forced to raife the fiege, and to wait the next opportunity A. D. 895, for the recovery of the town. But before he could appear before it again, the Danes fairly quitted it, and together with those in Northumberland, passed by the North Sea to Merefige, an ifle in Effex. The son next year they entered the Thames, and built a caftle twenty miles distant from London; upon the strength of which, they ventured to spoil and waste the country thereabouts; but paid very dear for their courage, being accidentally met with, they received a bloody overthrow, having four of their princes flain upon the spot, and the rest very glad to make their escape to the castle. Upon this Alfred divided the river into three streams, by which stratagem the water became so diminished in the Thames, that the Danish ships could not return back into the fea. When the Danes perceived this, and found it impracticable for them to escape in their ships, they left their wives and children and all their effects in Effex; and so passed by land to Enadbryge upon the Severn; and then passing the river, spoiled the countries of Brecknock, Gwentland, and Gwentlhwg. Some of them at the same time, passed over to France; and another company coasting about Devonshire, destroyed the maritime countries; but being met with by the English, lost six of their thips in the dispute. 897. The following fummer the kingdom of Ireland fuffered extremely by locusts; who confumed all the corn and all grass through the whole country; but were at length by continued prayers and fasting quite destroyed. These are common in Africk, and other hot regions, but feldom feen in colder climates; and when they happen to travel fo far, they are always very pestilentions and destructive to that country they come to.

goo. This year Igmond, with a great number of Danes, landed in Anglesey, and was met with by the Welch, at a place called Molerain, where Merfyn was flain : though, others call it Meilon, and from the battle fought there, Maes Rhos Meilon. The fame year

King

King Alfred died, who translated the antient laws of Dyfnwall Moelmut, king of Britain, and the laws of Queen Marsia, out of British into English, and called it Marsian law, which was afterwards called West-Saxon law, and observed in part of Mercia; with all the countries on the south of Thames: The other part of the country having another law called Dane Lex, both which remained to the time of Edward the Confessor, who of these two made one law. It is very observable, what is related of King Alfred, concerning his division of the natural day into three parts; the one he set apart for devotion and study, the next for the affairs of the commonwealth, and the third for his own rest and resreshment.

Alfred being dead, Edward his eldest son took upon him the crown, which fo displeased the ambitious fpirit of his brother Adelwulph, that presently he raised a cruel war against him, and flying to Northumberland, stirred up the Danes against his brother Edward. The Danes were glad of the opportunity; having now a fair pretence to render themselves masters of the whole island; and therefore Adelwulph is made king, as well of the Angles as of the Danes, who by this time were grown to be one People. Marching then proudly, with a very confiderable army at his heels, he subdued the East-Saxons, spoiled the country of Mercia; and passing over the Thames at Crickland, deftroyed Brythend, and returned home with very great booty. At the fame time Euneth, was flain in Arwyftly. But Edward being informed of his brother's retreat, purfued him very eagerly; but missing of him, over-ran and destroyed all the country betwixt Oufe and the Dike of St. Edmund; and then returned home with his whole army; faving the Kentish men, who being too greedy of plunder, rashly tarried behind. For the Danes perceiving the body of the army to be returned, and that a small party still continued to ravage the country, prefently fet upon them, flew a great number of them, and put the rest to a shameful slight. Nor were the

and to revenge the death of the Kentishmen, dispatched an army to Northumberland; which having Danes only powerful in England, but molefted and A.D. 905. grew prevalent in Ireland: For this year they entered that kingdom, flew Carmot, king and bishop of all Ireland, a religious and a virtuous person, the son of Cukeman; and Kyrnalt, son of Murgan, king of Lagos. The year after died Asser, archbishop of St. David's, uncle to the famous and learned Asser, surnamed Menevensis, who being chancellor to his uncle the archbishop, was sent for by King Alfred to instruct his children; whose life he afterwards wrote, and was

Edward, to force his brother from his country, spoiled the country, returned home: Upon which the Danes, to return their kindness, destroyed a great part of Mercia. But within a while after, Edward having raifed a very confiderable army, gave the Danes battle, overthrew them, and flew their kings Alden and Edelwulph, with a great number of their nobles. This added very much to his dominions, which were the more increased and strengthened by the addition of the cities of London and Oxford: which upon the death of Edelred; duke of Mercia; Edward feized into his own hands; permitting his . wife Elfleda to enjoy the rest of his dukedom. 907. Shortly after, Cadelli, prince of South Wales, died, leaving behind him three fons; Howel Dha, or the Good, who fucceeded his father in the kingdom of South Wales; Meyric and Clydawc. King Edward having obtained fo fignal a victory over the Danes. and rendered his kingdom for some time quiet, began to build places of strength, which might be serviceable against a future storm: He built a eastle at Hertford. betwixt the rivers Benefic, Minier, and Lige; and also erected the borough of Wytham in Essex; and continued fometime in Wealdyne, to keep those countries in awe. But in spite of all this precaution, the Danes of Leycester and Hampton, began the following year to be very troublefome, flew a great number of English at Hotchnorton; and in their return homewarda ward, destroyed the country of Oxford. About the same time a considerable fleet from Tydwike, under the command of Uther and Rahald, failed by the western sea to Wales, and destroyed St. David's; where was fought the battle of Dinarth, and Mayloc, the fon of Peredur Gam, was flain. After this they en-A.D. 9114 tered into Herefordshire, where they were fought withal, and Rahald was flain, and the rest compelled to forswear the king's land, and never to return any more to England. King Edward, to prevent any future disturbance from such open invaders, caused a strong army to be quartered upon the fouth side of Severn; but the Danes, for all he could do, entered twice into his country, once at Werd, and then at Portogan: but were both times overthrown by the English. From thence they departed to the Isle of Stepen, whence they were forced by hunger to fail to South Wales, intending to make a confiderable prey of that country; but failing of their aim, they were constrained to make the best of their way for Ireland. But the next year, a party of Danes fought a very fevere battle with the Kentish men at Holm; but which of them obtained the victory, is not certainly reported. About the same time Anarawd, prince of North Wales, died, leaving behind him two sons, Edwal Foel, and Elis; and some say a third, named Meyric.

EDWAL FOEL.

A FTER the death of Anarawd, his eldeft fon Edwal Foel took upon him the government of North-Wales; Howel Dha holding the principality of South-Wales and Powis: At what time, a terrible comet appeared in the heavens. The fame year the city of Chefter, which had been destroyed by the Danes, was, by the procurement of Elsteda, new built and repaired, repaired, as the ancient records of that city do testify. This in the ancient copy is called Leycester, by an easy mistake for Legecestria or Chester, called by the Romans, Legionum Cestria. The next summer the men of Dublin cruelly destroyed the isle of Anglesey; and soon after, Clydawc the son of Cadelb. was unnaturally flain by his brother Meyric, about the fame time that the Danes received a cruel overthrow. by the English, at Tottenhale. But Elsleda did not long furvive the rebuilding of the city of Chefter; a woman of fingular virtues, and one that greatly strengthened the kingdom of Mercia, by building of towns and castles against the incursions of the Danes; as Strengat and Bruge, by the forest of Morph, Tamworth, Stafford, Edelburgh, Cherenburgh, Wadeburgh, and Runcofe. After this, the entered with her whole army into Wales, won Brecknock, and took the queen, with thirty-three of her men prisoners; which in Welch is called "Gwaith y Ddinas Newydh, or the battle of the new city. From hence the marched for Derby, which she took from the Danes, losing only four of her chief commanders in the action.

The occasion of these two expeditions, according to fome, was this: Huganus, lord of West Wales, perceiving King Edward to be unavoidably busy in the Danish war, gathered an army of Britains, and entering into England, destroyed the king's country. Upon the news of this, Elfleda came to Wales with a great army, fought with the Welch at Brecknock, and putting Huganus to flight, took his wife and some of his men prisoners, whom she carried with her to Mercia. Huganus being thus defeated, fled to Derby, and being there kindly received, joined himself with the king's enemies, the Danes. Elfleda being certified of that, followed him with her army; but in ftorming the gates of the town, had four of her best officers killed by Huganus. But Gwyane, Lord of the Isle of Ely, her steward, setting fire to the gates, furiously ran upon the Britains, and entered the town; upon which Huganus perceiving himself to be over-matched, chose rather to fall by the sword, than cowardly to yield himself to a woman. The next year Elsteda laid siege to the city of Leicester, which was quickly surrendered, and the Danes therein perfectly subdued. The same of these several actions being noised abroad, her neighbours became somewhat searful and timerous; and the Yorkshiremen voluntarily did her homage, and proffered their service. She died at Tamworth, after eight years rule over Mercia; and lies buried at Glocester by St. Peters.

After the death of Elfleda, king Edward most ungratefully difinherited her daughter Alfwyen; and entering into Mercia, feized all the land into his own hands; upon pretence that she, without his knowledge, (whom her mother had appointed her guardian) had privily promifed and contracted marriage with Raynald king of the Danes. But this unjust and unnatural action of king Edward's, might possibly bring upon him those vehement troubles, which prefently enfued upon it. For Leofred a Dane, and Gruffydh ap Madoc brother-in-law to the prince of West Wales, came from Ireland with a great army to Snowdon, and minding to bring all Wales and the marches thereof to their subjection, over-ran and subdued all the country to Chester, before king Edward was certified of their arrival. Whereat being fore offended, and loth to trouble his subjects for help, vowed that himself and his sons, with their fingle forces, would be revenged upon Leofred and Gruffydh; and thereupon marching to Chester, forced the city from them. Then he divided his army into two battles, whereof he and his fon Athelstane led the first, Edmund and Edred the second; and followed them so close, that he overtook them at the forest of Walewode (now Sherwode) where Leofred and Gruffydh fet upon them fo fiercely, that the king at first was in some danger; until Athelstane stepped in and wounded the Dane in the arm in that manner, that being no longer able to hold his spear, he was taken prisoner, and committed to the custody of Athelstane. In the mean time Edmund and Edred encountering encountering with Gruffydh, slew him, and brought his head to their father; and Leofred's head being likewife cut off, they were both set up upon the town of Chester; and then Edward, together with his sons, victoriously returned home. But King Edward, ha-A.D. 324-ying built Glademutham, soon after this died at Fa-randon, and his fon Alfred the same time at Oxford, and were both buried at Winchester.

Edward being dead, his base son Athelstane, for many excellent virtues appearing in him, was preferred to the crown; the worthiest prince of the Saxon blood that ever reigned. He overcame Cudfryd, the father of Raynald, King of the Danes, at York; and being invaded by Hawlas, King of Ireland, who, with all the power of the Scots and Danes marched against him, gave him battle at Brimestbury, and obtained a very notorious victory; King Hawlas, together with the King of the Scots, five Kings of the Danes and Normans being slain upon the spot: so that the whole country of England and Scotland became subject to him, which none of his predecessors ever attempted.

133. Sometime after, Owen, the son of Gruffydh, was slain by the men of Cardigan: And then Athelstane entering with his army into Wales, forced the princes thereof to pay a yearly tribute of 20 l. in gold, 300 l. in silver, and 200 head of cattle; which notwithstanding was not observed, as appears by the laws of Howel Dha, wherein it is appointed, That the Prince of Abersfraw should pay no more to the King of London, than 66 l. tribute; and that the Princes of Dinefawr and Powis should pay the like sum to the Prince of Abersfraw. But King Athelstane was not less terrible abroad, than he was awed and feared at home; the Kings of France and Norway sending him very great and costly presents, to obtain his favour, and to gain his good will.

236. This year Euneth, the fon of Clydawc, and Meyric, the fon of Cadelh died. The fame time King Athelftane removed the Britains who lived at Exeter and the neighbouring country to Cornwall; bounding them with the river Cambria (now Tamar;) as the Britains tains of Wales, with the Wey. Not long after, the A.D. 934, noble Prince Athelstane died, to the great and inexpreffible forrow of all his fubjects, and was buried at Malmefbury; and fucceeded by his brother Edmund, not inferior to him in courage; but preferable by right of nativity, being born in wedlock. In the first year of his reign, he gave a very confiderable blow to the Danes; took from them the cities of Leicester. Derby, Stafford, Lincoln, and Nottingham. Then Aulafe, King of the Danes, finding it impracticable to withfland the force of King Edmund, defired peace, and withal to be initiated into the Christian Faith; which being granted him, and all his Danes received baptilm, King Edmund standing godfather at the font: after which both parties concluding a firm and a lasting peace; Edmund honourably returned to West-Saxony.

The same year died Abloic, chief King of Ireland: And the year following, Cadelh, the son of Arthual, a hobleman of Wales, was, for what reason not discovered, imprisoned by the English. To revenge which indignity, Edwal Foel and his brother Elis, gathered their forces together, and fought against the English and Danes, but were both unhappily flain.

This Edwal Foel had fix fons, Meyric, Ievaf, Iago, Conan, Edwal, Fychan, and Roderic: and his brother Elis had iffue Conan, and a daughter, named Trawft, the mother of Conan ap Sitfylht, Gruffydh ap Sitfylht, and Blethyn ap Confyn, which two last were afterwards

Princes of Wales:

HOWEL DHA.

preferred to the principality of Wales: Notwithstanding that Edwal had left behind him feveral fons, who at first seemed to murmur at and resent the election of Howel Dha. The first thing he took care of, was to enact good and wholfom laws for the benefit of his country; which held in force in Wales, till the time of Edward the first, when the Welch received the laws of England, yet not fo generally, but that in some places they continued long after, and are still to be feen in the Welch and Latin tongue: For Howel Dha perceiving the laws and customs of his country to have grown to great abuse, sent for the Archbishop of Menevia, with the rest of the bishops and chief clergy, to the number of one hundred and forty, and all the barons and nobles of Wales, and ordered that fix of the wifest and best esteemed persons in every commote should be cited before him, at his palace called y Ty Gwyn ar Taf, or the White House upon the river Taf. Thither coming himself, he remained with his nobles, prelates, and subjects for all the Lent, in prayers and fasting, imploring the affistance and direction of God's holy Spirit, that he might reform the laws and cuftoms of the country of Wales, to the honour of God, and the peaceable government of his subjects. Towards the end of Lent, he chose out of that assembly twelve of the wifest and gravest, and persons of the greatest experience, to whom he added Blegored, a man of fingular learning, and one exquisitely versed in the laws. To these he gave commission to examine the antient laws and customs of Wales, and to collect out of them what was requisite towards the government of the country; according to which charge they retained those that were wholsom and profitable, expounded those that were doubtful and ambiguous, and abrogated them that were superfluous and hurtful: And so these laws were distinguished into three forts; the first concerned the order and regulation of the king's houshold and court; the second, the affairs of the country and commonwealth; and the last hadregard to special customs belonging to particular perfons and places. All which being publicly proclaint-

ed and generally allowed of, Prince Howel ordered three copies to be written; one for his own use, another to be laid up at his palace of Abersfraw, and the third at Dinefawr; so that the three provinces of Wales might have easy recourse to either of them, when need required. And for the better observation of these laws, he caused the Archbishop of St. David's to denounce sentence of excommunication against all such of his subjects as would not obey the same.

Within a while after, Howel, to admit nothing that might procure any countenance or authority to these his laws, accompanied with Lambert, Archbishop of St. David's, Mordas, Bishop of Bangor, and Chebur of St. Asaph, and thirteen of the most prudent and learned persons in Wales, took a journey to Rome, where the said laws being recited before the Pope, were by his holiness ratisfied and confirmed: after which, Howel, with all his retinue, returned home to his country.

The particulars of these laws are too numerous to be here inserted; only it is observable, that all matters of inheritance of land were determined and adjudged by the prince in person; or if sick, by his special deputy. And that upon view of the same land, citing together the freeholders of that place, two elders of his council, the chief justice always attending in the court, the ordinary judge of the country where the land lay, and the priest. The method of their proceeding was in this manner:

The prince fate in his judicial-feat above the rest of the court, with an elder on each hand, next to whom the freeholders on both sides, who upon that account were probably called UCHELWYR. Below the prince, at a certain distance, sate the chief justice, having the priest on his right hand, and the ordinary judge of the country concerned upon the left. The court being thus sate, the plaintist with his advocate, champion and Rhingylh or sergeant, stood on the left side of the court, as did the defendant in like manner on the right. And lastly, the witnesses on both sides appeared, and stood at the lower end of the hall, directly opposite to the chief justice, to testify the best of their knowledge in the matter in debate. After the taking the depositions of the witnesses, and a full pleading of the cause in open court, upon notice given by the sergeant, the chief justice, the priest, and the ordinary judge, withdrew themselves for a while, to consult of the matter; and then secundum allegata of probata, brought in their verdict. Whereupon the prince, after consultation had with the elders that sate next him, gave definitive sentence; excepting the cause was so obscure and intricate, that the justice of it could not appear; and then the two champions put an end to the controversy by combat.

Whilst Howel Dha is thus regulating the customs, and meliorating the laws and conftitutions of Wales; Aulafe and Reginald, Kings of the Danes, forcibly entered the country of King Edmund, who being vexed with their incessant hostility, gathered his forces together, and (as some say) by the help of Lhewelyn ap Sitsylht, who was afterwards Prince of Wales, followed them to Northumberland; and having overcome them in a pitched battle, utterly chased them out of his kingdom, and remained a whole year in those parts to regulate and bring that country to forne quiet order. But finding it impracticable to reduce the inhabitants of Cumberland to any peaceable constitution, having spoiled and wasted the country, he gave it up to Malcolm king of Scotland, upon condition that he should fend him succours in his wars whenever

A. D. 942-demanded of him. In the mean time the Welch had but little occasion to rejoice; Hubert bishop of St. David's, Marclois bishop of Bangor, and Ussa the fon of Lhafyr being dead: And shortly after the English entering into Wales with a very strong army, put the country into a great consternation; but being satisfied with the destruction and spoil of Strat Clwyd, they returned home without doing any more mischief. The same time Conan the son of Elis was like to be treacherously put to death by poison; and Everus bishop of St. David's died. The next year Edmund King of England was unluckily flain upon St. Augustine's day; but the manner of his death is variously delivered; some fay, that discovering a noted thief, who was out-lawed fitting among his guests, being transported with indignation against so confident a villain, ran upon him very furiously, who expecting nothing lefs than death, thought to die not unrevenged, and therefore with a short dagger gave the king a mortal wound in the breaft. Others report, that as the King would have rescued a fervant of his from an officer who had arrested him, he was unwittingly and unhappily flain by the fame. But however his death happened, he lies buried at Glastenbury; in whose place his brother Edred was crowned King of England, who no fooner had entered upon his government but he made an expedition against Scotland and Northumberland, which being fubdued, he received fealty and homage by oath of the Scots and Northumbrians, which they did not long observe. Shortly after Howel Dha, after a long A.D. 948. and peaceable reign over Wales, died, much lamented and bewailed of all his subjects, being a prince of a religious and a virtuous inclination, and one that ever regarded the welfare and prosperity of his people. He left iffue behind him, Owen, Run, Roderic, and Edwyn, betwixt whom and the fons of Edwal Foel, late Prince of North Wales, great wars and commotions arose afterwards about the chief rule and government of Wales.

But the fons of Howel Dha, as fome writers record, were these, viz. Owen who did not long survive his father, Eineon, Meredyth, Dyfnwal, and Rodri, the two last whereof, as is conceived, were slain in the battle fought near Lhanrwst, in the year 952, by the fons of Edwal Foel; Run lord of Cardigan, who was flain before the death of his father; Conan y Cwn, who possessed Anglesey; Edwin, who was also slain, as is supposed in the forementioned battle: There was also another battle fought betwixt Howel and Conan ap Edwal Foel for the Isle of Anglesey, wherein Conan fell; and Gruffydh his son renewing the war, was likewise overcome; and so Cyngar, a powerful person, being driven out of the island, Howel enjoyed quiet possession thereof, and of the rest of Gwynedh. It is supposed that this Howel Dha was chosen governor of Wales, during the minority of his uncle Anarawd's sons, who, at the death of their father, were too young to manage the principality; which he kept till his return from Rome, at which time Edwal Foel being come of age, he resigned to him the kingdom of Gwynedh or North Wales, together with the sovereignty of all Wales: Before which time Howel is styled Brenhin Cymry oll, that is, King of all Wales, as is seen in the preface to that body of laws compiled by him.

IEVAF and IAGO the Sons of EDWAL FOEL.

AFTER the death of Howel Dha, his fons divided betwixt them the principalities of South Wales and Powis; laying no claim to North Wales, though their father had been a general Prince of all Wales. But levaf and Iago the fons of Edwal Foel, having put by their elder brother Meyric, as a person uncapable of government, and being diffatisfied with the rule of North Wales only, imagined that the principality of all Wales was their right, as descending from the elder house; which the sons of Howel Dha denied them. Indeed, they had been wrongfully kept out of the government of North Wales during the reign of Howel; in whose time the recovery of their own was impracticable, by reason that for his moderation and other good qualities, he had attracted to himself the universal love of all the Welch. But now, he being gone, they are refolved to revenge the injury received by him upon his fons: and upon a fmall.

small pretence, endeavour to reduce the whole country of Wales to their own subjection. Ievaf and Iago were indeed descended from the elder branch; but fince Roderic the Great conferred the principality of South Wales upon his younger fon Cadelh, the father of Howel Dha, it was but just his fons should enjoy what was legally descended to them by their father: But ambition feldom gives place to equity; and therefore, right or wrong, Ievaf and Iago must have a touch for South Wales, which they enter with a great army; and being opposed, they obtained a very opportune victory over Owen and his brethren the fons of Howel, at the hills of Carno. The next year A. D. 950. the two brothers entered twice into South Wales, destroyed and wasted Dyfet, and slew Dwnwalhon lord of the country. Shortly after which, Roderic the third fon of Howel Dha died. But his brethren perceiving the folly of standing only upon the defensive, mustered all their forces together, and entering North Wales, marched as far as Lhanrwst upon the river Conwy; where Ievaf and Iago met them. A very cruel battle enfued upon this, and a very great number were flain on both fides, among whom were Anarawd the fon of Gwyriad, the fon of Roderic the Great; and Edwyn the fon of Howel Dha. But the victory plainly favoured the brothers Ievaf and Iago; fo that the Princes of South Wales were obliged to retire to Cardiganshire, whether they were warmly purfued; and that country cruelly harraffed with fire and fword. The next year Merfyn was unhappily drowned; and shortly after Congelach King of Ireland was flain.

The Scots and Northumbrians having lately fworn allegiance to King Edred, he was fcarce returned to his own country, but Aulafe, with a great army, landed in Northumberland, and was with much rejoicing received by the inhabitants. But before he could fecure himfelf in the government, he was shamefully banished the country; and so the Northumbrians elected one Hircius, the fon of Harold for their king. But to shew the inconstancy of an unsettled multitude, they foon grew weary of Hircius, and after three years space expelled him, and voluntarily submitted themselves to Edred, who after he had reigned eight years, died, and was buried at Winchester. To him fucceeded Edwin the fon of Edmund, a man fo immoderately given to venery, that he forcibly married another man's wife; for which, and other irregularities, his subjects, after four years reign, set up his brother Edgar, who was crowned in his stead; with A. D. 958. grief of which, he foun ended his days. The fummer, that fame year, proved fo immoderately hot, that it caused a very diffinal plague in the following fpring, which fwept away a great number of people; before which, Gwgan the fon of Gwyriad the fon of Roderic died. At this time, Ievaf and Iago forcibly managed the government of all Wales, and acted according to their own good pleasure, no one daring to confront or refift them. But for all their power, the fons of Abloic King of Ireland, ventured to land in Anglesey; and having burnt Holyhead, wasted the country of Lhyn. Also the sons of Edwyn the son of Colhoyn, destroyed and ravaged all the country to 061. Towyn, where they were intercepted and flain. About the fame time died Meyric the fon of Cadfan, Rytherch bishop of St. David's, and Cadwalhon ap Owen. Not long after, the country of North Wales was cruelly wasted by the army of Edgar King of England; the occasion of which invasion was the non-payment of the tribute that the king of Aberffraw, by the laws of Howel Dha, was obliged to pay to the King of London. But at length a peace was concluded upon these conditions, that the Prince of North Wales, instead of money, should pay to the King of England the tribute of 300 wolves yearly; which creature was then very pernicious and destructive to England and Wales. This tribute being duly performed for two years, the third year there were none to be found in any part of the Island; so that afterwards the Prince of North Wales became exempt from pay-

these means vanished; there threatened another cloud from Ireland; for the Irish being animated by their late expedition, landed again in Anglesey; and having flain Roderic the fon of Edwal Foel, they destroyed Aberffraw. And this danger being over, Ievaf and A. D. 967. Iago who had jointly and agreeably, till now, managed the government of Wales from the death of Howel Dha, began to quarrel and difagree among themselves; and Iago having forcibly laid hands upon his brother Ievaf, confined him to perpetual Imprisonment. These heats and animosities between the two brothers, gave occasion and opportunity to Owen prince of South-Wales to carve for himself, who presently feized to his hands the country of Gwyr. And to augment the miseries of the Welch at this time, Mactus the fon of Harold, with an army of Danes, entered the ifle of Anglesey, and spoiled Penmon. King Edgar was so indulgent to these Danes, that he permitted them to inhabit through all England; infomuch that at length they became to be as numerous and as ftrong as the English themselves; and fell into fuch lewd courses of debauchery, and fuch horrid drinking, that very great mischief ensued thereupon. The king to reform this immoderate fortishness, enacted a law, that every one should drink by measurre, and fo stamped a mark upon every vessel, how far it should be filled. But Harold having taken Penmon, made subject to himself the whole isle of Anglesey, which however he did not keep long, being forced to quit the fame, and to return home; as did the fleet of king Alfred, which he had fent to subdue Caerlheon upon Use. And now being rid of the English and Danes, the Welch begin to raife commotions among themselves. Ievaf continued still in prison, to rescue whom, his fon Howel raised his power, and marched against his uncle Iago, who being vanquished in fight, was forced to quit the country, to fave himfelf. Howel having won the day, took his eldest uncle, Meyric the fon of Edwal prisoner, and pulled out both his eyes, clapt him in prison, where in a woeful condition he shortly died, leaving behind him two fons, Edwal and Ionafal:

Ionafal; the first of which lived to be afterwards prince of Wales, and to revenge upon the posterity of Howel, that unnatural barbarity shewed to his father. But though Howel delivered his father from his long and tedious imprisonment, yet he did not think fit to restore him to his principality; for whether by age or infirmity he was incapable, Howel took upon him the sole government of Wales, which he kept and maintained for his lifetime, but afterwards it descended to his brethren. For Ievas had iffue besides this Howel; Meyric, Ievas, and Cadwalhan; all three men of great repute and esteem.

About this time died Morgan Hen, in his younger days called Morgan Mawr, being an hundred years old, having lived fifty years after the death of his wife Elen, daughter of Roderic the great, by whom he had one fon called Owen. Morgan was a valiant and a victorious prince, and well beloved of his fubjects; but sometime before his death, Owen, the son of prince Howel Dha, laid claim to Ystradwy and Ewy, (called the two Sleeves of Gwent Uwchcoed) being the right of Morgan, and feized upon them to his own use. But the matter, through the mediation of the clergy and nobility, being by both parties referred to the decision of Edgar king of England, it was by him adjudged, that the faid Lands did of right belong to Morgan, and to the dioceis of Lhandaff; and that Owen ap Howel Dha had wrongfully possessed himself of them. The charter of the faid award was made before the archbishops, bishops, earls, and barons of England and Wales; as may be feen at Lhandaff, in an old manuscript called y Cwtta Cyfarwydd o Forgannwg. And there is fomewhat to the fame purpose in the old book of Lhandaff; only the mistake in both is, that they make Howel Dha the intruder into the faid lands, who had been dead at least twenty years before king Edgar began his reign,

HOWEL APIEVAF.

OWEL, after that he had expelled his uncle Iago, and forced him to quit his own dominions, took upon himfelf the government of Wales, in right of his father, who though alive, yet by reason of his years, was willing to decline it. About the same time Dwnwalhon Prince of Stradclwyd, took his journey for Rome; and Edwalhon son of Owen Prince of South Wales died. But the English received a greater blow by the death of King Edgar, who was a prince of excellent qualities, both warlike and religious, and one that founded several monasteries and religious houses, and particularly at Bangor.

For Iago ap Edwal having fled to King Edgar, prevailed fo far with him, that he brought an army into North Wales to restore him to his right. Being advanced as far as Bangor, he was honourably received by Howel, who, at his request, was contented his uncle Iago should have a share in the government, as he had in his father Ievas's time. Then Edgar founded a new church at Bangor, on the fouth-fide of the Cathedral, which he dedicated to the bleffed Virgin Miary; and confirmed the ancient liberties of that fee, and bestowed lands and gifts upon it: And then with Howel and Iago in his company, he marched towards Chefler, where met him, by appointment, fix kings more, viz. Kenneth King of the Scots, Malcolm King of Cumberland, Macon King of Man, and Dyfnwal, Sifrethus, and Ithel, three British kings. These eight princes having done homage, and fworn fealty to him, entered with him into his barge, and rowed him, four of each fide, from his palace to the church or monastery of St. John Baptist, and divine service being ended, in like state rowed him back again. To King Edgar succeeded his son Edward, surnamed the younger; who, after four years reign, was treacheroufly flain through the treason of his step-mother Elfrida, to make room for her own fon Edelred, upon pretence of whose minority, being a child only of seven years, the might have the management of the A.D. 976, kingdom in her own hands. But whilft the English were in this waving and unfettled condition, Eineon, the fon of Owen king of South Wales, the fecond time entered the country of Gwyr, and having spoiled and wasted it, returned home again. This, though an unfufferable affront to Howel Prince of North Wales, yet he thought it most convenient to pass by and wink at it; being then warmly engaged against the aiders and abettors of his uncle Iago; and marching against them with a numerous army, confifting of Welch and English, pursued them to Lhyyn and Kelynnoc Fawr, the very extremity of Wales; where, after cruel ravaging and milerable harraffing of the country about, Iago was at last taken prisoner; but so generously received by Howel, that he granted his uncle to enjoy his portion of the country peaceably for his life. But he did not deal fo kindly with his uncle Edwal Fychan the fon of Edwal Foel; who, for what pretence, not discovered, was slain by him. It may be, that being in a manner fecure of his uncle Iago, he was apprehenfive that Edwal Fychan would put in his pretence for the principality; and therefore he judged it convenient to remove this obstacle in time, and to fend him to feek for it in another world. For nothing can be the cause of greater injustice and inhumanity in princes, than the jealoufy and apprehension of rivals and pretenders to their government; to prevent which, they will facrifice any thing that is just and legal, fo that the person offending be removed out of the way, But though Howel had murdered his uncle Edwal Fychan, yet he could not remove all disputes and pretences to North Wales: For at that same time that he was employed in this unnatural action, Cystenyn Dhu, or Constantine the Black, son to Iago then prisoner to Howel, having hired an army of Danes, under the command of Godfryd the fon of Harold, marched against against his cousin Howel, and entering North Wales, destroyed Anglesey and Lhyn. Whereupon Howel having drawn his forces together, fet upon them at a place called Gwyath Hirbarth, where the Danes received a very shameful overthrow, and Constantine the fon of Iago was flain. But another army of Danes fared better in England, who having landed at, and spoiled Southampton, over-ran the countries of Devon and Cornwal, burnt the town of Bodman, whereby the cathedral church of St. Petrokes, with the bishop's palace, were laid in ashes; by reason of which disaster, that bishop's see was translated to St. Germains, where it continued till the uniting thereof to Crediton. Within a while after, St. Dunstan archbishop of Canterbury died, a pious and religious person, who foretold of very great and unsupportable calamities, the English should endure by the cruel outrages of the Danes.

But Godfryd the fon of Harold being highly difgusted at the shameful rout he received of Howel in the quarrel of Constantine, was resolved to recover his credit, and to revenge himself of the Welch. And accordingly he landed with a powerful army in West Wales, where, after that he had spoiled the land of Dyfed, with the church of St. David's, he fought the famous battle of Lhanwanoc. But Harold being forced upon this to retire and forfake the country, the following year Duke Alfred with a confiderable number of English came to supply his room, and to conquer the Welch. But he received as little advantage or honour as Harold in this expedition; for after that he had laid waste and destroyed the town of Brecnock, with fome part of South Wales, he was shamefully vanquished, and his army almost totally cut off by the troops of Eineon the fon of Owen Prince of South Wales, and Howel Prince of North Wales, who had joined their forces against him. And now the Welch having quite disabled the Danes and the English, began to fall to their old courses, to make use of their prosperity and quietness from abroad, for quarrelling and creating diffurbances at home. The inhabitants 9823

of Gwentland imagined themselves very strong and powerful, and therefore must needs endeavour to shake off their allegiance to their prince, and to fet up one of their own making. Owen Prince of South Wales. to pacify the rebellious humour of these seditious and turbulent people, fent his fon Eineon to perfuade them to obedience. But a distracted multitude got loose, is not to be worked upon by arguments, which Eineon fatally experienced, who was so far from persuading them in their allegiance by fair means, that they prefently fet upon him, and thinking that they had the bird in their fift, who was next to fucceed, put him to present death. And thus most ignobly fell this worthy prince, who, in his father's time was the only support of his country, being a flout and a valiant commander, and one famously experienced in the art and discipline of war. He had issue two sons, Edwyn and Tewdor Mawr, or Theodore the Great, out of whose loins feveral Princes of South Wales were fince defcended. But Howel prince of North Wales did not regard this diffention and rebellion in South Wales, and therefore took opportunity to strengthen and multiply his army, with which he marched the next year for England, intending to revenge the incursions and invalions of the English upon Wales, and to destroy and waste their country. But having entered into England, he was presently fought with, upon which, being resolved either to return victoriously, or to die couragiously, he fell in among them, but in the action was flain, leaving no iffue behind him to fucceed in his principality, though in some ancient genealogies he is reputed to have a fon called Conan y Cwn.

CADWALHON AP IEVAF.

HOWEL, the fon of leval, had for a long time enjoyed the principality of North-Wales, more by main force and usurpation, than any right of succession he could pretend to it. For Ionafal and Edwal the fons of Meyric, the eldest son of Edwal Foel, were living, and tho' their father had been rejected as unfit for government, yet that was no reason to deprive them of their right. Indeed, Howel could pretend to no other right or title, than that his father leval had been prince of North-Wales before him, and this he thought fufficient to maintain his possession against the rightful heir, who was far unable to oppose or molest his wrongful usurpation. But he being flain in this rash expedition against the English, and leaving no iffue to fucceed him in the crown, his brother Cadwalhon thought he might rightfully take upon him the government of North-Wales, feeing his father and his brother had without any molestation enjoyed the fame. However, to make his title fecure, he thought fit to remove all manner of rubs which might create any dispute concerning his right of succession, and to that end, concluded it necessary to make away his cousins Ionafal and Edwal the lawful heirs; the first of which he executed accordingly, but Edwal being aware of his intention, privately made his escape, and so prevented his wicked defign. This unnatural dealing with his cousins Ionafal and Edwal cost Cadwalhon not only his life, but the loss of his principality and the utter ruin of his father's house. For he had scarce enjoyed his government one year, but Meredith the fon of Owen prince of South-Wales entered into North-Wales, flew Cadwalhon and his brother Meyric, the only remains of the house of Ievaf, and under the pretence pretence of conquest, possessed himself of the whole country. Here we may observe and admire the wisdom of providence, in permitting wrong and oppression for some time to flourish and wax great, and afterwards by fecret and hidden methods, in reftoring the posterity of the right and lawful heir to the just and pristine estate of his ancestors. For after the death of Edwal Foel, Meyric who by right of birth was legally to fucceed, was not only deprived of his just and rightful inheritance, but had his eyes most inhumanly put out, and being condemned to perpetual imprisonment, for grief of being so bar-barously treated, quickly ended his days. But tho his brothers Ievaf and Iago, and Howel and Cadwalhon the fons of the former fuccessively enjoyed the principality of North-Wales; yet not one died naturally or free from the revenge of Meyric's ejection. For Ievaf was imprisoned by his brother lago, and he with his fon Constantine, by Howel the fon of Ievaf, and afterwards Howel fell by the hands of the English, and his brethren Cadwalhon and Meyric were both flain by Meredith ap Owen. On the other fide, Edwal ab Meyric who was right heir of North-Wales after the death of his brother Ionafal, escaped the snare intended by Cadwalhon; and Meredith ap Owen after some time leaving North Wales exposed to the enemies, by reason he had enough to do to preserve South-Wales, Edwal was received of the North-Wales men as their true prince.

MEREDITH AP OWEN.

EREDITH having won the field and flaint Cadwalhon and his brother Meyric, the only feeming pretenders to the principality of North-Wales, took upon himfelf the rule and government of it. But before he could be well confirmed in his dominions, Godfryd the fon of Harold, third time entered into the ifle of Anglesey, and having taken Lhyarch the son of Owen with 2000 men prisoners, most cruelly put out his eyes; which so startled and struck such a terror into Prince Meredith, that with the rest of his army, he forthwith made his escape and fled to Cardigan. This loss to the Welch was the same year seconded by another, but of another fort; for there happened fuch a dismal and unusual murrain, that the best part of the cattle of Wales perished. Neither were the English at this time free from adversities and troubles, for the Danes landed again in England with feveral armies, and at Westport and Witest, gave two English lords, Godan and Britchwould fuch a blow, that the king was forced to buy his peace, with the payment of 10,000 pound, which was termed, Dane Gelt. But within a while after, King Edelred violated and brake the peace himself, and prepared a great fleet, thinking to vanguish the Danes at sea; But it proved far otherwise, and much contrary to his expectation, all his ships being either destroyed or taken, together with the Admiral, Alfric earl of Mercia. The Danes being animated with this victory failed up to the mouth of the Humber, and landing in Yorkshire, spoiled and destroyed the cities of York and Lindfey; but in their march through Northumberland, were routed and put to flight by Godwyn and Fridgift, two English generals who were sent to oppose them. The same time Anlas king of Norway, and Swane of Denmark with 94 gallies failed up the Thames and besieged London, which the citizens so bravely defended, that at length the Danes thought best to raise and quit the siege. But though they could effect nothing upon the city, yet the country was at their mercy and therefore leaving their ships, they landed and wasted with fire and sword all Kent, Effex, Suffex, Surry and Hampshire Wherefore King Edelred instead of manly opposition in the field, fends ambaffadors to treat about another payment, and so the Danes being satisfied with a great sum of money and victuals, lay quiet that winter at Southampton, 66

ampton. Upon this composition, Anlas was invited by Adelred, and royally entertained, and being dismissed with very many rich presents, he promised upon oath to depart the kingdom and never to molest it any more, which he faithfully performed. Whilft the English and the Danes were thus for a time agreed, Ievaf the fon of Edwal having spent for feveral years a retired and a private life, died: And was quickly followed by Owen the fon of Howel Dha Prince of South Wales. This Owen had three fons, Eincon who in his father's time was flain by the rebels of Gwentland, and Lhywarch who had his eyes put out by Godfryd the son of Harold the Dane, and Prince Meredith, who had already conquered North Wales, and now upon his father's death takes possession also of South Wales, without any regard had to Edwyn and Theodore the fons of Eineon his elder brother. But upon his advancement to his new principality, he was like to meet with no very fmall troubles; for the Danes at Hampton quickly broke the league with king Adelred, and failing towards the West mightily annoyed the coasts of Cornwal and Devonshire, and at last landed in South Wales. Having destroyed St. David's, Lhanbadarn, Lhanrhystyd, Lhandydoch, and feveral other religious places; the country was fo cruelly haraffed and weakened that Prince Meredith was forced to compound with them, and to pay a tribute of one penny for every person within his dominions, which in Welch was called Glwmaem, otherwise, the tribute of the black army. And Ireland too at this time received no inconfiderable blow from the Danes, who slew Elwmaen the son of Abloic king of the country, and fo spoiled and ravaged that kingdom, that a great number of the natives perished by famine.

The year following Owen the son of Dysnwal, a man of considerable note and reputation among the Welch, was slain; besides which, nothing remarkable happened this year. But the next year Edwin ap Eineon, who was right heir to the principality of South Wales, having drawn to his help a great army of English and Danes hostibly entered into Meredith's country, spoiled all the land of Cardigan, Dyfed, Gwyr, Kydwely and St. David's, and received hostages of the chief perfons of those countries to own him as their rightful prince. To return these outrages upon Edwyn, Meredith destroyed the town of Radnor, spoiled Glamorgan, and carried the chiefest men therein prisoners, who paying their ransom, were set at liberty. But whilst Wales was in this tottering condition, and scarce any place free from hostility; it happily fell out, that Meredith and Edwyn were made friends, and the differences composed between them, so that the English and Danes who came in with Edwyn, and who expected to fare best by these civil disturbances of the Welch, were unexpectedly cashiered and sent home. And foon after this agreement, Cadwalhon, the only fon of Meredith, died, which rendered the composition between Meredith and Edwyn more firm, by reason that this latter thought now, without any dispute to succeed Meredith in his principality. But this fell short of his aim, for Meredith being very much diffurbed in South Wales, had fo much work upon his hands to defend that country, that he left North Wales open and exposed to the common enemy, which the Danes were quickly acquainted with, and fo landing in Angleley, they ravaged and laid waste the whole island. The North Wales men finding themselves thus forsaken by Meredith, and their country like to be over-run by the Danes, if not timely prevented, fet up Edwal the fon of Meyric, the indifputable heir of North Wales, though long kept from it, and owned him for their prince. But those incessant wars and commotions in South Wales, occafioned a very difmal famine and scarcity in the country, of which a very confiderable number of people perished, And thus Meredith who had once conquered North Wales, and for a long time had got poffession of South Wales, without any right or title to either, was now obliged to relinquish the one, and was scarce able to maintain the other.

Edwal

EDWAL AP MEYRIC.

HDWAL after a long and tedious expectation, being now joyfully received by the North Wales men for their prince, endeavoured the first thing to defend his subjects from the injuries and depredations they received from the Danes. And having in a meafure effected that, he was accosted by another enemy; for Meredith being resolved to revenge the indignity and difgrace put upon him by the North Wales men, in depriving him of the government of their country, gathered and mustered together all his power, intending to recover again that principality. Being advanced as far as Lhangwm, Edwal met him, and in plain battle routed his army; in which action, Theodore or Tewdor Mawr, Meredith's nephew was flain, leaving behind him two fons, Rhys and Rytherch, and a daughter named Elen. But it is probable that it was not Tewdor Mawr, but his brother Edwyn that was flain in this battle, which also seems rather to have been fought at Hengwm in Ardudwy in Merionethshire, then at Lhangwm, for in that place there are to this day certain monuments of victory to be feen; as heaps of stones, tomb-stones and columns, which they call Curneddi Hengwm. Edwal returning home triumphantly after this victory, thought he had now fecured himfelf in his government, and expected to enjoy his dominions quietly, and without any moleftation. But he had fcarce recovered the fatigue of the last engagement, when Swane the fon of Harold having lately pillaged and wasted the isle of Man, landed in North Wales, whom Edwal endeavouring to oppose, was slain in the encounter leaving one fon behind him, called Iago. Within

Within a while after the Danes returned again against St. David's, and destroying all before them with fire and fword, flew Morgeney or Urgeney, bishop of that diocese. Prince Meredith being highly concerned at the mischiefs these barbarous people continually did to his country, and the more, because he was not able to repel their infolencies, out of grief and vexation died; having iffue one only daughter named Angharad, who was twice married; first to Lhewelyn ap Sitfyhlt, and after his death to Confyn Hirdref, or as others think, to Confyn ap Gwerystan. She had children by both husbands, which occasioned afterwards great diffurbances and civil commotions in Wales, the iffue of both adventures pretending a right of succession to the principality of South Wales.

AEDAN AP BLEGORAD.

DWAL Prince of North Wales being killed in the battle against Swane, and having no other issue than Iago, who was a minor, and too young to take upon him the government; and Meredith Prince of South Wales dying without any other iffue than a daughter, caused very heavy quarrels and contentions among the Welch, several without any colour of right, putting in their claim and pretenfions to the government. In North Wales, Conan the fon of Howel, and Aedan the fon of Blegorad were the chief aspirers to that principality; and because they could not agree who should be the man, they fairly consented to try the matter in open field, where Conan had the misfortune to be flain; and fo Aedan was victoriously proclaimed Prince of North Wales. But who this Aedan was descended from, or what colour or pretence he could lay to the principality, cannot be as much as guessed at, there being none of that name to be met with in any Welch records, excepting that Blegorad who is mentioned in the line of Howel Dha, whose estate and quality was too mean, that his posterity should lay any claim to the principality of of Wales. But be that how it will, Aedan after his victory over Conan ap Howel, was owned Prince by the North Wales men, over whom he bore rule for the space of twelve years; though besides his conquest of Conan ap Howel, there being nothing recorded of him, excepting his being slain, together with his four fons by Lhewelyn ap Sitfylht.

But whilft the Welch are in this inconstant and unfettled condition, the Scots in Ireland began to grow powerful, and having destroyed the town and country of Develyn, they took Gulfath and Ubiad, two Irish lords, prisoners, whose eyes they most inhumanly put out. The Danes also, who had lately made their incursions into South Wales, began now to molest the English; having landed in the West, passed through the counties of Somerset, Dorset, Hampshire and Suffex. destroying and burning all before them. Having advanced without any opposition, as far as the river-Medway, they laid siege to Rochester, which the Kentish men endeavouring to preserve, assembled themselves together, and gave the Danes battle, but were vanquished in the undertaking. King Edelred was then in Cumberland, where the Danes were more numerously planted, which country he kept quiet and in subjection. But in the mean time another army of Danes landed in the West, against whom the country people of Somersetshire assembling themselves, shewed their readiness to attack them, but wanting a head to direct them, were easily put to their heels, and the Danes ruled and commanded the country at their pleasure. The King being forely vexed at the infolencies and restless depredations of the Danes, thought convenient to strengthen himself by some powerful affinity, and to that end, fends ambassadors to Richard duke of Normandy, desiring his daughter Emma in marriage, marriage, and fuccours to repel the Danish incurfions. Here it is observable, that as the Saxons being formerly called over as friends and allies to the well-meaning Britains, violently and wrongfully possessed themselves of the greatest part of the island; fo now the Normans being invited to aid the English against the Danes, took so good a liking to the country, that they never gave over their design of gaining it, till at last they became conquerors of the whole island. The mischief of calling in the Normans, though foretold to King Adelred, he was so far concerned about the present calamities received by the Danes, that he was deaf to all futurities, how dangerous and mischievous soever they might prove. And therefore being puffed up with hopes of increase of strength by this new affinity, he fent private letters to all cities and towns throughout his dominions where the Danes were quartered, requiring them all upon St. Brice's night to maffacre the Danes, which was accordingly performed with much unanimity and fecrecy. This cruel difafter was so far from discouraging the Danes, that they now began to vow the eradication of the English nation, and to revenge that unmanly massacre of their country-men; to which end they landed in Devonshire, and over-running the country with fire and fword, spared nothing that had the least spark of life in it. The city of Exeter they razed to the ground, and flew Hugh the Norman, whom the Queen had recommended to the government of it. To prevent their further incursions, Almarus Earl of Devon gathered a great army out of Hampshire and Wiltshire, and the country thereabouts, and marched with a refolution stoutly to oppose the Danes, who put Almarus to flight and purfued him to Wilton and Salisbury, which being ransacked and plundered, they carried the pillage thereof triumphantly to their ships,

A.D. 1004. The next year Swane, a prince of great repute in Denmark, landed upon the coast of Norfolk and laid fiege to Norwich, and wasted the country thereabouts. But Wolfkettel duke of that country, being too weak to oppose him, thought it most convenient to make a peace with the Dane; which was quickly broke; and then Swane marched privately to Thetford, which after he had spoiled and ransacked, he returned with his prey to his ships. Wolfkettel hearing this, privately drew up his forces, and floutly marched against the enemy; but being far inferior in number, the Danes got the day, and afterwards failed to their own country. Within two years after, the Danes returned again. bringing with them their usual companions, the fire, the fword, and the spoil, and landed at Sandwich; which after they had burnt and pillaged, they failed to the ifle of Wight, where they took up their winterquarters till Christmas: And then coming forth thence, they over-ran, by feveral parties the countries of Hampshire and Berkshire, as far as Reading, Wallingford and Colfey; devouring up, for want of other plunder, all the provisions and victuals they found in the houses, and retributed the same with fire and fword at their departure. In their return they met with the army of the West Saxons near Effington, but this confifting only of a raw and unexperienced rabble, they eafily broke through, and paffing triumphantly by the gates of Winchester, they got fafe with great booty to the ifle of Wight. King Adelred all this while lay at his manor-house in Shropshire, much troubled and concerned at these uninterrupted devastations of the Danes. But the nobility of England, rather to fave some than lose all they possessed, bought their peace of the Danes for the fum of . 30,000 pound; during which interval, King Adelred roufing his drooping spirits, ordained, that every three hundred hides of land, one hide being as much as one plough can sufficiently till, through his dominions, should man out a ship, and every eight hides a corflet and a helmet; besides which the king had no inconfiderable navy fent him from Normandy, fleet fleet when rendezvoused at Sandwich seemed terrible in those days, and was the greatest that ever before then rode upon the British sea. And now, one might have thought, that all things would go well with the English, when of a sudden another cloud appears; for one Wilnot, a nobleman of Suffex, being banished by King Adelred, got to fea with a fmall number of fhips, and practifed pyracy along the coasts of Britain, and mightily annoyed all merchants and paffengers. Brightrych, brother to the traiterous Edric Earl of A.D. 10081 Mercia, thinking to advance his reputation by fome fignal exploit, promifed to bring Wilnot dead or alive before him: To which end, he fets forth with a confiderable fleet; which meeting with a terrible ftorm, was by the tempest driven back, and wrecked upon the shores; so that a great number of the ships were drowned, and the rest burnt by Wilnot and his company. Brightrych being abashed with this unfortunate beginning, returned ingloriously by the Thames back to London; fo that this great preparation against the Danes, was dashed to pieces, and came to no-

The Danes were not ignorant of the misfortune the English received by this storm, and without any further enquiry, landed at Sandwich, and fo passed on to Canterbury, which they intending to destroy, was by the citizens bought off for 3000 l. Passing from thence, through Kent, Suffex and Hampshire, they came to Berkshire, where King Edelred at length met with them, and purposing resolutely to set upon them, was by the cunning infinuations and fubtile arguments of traytor Edric diffuaded from fighting. The Danes being thus delivered from the danger which they certainly expected, passed on joyfully by the city of London, and with great booty returned to their ships. The next year they landed again at Ipswich, upon Afcension day, where Wolfkettel entertained them with a sharp encounter; but being overpowered by number, he was forced to give back, and yield the day to the Danes. Passing from thence to Cambridge, they met with Ethelstan, King Edelred's nephew by his fifter, who with an army was come to oppose them; but the Danes proving too powerful, he with many other noblemen were slain; among whom were duke Oswyn and the Earls Edwyn and Wolfrike. From hence they passed through Essex, leaving no manner of cruelty and barbarity unpractised, and returned laden with booty to their ships, which lay in the Thames.

A. D. 1010. But they could not contain themselves long in their vessels; and therefore sallying out, they passed by the river side to Oxford, which they ransacked over again; adding to their prey, Buckingham, Bedford, Hartford, and Northamptonshire; and having accomplished that year's cruelties, at Christmas they returned to their ships. Yet the prey of the country from the Trent southward, would not satisfy these unmerciful barbaterians; but as soon as the season gave them leave to peep out of their dens, they laid fiege to the city of Canterbury, which being delivered up by the treachery of Almarez the archdeacon, was condemned to blood and aftes, and Alfege the archbishop carried prisoner to the Danish sleet, where he was at length most cruelly put to death. The next year Swane, king of Denmark, came up the Humber, and landed at Gainesborow; whether repaired to him Uthred Earl of Northumberland, with his people, the inhabitants of Lindsey, with all the countries northward of Watling-street, being a highway crossing from the east to the west sea, and gave their oath and hostages to obey him. Whereupon, King Swane perceiving his undertaking to prove fo fortunate beyond expectation, committed the care of his fleet to his fon Cnute, and marched himself first to Oxford, and then to Winchester; which cities, whether for fear of further calamities, readily acknowledged him for their king. From thence he marched for London, where King Edelred then lay; and which was fo froutly defended by the citizens, that he was like to effect nothing against that town; and therefore he directed his course to Wallingford and Bath, where the principal men of West Saxon yielded him subjection. The Londoners too, at last fearing his fury

- fury and displeasure, made their peace, and sent him hostages; which city being received to mercy, Swane, from that time was accounted king of all England. King Edelred perceiving all his affairs in England to go against him, and his authority and government reduced to so narrow a compass, having sent his queen, with his two fons Edward and Alfred, to Normandy, he thought convenient within a while after to follow himself. Being honourably received by his brother-in-law Richard; he had not been there long but news arrived of the death of Swane, and that he was defired by the English to return to his kingdom, Being animated and comforted with this furprising news, he set forward with a great army for England, and landing at Lyndsey, he cruelly harraffed that province, by reason that it had owned subjection to Cnute the fon of Swane, whom the Danes had elected king in his father's stead. King Cnute being at Ipswich, and certified of the arrival of King Edelred, and the devastation of Lyndsey; fearing that his authority was going down the wind, barbarously cut off the hands and noses of all the hostages he received from the English, and presently struck sail for Denmark. And whilft England was in this general confusion, there fell out no less a storm in Ireland; for Brian king of that island, and his son Murcath, with other kings of the country subject to Brian, joined their forces against Sutric the son of Abloic king of of Dublin, and Mailmorda king of Lagenes. Sutric being of himself too weak to encounter so numerous a multitude, hired all the pyrates and rovers who cruifed upon the feas, and then gave Brian battle, who, with his fon Murcath, was flain; and on the other fide, Mailmorda, and Broderic General of the auxiliaries.

But Cnute, though he was in a manner forced to A. D. 1013. forfake England upon the recalling of King Edelred, yet he did not abandon all his pretence to the kingdom; and therefore the next year he came to renew his claim, and landed with a strong sleet in West Sex, where he exercised very great hostility. To prevent his incursions. Edric and Edmund bastardfon to Edelred, raised their forces separately; but when both armies were united, they durft not, whether for fear, or the diffention of the two generals, fight with the Danes. Edmund therefore passed to the North, and joined with Uthred duke of Northumberland, and both together descended and spoiled Stafford, Leicester, and Shropshire. On the other fide. Cnute marched forcibly through Buckingham, Bedford, Huntingtonshire, and so by Stafford passed toward York, whither Uthred haftened, and finding no other remedy, submitted himself, with all the Northumbrians, to Cnute, giving hostages for the performance of what they then agreed upon. But nevertheless this submission, Uthred was treacherously flain, not without the permission of Cnute, and his dukedom bestowed upon one Egrick a Dane; whereupon Edmund left them, and went to his father, who lay fick at London. Cnute returning to his ships prefently followed, and failed up the Thames towards London; but before he could draw nigh the city, King Edelred was dead; having prolonged a long and troublesome reign for thirty-seven years. After his decease, the English nobility chose his base son Edmund, for his eminent strength and hardiness in war, furnamed Ironfide, for their king. Upon this Cnute brought his whole fleet up the river to London, and having cut a deep trench round about the town, invested it on all sides; but being valourously repulsed by the defendants, he detached the best part of his army to fight with Edmund, who was marching to raise the siege; and both armies coming to battle at Proman by Gillingham, Cnute with his Danes were put to flight. But as foon as time and opportunity would give him leave to increase his forces, Cnute gave Edmund a second battle at Caerstane; but Edric, Almar, and Algar under hand fiding with the Danes, Edmund was hard put to it, to maintain the fight obstinately, till night and weariness parted them. Both armies having fufficiently fuffered in this action, Edmund went to West Sex to reinforce himself, and the

Danes returned to the fiege of London, where Edmund quickly followed, raifed the fiege, and forced Cnute and his Danes confusedly to betake themselves to their ships, and then entered triumphantly into the city. Two days after, passing the Thames at Brentford, he fell upon the enemies backs; by which lucky opportunity obtaining a confiderable victory, he returned again to raise recruits among the West-Saxons. Cnute, upon Edmund's removal, appeared again before London, and invested it by land and water; but all in vain; the befieged fo manfully and refolutely defending themselves, that it was impracticable to master the town before Edmund could come to the relief of it. And this they presently experienced; for Edmund, after having augmented his forces, croffed again the Thames at Brentford, and came to Kent in pursuit of Cnute, who upon engaging, was fo shamefully defeated at first, and his men put to that terrible flight, that there wanted nothing of a full and absolute victory. but the true loyalty of the traytor Edric, who perceiving the victory to incline to Edmund, and the Danes like to receive their mortal and final blow, cryed aloud, Fled Engle, Fled Engle, Edmund is dead, and thereupon fled with that part of the army under his command, leaving the king over-powered with number. By this defertion the English were at the last overthrown, and a great number slain; among whom were Duke Edmund, Duke Alfric, Duke Godwyn, and Ulfkettel, the valiant Duke of the East-Angles, together with all the English cavalry, and a great part of the nobility. After this victory, Cnute marched triumphantly to London, and was crowned king; but Edmund preparing to try his fortune in another field, mustered together all the forces he could, and meeting with Cnute in Gloucestershire, intended to give him battle: but confidering what cruel and unnatural bloodshed had already happened, both generally agreed to put an end to their tedious quarrel by fingle combat; and the place being appointed, Edmund and Cnute fell to it very vigouroufly, till at last Cnute perceiving it impracticable to vanquish a man of Iron-

fides, laid down his weapon, moving this composition, to divide the kingdom fairly betwixt them : Edmund was not displeased at the offer, and therefore both parties submitted to this decision, that Edmund should rule the West-Saxons and the South ; Cnute in Mercia and all the North; and fo they parted friends, Cnute, moving to London, and Edmund to Oxford. But Edric was not pleased, that Edmund should have any share at all of the government, and therefore he is refelved to conspire against his life. and to deliver the whole kingdom of England into the hands of Cnute; of whom he might reasonably expect for this, and other traiterous fervices, a very ample and an answerable return. This he committed to one of his own fons to put in execution, an imp of the old stock, and one early versed in wicked and traiterous designs; who perceiving the king go to ftool, thurst a sharp knife up his fundament, of which wound he presently died. Edric being quickly certified of the fact, posted it up to London, and with great joy and loud acclamations came to Cnute. greeting him as fole king of England, and withal, telling him in what manner, and by whose means his old enemy King Edmund was affaffinated and killed at Oxford. Cnute, though pleased at the death of Edmund, was a person of greater honour than to commend so horrible a deed, though done to an enemy. and therefore told Edric, that he would without fail take care to reward him, as his deferts required, and would advance him above all the nobility of England, which was quickly performed, his head being placed upon the highest tower in London for a terror to fuch villainous traitors to their king. Edric being thus deservedly disappointed of the mighty thoughts he entertained of greatness, upon the advancement of King Cnute, this generous Dane fcorned his baseness, and so having paid him a traitors reward, caused execution to be done upon all Edric's accomplices, and those that confented to the base murder of that brave Prince King Edmund.

About the same time there happened no small di-A. D. 1018. fturbance and commotions in Wales; Lhewelyn ap Sytfylht having for some years fat still and quiet, began now to bestir himself; and having drawn all his forces together, marched against Aedan, who forcibly and without any legal pretence, had entered upon, and for all this time had kept himfelf in the government of North Wales, Aedan would not eafily eject himself from what had been so long in his posfession to maintain which, he gave Lhewelyn battle: But the day going against him, himself, with his four fons, were flain upon the fpot; upon which, Lhewelyn, without any regard had to Iago the fon of Edwal the right heir, took upon himself the title and authority of Prince of all Wales. His pretence to North-Wales, was, as being descended from Trawst daughter to Elis, fecond fon to Anarawd, who was the eldest fon of Roderic the Great; and to South Wales, as having married Angharad the only daughter of Meredith Prince of South Wales; by virtue of which pretentions he affumed to himfelf the government of all Wales.

LHEWELYN APSITSYLHT.

HEWELYN having, as is faid, taken upon him the general government of Wales, managed his charge with fuch prudence and moderation, that the country in a fhort time became very flourishing and prosperous; peace and tranquility being established produced plenty and increase of all things necessary to human subsistence: For there was none that could lay any claim or pretence to either of the principalities, excepting lago the son of Edwal, who was indeed lawful heir of North Wales; but either too weak to withstand, or unwilling to disturb Lhewelyn's title, he lay quiet for a time, expecting a better opportunity portunity to recover his right. In the mean time. Cnute being crowned king of all England, marries Emma the widow of King Edelred; and for the better fecuring the English crown to himself and his heirs, he thought it expedient to dispatch Edmund and Edward the fons of Ironfide out of the way. But left fuch an execrable fact should seem too black to be done in England, he fent the two youths to Solomon King of Hungary, willing him to use some convenient opportunity to take away their lives; which feemed to Solomon fo very unnatural, that instead of complying with Cnute's request, he educated and brought them up as his own children. But Cnute imagined now that his fear was over, and his bufiness effectually finished; so that he could the more boldly demand of his subjects, what either his necessity or curiofity would prompt him to. And reflecting with himself, what excessive expence he had been at in the conquest of England, was resolved that the English should repay him; and therefore required a subsidy of seventy two thousand pounds, besides eleven thousand, which the city of London contributed. The same time Meyric the fon of Arthfael, a person of quality in Wales, rebelled, and raised an army against Prince Lhewelyn, who no fooner appeared in the field to quell his male-contented General, but manfully flew him with his own hand, and eafily difcomfitted his followers. The fame time Cnute failed over into Denmark, and made war upon the Vandals, who, for all that they had a greater army in the field, were overcome by the incomparable valour of earl Godwyn a for which famous action Cnute had the English in great esteem ever after.

A. D.

But Lhewelyn Prince of Wales, though he had lately quelled the rebels headed by Meyric, was now to encounter with another difficulty, which feemed to threaten greater diffurbance and trouble to him: for a certain person of a mean quality in Scotland, coming to South Wales, assumed the name of Run, and gave out that he was the son of Meredith Prince of South Wales; to whom joined a great number of the notation.

bility, who had no great affection to Lhewelyn, and proclaimed Run Prince of South Wales. Lhewelyn being then in North Wales, and certified of this famous impostor, drawing his army together, marched to meet him; who, with the whole strength of South Wales, then lay at Abergwili, where he abode the arrival of Lhewelyn. When both armies were ready to join battle, Run makes a vaunting speech to his foldiers, affuring them of victory; and to perfuading them courageously to fall on, privately himself retired out of harm's way; there one might have observed on the one fide a valiant army under a cowardly general, and on the other part a valiant and a noble commander engaging with a flow and a faint-hearted army; for Lhewelyn, like a bold and caurageous prince, ventured into the midst of his enemies, whilst Run privately fneaked off out of all danger; and the South Wales men were more fierce and eager in the cause of a pretender than the North Wales men to maintain the quarrel of a prince of their own blood. But after great saughter on both sides, the North Wales men calling to mind the feveral victories they had obtained, and withal being in a very great measure animated by the incomparable valour of their prince, fell on to warmly, that they put their enemies to flight, and pur-fued Run so close, that notwithstanding his several shifts, he was at last overtaken and slain. Lhewelyn, after this victory, returned laden with spoil into North Wales, and for fome time lived peaceably and without disturbance: But the next year Howel and Meredith, the fons of Edwyn, confpired against him and slew him, leaving behind him a fon called Gruffydh ap Lhewelyn, who afterwards, though not immediately, ascended to the principality of North Wales,

IAGO AP EDWAL.

FTER the death of Lhewelyn, Iago the fon Edwal, the true heir to the principality of North Wales, who had been all this time wrongfully kept from it; thought this the best opportunity to enter upon his right, by reason of the minority of Gruffydh the fon of Lhewelyn; upon which pretence likewise Rytherch the fon of Iestyn forcibly assumed the principality of South Wales. About the fame time Cnute King of England, failed over to Denmark and Sweden, against Ulf and Alaf, who had moved the Finlanders against him; whom he subdued with the loss of a great part of his army, as well English as Danes. Within a while after his return to England, he made a very pompous and magnificent journey to Rome; more to fatisfy his ambitious temper, and to fignify to the world his greatness and might, which he expressed by his coftly presents and princely behaviour, than any way to make atonement for the oppression and bloodshed by which he had established himself in his kingdom: For what holiness and mortification he had learnt at Rome, presently appeared upon his return to England; for upon no provocation he marched with an army into Scotland, and forced Malcolm the king thereof, together with Molbeath and Jermare, the kings of the Orkneys and Ewift, to do him homage.

A.D. 1631. But the affairs of Wales were at this time very turbulent and uneafy; for Howel and Meredith, after the murder of Prince Lhewelyn, expected to enjoy some part of his principality themselves; but finding Iago to have seized upon North Wales, and Rytherch upon South Wales, and withal perceiving their own power too weak to oppose their designs, they invited over the Irish-Scots, to their aid against Rytherch ap Jestyn,

Prince

Prince of South Wales. By the help of these, Howel and Meredith prevailed over Rytherch; who being at length flain, they jointly took upon them the rule and government of South Wales. But this was not a fufficient title to establish them so firmly in it, that their usurpation would not be called in question; for the A.D. 1032. fons of Rytherch, presently after their father's death, gathered their forces together to fight with the brothers Howel and Meredith, who met at Irathwy, where a cruel battle was fought, called Gwaith Irathwy; and at last the sons of Rytherch, were put to flight. But though these victories, the one over Rytherch, and the fecond over his fons, feemed in a great measure to favour Howel and Meredith's pretence to, and establishment in the principality, yet so unpardonable a crime, as the murder of Lhewelyn, a prince of fo extraordinary qualities, could not remain long unrevenged; for the fons of Conan the fon of Sitfylht, Prince Lhewelyn's brother, were resolved to return their uncle's murder upon the two usurpers, which in a short time they effected against Meredith, who met with the same end from the sons of Conan, that he had formerly inflicted upon Lhewelyn. But these civil discords in Wales were quickly discovered by the English, who taking advantage of so fair an opportunity, entered with a great army into the land of Gwent, where after they had committed considerable waste for fome time, Caradoc the fon of Rytherch ap Iestyn, gave them battle, but was in that engagement unhappily flain. And shortly afterwards died King Cnute, the most famous and mightiest prince then in the western parts of the world; whose dominions extended over all Sweden, from Germany almost to the north Pole; together with the kingdoms of Norway and Denmark, and the noble island of Britain. To him succeeded his fon Harold, for his swiftness, surnamed Harefoot, begotten upon Alwyn the daughter of Duke Alfelyn; though several stickled firmly for Hardycnute, his other fon by Emma, who was then in Denmark. But Harold being once advanced to the throne, took care to establish himself as firmly as he could in it; and to that end, thought G 2 thought it expedient to banish out of his dominions his mother-in-law Emma, who was restless to promote the interest of her own son Hardycnute, and to bring him to the crown of England.

A. D. 1037. And whilst Harold was by these measures settled in his throne, Iago ap Edwal was just upon the point of lofing his principality of North Wales: for Gruffydh the fon of Lhewelyh ap Sitsylht, fometime Prince of North Wales, having once hinted a rebellion against Iago, was so generally encouraged, and universally followed by all people, for the love they bore to his father; that in a fhort time his army mounted to an invincible number. However, Iago was not fo thoroughly affrighted, that he would deliver up his principality without drawing a fword for it; but providing for himself as well he could, and drawing together what forces he was able; he gave Gruffydh battle; But his number being far too weak to oppose so great an army as fided with Gruffydh, was presently overpowered and put to the rout, and himself slain, leaving after him a fon called Conan, by his wife Afandred, daughter to Gweir the fon of Pylh.

GRUFFYDH AP LHEWELYN.

AGO ap Edwal being killed, Gruffydh ap Lhewelyn was received with loud acclamations, and joyfully faluted Prince of North Wales; who treading in his father's fteps, behaved himself in his government with that prudence and conduct, that he manfully defended his country from the frequent invasions of the English and Danes: for he was scarce settled in his throne, when these inveterate enemies of the Welch entered in an hostile manner into Wales, and advanced as far as Crossford upon the Severn, where Gruffydh met them, and forced them shamefully to sly, and retire back to their own country. From thence Gruffydh passed to Lhanbadarn Vawr in Cardiganshire, which he laid in ashes; and afterwards marched through all the country of South Wales, receiving of the people oaths of fidelity and fubjection to him. In the mean time, Howel ap Edwyn, Prince of South Wales, fled to Edwyn brother to Leofric Earl of Chefter, and prevailed with him to come with an army confifting of English and Danes, to his aid against Gruffydh, who meeting his enemies in the field, eafily overcame them, Edwyn being slain upon the spot, and Howel forced to preserve his life by flight. which victory, Gruffydh having reduced all the country of Wales to Subjection, returned again to North Wales. But Howel as foon as he could recover him-A.D. 1039. felf and recruit his army, entered again into South Wales, intending the recovery of that principality, which he was now fo well affured of, that he brought his wife with him to the field, to let her fee how eafily he could conquer and overcome Prince Gruffydh. But too great an affurance of victory feldom proves profperous; which Howel presently experienced; for Gruffydh meeting with him at Pencadair, gave him so warm an entertainment, that he was forced prefently to take his heels, which however could not fo well fecure him, but that he was narrowly purfued, and his wife who was to be entertained with the conquest of Gruffydh, on the contrary, faw herself taken prisoner by him, and forced to comply fo far to his humour, as to be his concubine.

The fame time Harold King of England died, and was succeeded by his brother Hardycnute, a Prince very famous for hospitality, and a great lover of good chear, having his table covered four times a-day, with great plenty and variety of dishes, with other superfluities for all comers. But he likewise dying at Lambeth after two years reign, the English agreed to send for Alfred the eldest son of Edelred from Normandy, and to make him king. This message by no means pleased Earl Godwyn, a man of great sway now in England; who knowing Alfred to be a person of greater spirit than to permit him to domineer as he pleased, endeavoured all he could to dissuade the English from sending for Alfred. He shewed them how dangerous it was to permit a warlike nation to take root in their country, and how well Alfred was accompanied with Normans, to whom he had promifed the chief places and rule of the kingdom; by which and other like infinuations he fo difgusted the English nobility against the Normans, that to diminish their number, they put every tenth man to death. But feeing this was not fufficient, they acted the same part over again, and tythed them a fecond time; and being highly enraged against the Normans, they led Alfred, who had brought them over, from Gilford, where this execution was committed, to Gillingham, where having put out his eyes, they removed him to Ely, and there at length pitifully murdered him. Then they fent for Edward out of Normandy, and made him king, who, according to his promife to Earl Godwyn. married his daughter Edith, a lady much commended not only for beauty, modesty, and other feminine qualifications, but also beyond what is requisite for a woman, learning. But King Edward did not deal fo favourably with her brother Swane, fon to Earl Godwyn, who upon some distaste was banished England, and thereupon forced to betake himself to Baldwyn earl of Flanders, by whom he was very honourably received.

A. D. 1041 These troubles and revolutions in England were succeeded by others of no less consequence in Wales. For Howel, not brooking to be kept so shamefully out of his kingdom, returns again the third time into South Wales, where he had not continued long, but a great number of strangers landed in the west of Wales, and advancing farther into the country, pillaged and destroyed all places they came to. Howel, though desirous to reserve his army to sight with Prince Gruffydh, yet could not behold his country so miserably wasted and over-run by strangers; and thinking moreover, that by so charitable an action he should win the universal love of the South Wales men, drew up his forces forces against them, and overtaking them at Pwl! Fynach, forced them with much loss, to retire to their thips; which action was called in Welch, Gwaith Pwll Fynach. At the fame time Conan the fon of Iago ap Edwal, who was forced for fear of Prince Gruffydh to flee to Ireland, with the forces of Alfred king of Dublin, whose daughter named Ranulph he had married, landed in North Wales; and having by some treacherous stratagem taken Gruffydh, triumphantly carried him prisoner towards his ships. This unhappy accident being discovered, and publickly known, the North Wales men did rife on a fudden, and so unexpectedly overtook the Irish, that they easily recovered their Prince, and drove his enemies with great flaughter to their ships; who, without any farther confultation, were glad to strike fail with Conan for Ireland. And now Wales, both North and South, is free from all foreign invalion, and Howel, as yet too weak to dispute his title with Gruffydh; so that A. D. 1042. the next year could be subject to no great action, in which nothing happened remarkable, faving the death of Howel the fon of Owen Lord of Glamorgan, a man of great quality and esteem in Wales. But as foon as Howel could call in his Danes, to whom he added all the forces he could raise in South Wales; he intended presently to march against Prince Gruffydh. But he being aware aforehand to what end those levies were defigned, prepared against the ensuing storm; and to avert the war from his own country, marched courageously to South Wales, not fearing to face an enemy whom he had shamefully vanquished twice already. Both armies being joined, Gruffydh eafily overcame, and purfued Howel as far as the springhead of the river Towy, where after a long and a bloody fight, Howel was at last slain, and his army fo univerfally routed, that few escaped with their lives. But though Howel was dead, yet there remained still more pretenders to the principality of South Wales; fo that Gruffydh was in no great prospect to enjoy the same peaceably: For as soon as it was published that Howel's army was defeated, and himfelf slain, Rytherch and Rhys the sons of Rytherch ap Iestyn put in their claim to South Wales in right of their father, who had once enjoyed the fovereignty of that country, And in order to the recovery of the fame, they drew together a great army, confifting partly of strangers and partly of such as they could raise in Gwentland and Glamorgan, and marched to fight with Gruffydh. The Prince according to his usual manner detracted no time, but animating and folacing his foldiers with the remembrance of their former victories and conquests, bid the enemies battle, which proved fo very bloody and terrible, that nothing could part them beside the darkness of the night. This battle fo tired and tamed both armies, that neither was very defirous of another engagement, and fo one being unwilling to fet upon the other, they both agreed to return to their own habitations. The fame time Joseph bishop of Teilo or Llandas died at Rome. But both armies being feparated, Prince Gruffydh enjoyed a quiet and unmolested possession of all Wales for about two years; after which, the gentry of Ystrad Towy treacherously slew 140 of the choice of his army, which he took in so high an indignation, that to revenge their death, he destroyed all Dyfed and Ystrad Towy.

About the same time, Lothen and Hyrling two Danish pirates, with a great number of Danes, landed at Sandwich, and having plundered the town, returned again to their ships, and sailed for Holland, where they fold the booty they had taken, and then returned to their own country. Shortly afterwards Earl Swayn came out of Denmark with eight ships, and returned to England, and coming to his father's house at Pevenese, humbly requested of, and his brothers Harold and Tostie, to endeavour his reconciliation with the King. Earl Beorned too promifed to intercede for him, and going to Swayn's fleet to fail to Sandwich, where the King then lay, he was by the way most treacheroufly and ungratefully murdered, and his body cast upon the shore, which lay there exposed, till his friends hearing of the fact, came and carried it to Winchester, and buried it by the body of King Cnute, Beorned's wrought his peace with the king.

This year Conan the fon of Iago raifed again an. army of his friends in Ireland, and failed towards Wales, purposing to recover his inheritance in that country. But when he was come near the Welch coast, there suddenly arose such a violent storm, that his fleet was prefently fcattered, and most of his ships drowned, which rendered this expedition ineffectual. About the fame time, Robert archbishop of Canterbury impeached Earl Godwyn and his fons Swayn and Harold of treason, and the queen of adultery, and upon the account of their non-appearance when cited before the the peers at Glocester, the queen was divorced, and Godwyn and his fons banished, who with his fon Swayn fled to Flanders, and Harold to Ireland. But thefe unlucky clashings, and the many troubles that enfued thereupon, happened upon this occasion. Eustace earl of Bologne being married to Goda the king's fifter, came over this year to England to pay king Edward a visit, and in his return to Canterbury, one of his retinue forcibly demanding a lodging, provoked the master of the bouse so far, as by chance or anger to kill him. Eustace upon this affront returns back to the king, and by the infinuations of the archbishop, makes a loud complaint against the Kentish-men; to repress whose infolencies, earl Godwyn is commanded to raife forces, which he refusing to do, for the kindness he bore to his countrymen of Kent, the king fummons a parliament at Glocester, and commands Godwyn to appear there. But he mistrusting either his own cause, or the malice of his adversaries, gathered a powerful army out of his own and his fons earldoms, and marched towards Glocester, giving out that their forces were to go against the Welch, who intended to invade the Marshes. But King Edward being fatisfied by the Welch that they had no fuch defign defign in hand, commanded Godwyn to difmiss his army, and to appear himself to answer to the articles exhibited against him. Godwyn refusing to obey, the king by the advice of earl Leofrick, summoned an affembly at London, whither a great number of forces arrived from Mercia, which Godwyn perceiving, and withal, finding himfelf unable to withstand the king's proceedings, privately retired with his fons out of the kingdom, and fled into Flanders. Whereupon the king iffued out an edict, proclaiming Godwyn and his fons out-laws, and then confifcating their estates, bestowed them upon others of his nobility. And, to purfue his displeasure the farther, he divorced his queen Edith, earl Godwyn's daughter, and committed her to a cloifter, where in a mean condition she spent some part of her life. In the distribution of the forfeited estates, Adonan obtained the earldoms of Devon and Dorfet, and Algar the fon of Leofrick, that of Harold. But Godwyn could not patiently behold his estate bestowed upon another, and therefore having hired some men and ships in Flanders, he failed to the Isle of Wight, where after that he had made a fufficient havock, he put in at Portland, which he treated after the fame manner. The fame time Harold having failed from Ireland, at length met with his father, and then with their united navy, they burnt Prevenefeny, Romney, Heath, Folkfton, Dover and Sandwich, and entering the Thames, they destroyed Cheppy, and burnt the king's house at Middletown. Then they failed up the river towards London, where the king's army being ready to oppose them, a treaty of peace was by the means of Bishop Stigand agreed upon, which proved so effectual of Godwyn's fide, that the king received him again to his favour, restored him and sons to all their estates, recalled the queen, and banished the archbishop, with all the Frenchmen who had been promoters of that unhappy fuspicion the king had entertained of them.

About this time, Rhys brother to Gruffydh Prince of Wales, who by feveral irruptions upon the borders, had confiderably gauled and damaged the English, was taken and put to death at Bulendun, whose head being cut off, was presented to the king, then at Glocester. But he received better news some time after from the North, for Siward earl of Northumberland having fent his fon against Macbeth king of Scotland vanguished the fons, tho' not without the loss of his fon, and many others, both English and Danes. But Siward was not cast down at his son's death, but enquiring whether he received his death's wound before or behind, and being affured that it was before, replied, "He was very glad of it, for he " could not wish his son to die otherwise." After this victory, King Edward marched in person to Scotland, and having again overcome Macbeth in battle. he made the whole kingdom of Scotland tributary to the crown of England. The next year, earl Godwyn fitting with the king at table, funk down dead of a sudden, being choaked, as 'tis thought, in swallowing a morsel of bread; whose earldom the king bestowed upon his son Harold, and his upon Algar earl of Chester.

To this time is referred the original of the Stewards in Scotland, which being a remarkable paffage, and in a great measure dependant upon the affairs of the Welch, is requisite to be here recorded. Macbeth king of Scotland having caused Bancho a nobleman of that kingdom to be inhumanly murdered; Fleance, Bancho's fon, to avoid the like cruelty to himself, fled to Gruffydh ap Lhewelyn prince of Wales, who taking a very great liking to his person, and withal commiserating his condition, shewed him all the respect and kindness possible. But Fleance had not continued long with Gruffydh when he fell enamoured upon the prince's daughter, and having obtained her good-will, without any regard had to her father's civility towards him, abused her so far as to beget her with child. Gruffydh being acquainted with the matter of fact, so heinously resented the affront, that he occasioned Fleance to be slain, and treated his daughter most fervilely for prostrating her chastity, chaftity, especially to a stranger. However, she was in a short time delivered of a son, whose name was christened Walter; a child, who in his youth expressed very great hopes, and in all probability like to make a very confiderable man, which happened according to expectation. But the first original of his future greatness happened upon a very accidental occasion; being reproached of bastardism by one of his fellow companions, he took it in so unpardonable a dudgeon, that nothing could fatisfy his revenge, but the life of the aggreffor. Being upon this mischance affraid to undergo the punishment of the law, he thought it safe to fly to Scotland, where falling in company with certain Englishmen who were come thither with queen Margaret fifter to Edgar Edeling, he behaved himself so soberly and discreetly, that he won the favour and good character of all that knew him. But his fame daily increasing, he grew at length to that height of reputation, as to be employed in the most inward affairs of the commonwealth, and at last was made Lord Steward of Scotland, from which office his posterity retained the surname of Steward, the kings of Scotland of that name, with feveral other families of quality in that kingdom being descended from him.

But to return to England, Siward the worthy earl of Northumberland died about this time of the bloodyflux, a man of a rough demeanour, and a meer foldierly temper, as he plainly manifested at the point of death. For bewailing his misfortune that had escaped so many dangerous engagements, and withal disdaining to die so essemble escaped, and as it were in defiance of death, presently expired in a martial bravery. But his son being too young, the king bestowed his earldom upon Tosty the son of earl Godwyn.

vest. Wales had been now a long time quiet, and void of all troubles both abroad and at home, but it could not be expected that such a life should prove dur-

ble, but fomething or other would create new commotions and difturbances. Gruffydh fon to Rytherch ap Iestyn having recruited and recovered himself after the last blow he received from Prince Gruffydh, must needs venture another trial for the principality of South Wales. The Prince protracting no time, fpeedily marched against him, and both armies being joined, Gruffydh ap Rytherch was eafily vanquished, and in fine, flain. But the troubles of the Welch did not end with him, for Algar Earl of Chester being convicted of treason, and thereupon banished the kingdom, fled to Gruffydh Prince of Wales, requesting his aid against king Edward, who, repeating the frequent wrongs he had received at the hands of the English, by upholding his enemies against him, gladly embraced the opportunity, and promifed him all imaginable fupport. And thereupon affembling his forces, he entered with him into Herefordshire, and advancing into the country, within two miles of the city of Hereford, they were opposed by Randulph Earl of that country, who boldly gave them battle. The fight continued very dreadful and dubious for fome hours, till at last Gruffydh fo encouraged his foldiers with the remembrance of their former victories over the English, that they fell on a-main, and easily discomfitted Randulph, and flew the best part of his army. Afterwards they purfued their chace to the town, and having made all the waste and havock they were able, they laid the town itself in ashes, and so returned home triumphantly, laden with rich booty and plunder. King Edward receiving notice of this invalion, presently gathered a great army at Glocester under the conduct of Harold Earl Godwyn's fon, who courageously purfuing the enemies, entered into Wales, and encamped beyond Stradclwyd. But Gruffydh and Algar dreading to oppose him, retired further into South Wales, of which Harold being certified, leaves one part of his army behind with orders to fight, if ocoasion offered, and with the other passed to Hereford, which he fortified with a strong wall round the town. Gruffydh perceiving his undaunted industry, after many messages concluded a peace with Harold at a place called Biligelhag, by which articles Algar was pardoned by the King, and restored to his earldom of Chester. But he did not continue long in the king's favour, for about two years after, upon conviction of treason, he was again banished the land, so that he was forced to betake himself to his old friend Gruffydh Prince of Wales, by whose aid, and a fleet from Norway in spite of of the king he was restored to his earldom. But King Edward was fore offended with the Prince of Wales for harbouring traitors, and therefore to be revenged upon him, he dispatched Harold again with an army to North Wales, who, coming to Ruthlan, burnt the Prince's palace there, and his fleet, that lay in the harbour, and then returned to the king at Glocester.

This year Edward the fon of Edmund Ironfide, who was fent for out of Hungary, being defigned fucceffor to the crown, came to England, but in a short time after his coming, died at London, leaving behind him a fon called Edgar Edeling, and a daughter named Margaret, who was afterwards queen of the Scots, and mother to Maud the wife of Henry the first. About two years after, Roderic, fon to Harold king of Denmark came with a confiderable army into Wales, and being kindly received by Prince Gruffydh, united his power with the Welch, and fo entered into England, which they cruelly harraffed and destroyed. But before they could advance any confiderable distance, Roderic was compelled to fail for Denmark, and fo Gruffydh returned laden with spoils into Wales. The same time Harold Earl Godwyn's son failing to Flanders, was driven by force of weather to land at Poytiers, where being feized upon, he was brought before William baftard duke of Normandy, to whom he declared the reason of his voyage, that it was purposely to tender him his service in the affairs of England; and so taking an oath, first to marry the duke's daughter, and after the death of Edward to secure the kingdom of England for him, he was honourably dismissed. Upon his return to England, by the persuasions of Caradoc the son of Gruffydh ap Rytherch, himself with his brother Tosty, raifed a great army and entered into South-Wales, which they destroyed after that manner, that the Welch were glad to deliver up hostages for the payment of the antient tribute, which afore-time they were used to pay. Gruffydh hearing of the insolencies of the English in South-Wales, made all possible haste and preparation to oppose them, but all to no pur-pose; Harold having already treacherously hired some of Gruffydh's nearest friends to murder him, who watching their opportunity, executed their wicked defign and brought his head to Harold. Gruffydh being dead, Harold by King Edward's orders, appointed Meredith fon of Owen ap Edwyn prince of South-Wales, and the government of North-Wales to Blethyn and Rywalhon the fons of Confyn, brothers by the mother fide to Prince Gruffydh, and who probably for the defire of rule, were accessary to the murder of that noble prince. This Gruffydh ap Lhewelyn enjoyed the principality of Wales for the space of thirty four years; a prince of incomparable virtues, both wife and valiant, beloved of his subjects and formidable to his enemines, in all his actions he behaved himself great and princely; and having defended his country fo bravely against all foreign opposition; he was far unworthy of that treacherous and cruel death, which his unkind subjects and unnatural friends bestowed upon him. He left iffue but one daughter called Nest, abused first by Fleance son of Bancho, and afterwards married to Trahaern ap Caradoc prince of North-Wales.

BLETHYN and RYWALHON.

A FTER the deplorable murder of Prince Gruffydh, Meredith the fon of Owen ap Edwyn, who according to some, was son to Howel Dha, did take upon him, as 'tis faid, the government of South-Wales, and Blethyn and Rywalhon the fons of Confyn, half brothers to Gruffydh, as defcended from Angharad daughter to Meredith fometime prince of Wales, entered upon the principality of North-Wales; Conan the fon of Iago ap Edwal the right heir to that crown being then with his father-in-law in Ireland. This partition of Wales fell much short of the expectation of Caradoc ap Gruffydh ap Rytherch, who being the chief promoter of Harold's making an expedition against Gruffydh ap Lhewelyn, made no question to attain to the government of South-Wales, in case Gruffydh got the worfe. But it happened otherwife; Harold being fensible of Caradoc's subtilty and knavery, and doubting whether if he was made prince of South-Wales, he could obtain a certain lord-Thip nigh Hereford, which he had a longing mind to, made a composition with Meredith ap Owen for the faid lordship, and created him Prince of South Wales, and on the contrary banished Caradoc out of the country. Harold having obtained his request, built a very magnificent house at a place called Portascyth in Monmouthshire, and storing it with great quantity of provision, splendidly entertained the king, who honoured him with a visit. This was by no means pleasing to Tosty, to see his younger brother in greater esteem and favour with the king than himfelf, and having concealed his displeasure for a time, could not forbear at length but discover his grievance. For one day at Windsor, while Harold reached the cup to king Edward, Tofty ready to burft for envy that his brother was fo much respected beyond himself, could not refrain to run furiously upon him, and pulling him by the hair, dragged him to the ground, for which unmannerly action, the king forbad him the court. But he with continued rancour and malice rides to Hereford, where Harold had many fervants preparing an entertainment for the king, and fetting upon them with his followers lopped off the hands and legs of some, the arms and heads of others, and threw them into the buts of wine and other liquors, which were put in for the king's drinking, and at his departure charged the servants to acquaint him, "That " of other fresh meats he might carry with him what " he pleased, but for sauce he should find plenty provid-" ed ready for him." For which barbarous offence the king pronounced a fentence of perpetual banishment upon him. But Caradoc ap Gruffydh gave a finishing stroke to Harold's house, and the king's entertainment at Portafcyth; for coming thither shortly after Tosty's departure, to be revenged upon Harold, he killed all the workmen and labourers, with all the fervants he could find, and utterly defacing the building, carried away all the costly materials, which with great charges and expence had been brought thither to beautify and adorn the structure. Soon after which, the Northumbrians (who could not endure the infolencies of the two brothers Harold and Tofty, who bearing an uncontroulable fway in the kingdom, were used to practife most hellish villainies to encompass any man's estate that displeased them,) in a tumult at York befet the palace of Tosty, and having pillaged his treafure, flew all his family, as well Englishmen as Danes. Then adjoining to themselves the people of Lincoln, Nottingham and Derbyshire, they elected Marcher the fon of Earl Algar their general, to whom came his brother Edwyn with a confiderable number of forces, and a great party of Welchmen. Then they marched in an hostile manner to Northampton, where Harold met them, being fent by the king to know their demands; to whom they laid open their grievances, and the cruelty of Tosty's government, and at last, with an absolute refufal refusal of admitting him again, desired that Marcher should be appointed Earl over them, which the king upon the reasonable complaints of injuries done by Tosty, easily granted, and willingly confirmed Marcher's title. Whereupon they peaceably returned back to the North, and the Welch with several prisoners and other booties got in this expedition, returned to Wales.

The year following, King Edward died, and was buried at Westminster, being the last king of the Saxon blood before the conquest that governed the kingdom of England, which from Cerdic king of the West Saxons had continued 544, and from Egbert the first monarch, 171 years. Edward being dead, the next debate was about an election of a fuccessor, Edgar Edeling being fet up by fome, as lawful heir to the crown, which Harold as being a person of greater power and authority in the kingdom, much wealthier and better befriended, presently thwarted, and brought matters fo cunningly about, that himfelf was chosen king, without any regard observed to the oath and promife he had formerly made to William Duke of Normandy. Duke William upon notice of Harold's advancement, how that he had accepted of the crown of England contrary to the articles between them, convened together his nobles, and laid before them the feveral wrongs and affronts he had received at the hands of Harold, as the death of his coufin Alfred, the banishment of archbishop Robert, Earl Odan and all the Normans, and lastly the breach of his oath and promife. Then he declared to them the pretence he had to claim the crown of England, that Edward had given him formerly an absolute promise in Normandy, that if ever he enjoyed the English crown, William should be his heir; which title, though in itself weak and infignificant served William's purpose well enough to make an expedition against an intruder. Duke William's pretence feemed plaufible enough to the Norman nobility, but the difficulty of the undertaking and the danger of this expedition was fomething perplexive, and made them less inclinable to encourage so precipitous an undertaking; which they the more disliked upon the perfuafion of William Fitzosbert the duke's sewer, whom they pitched upon to deliver their thoughts as to the expedition, unto the duke. But he instead of disfuading him from this voyage, politically declared that himself with all his power were ready to live and die with him in this expedition, which the rest hearing, could not but offer the duke their fervice in the same manner; and so all things were prepared for an invasion of England. In the mean while Tosty, full of indignation at his brother's advancement to the crown, entered the river Humber with forty fail, but meeting with Earl Edwyn who came to oppose him, he was forced after a confiderable encounter to bear off, and fecure himself by flight. But meeting with Harold king of Norway upon the coast of Scotland, coming for England with three hundred fail, he joined his forces with Harold, and fo both together entering the Humber, they landed their army and marched to York, where the Earls Edwyn and Marcher unfuccessfully gave them battle. Having pillaged and deftroyed that city, they passed on to Stamford-bridge, and there met with King Harold, who with a well disciplined army was come to stop their farther carreer. After a long and a terrible fight, and much bloodshed on both fides, the Norwegians began at last to give back, which the English perceiving, fell on so man-fully that few or none escaped with their lives, Harold and Tosty being also slain upon the spot. One of the Norwegians is deservedly recorded for his incomparable exploits performed in this battle, who with incredible valour maintaining the bridge against the whole strength of the English army for above an hour with his fingle refistance delayed their victory, and having flain a great number of his enemies, he feemed invincible, till in the end, no one daring to grapple with him fairly, he was run through with a spear from under the bridge, and so by his fall, a paffage was opened for purfuit to compleat the vic-H2 tory.

tory. King Harold over-joyed with this fuccess, triumphantly entered into York, and whilft he was making merry with his nobles at a fumptuous feaft. news came that Duke William of Normandy was fafely landed at, and began to fortify himself in Hastings, with which tidings being no way dashed, as fearing nothing after his late victory, he forthwith marched towards him, and as foon as he was arrived in Suffex, without any confideration of the fatigue his army had underwent in their march, bid William battle. The Duke dividing his army into five battalions, made a long harrangue to his foldiers, wherein he repeated and commended the noble acts of their ancestors the Danes and Norwegians, who had perpetually vanquished the English and French, and other nations, as many as they had to do with; how that themselves being well horsed and armed, were now to engage with a people void of both, who had no other defence to trust to, than the nimbleness and swiftness of their heels. Both armies being joined upon the fourteenth day of October, Duke William after some hours engaging ordered his army fo to retire, as if they feemed to fly, which the English perceiving, broke their ranks in hafte of pursuing the supposed chace, which falling out according to the Duke's expectation, he fent in a fresh supply of Normans, who falling upon the confused battalions of the English, easily overcame them, and Harold receiving first a wound by an arrow, were at length flain, and then both the field and the victory were left to the Normans. The day being thus won, William from this time called the Conqueror, went straight to London, where he was received with all possible formality, and upon Christmas-day folemnly crowned king of England. This change and alteration in England, was afore prognosticated by a comet which appeared in the spring of this year, upon which a certain poet made the following verses;

Anno milleno sexageno quoque seno, Anglorum metæ slammas censere cometæ.

King William having established himself in the A. D. 1066. crown of England, passed over the next year to Normandy, so to settle affairs there, as afterwards they might have no need of his presence. In the mean while Edgar Edeling taking advantage of his absence, returned from Scotland to York, being declared king by the inhabitants of the country, who had already flain Robert, upon whom William had bestowed that earldom with nine hundred of his men. But the king upon his return from Normandy, prefently marched to the North, and having sufficiently revenged himself upon the inhabitants, by wasting and destroying their country, chased Edgar to Scotland again. The like advantage Edric Sylvaticus the son of Alfric Earl of Mercia embraced, who refusing to own any submisfion to the conqueror, took the opportunity of his de-parture to Normandy to fall foul upon such as were appointed vicegerents and governors of the kingdom in his absence. Whereupon Richard Fitzscrope governor of the castle of Hereford, with the forces under his command fo bitterly gauled him, by wasting and consuming his lands, and carrying off the goods of his tenants, that he was compelled to defire aid of Blethyn and Rywalhon princes of Wales, by whose help, to recompence the loss he had received, he pasfed into Hereford, and after that he had over-run and pillaged the country to Wyebridge, returned back with exceeding great booty. But no fooner were Blethyn and Rywalhon arrived in North Wales, but they received news of a rebellion raifed against them by Meredith and Ithel the fons of Gruffydh ap Lhewelyn, who had drawn together a confiderable number of men, upon pretence of recovering the principality of North Wales, which they faid was fraudulently detained from them. Blethyn and Rywalhon did not delay to march to find the enemies, and meeting with them at a place called Mechain, without any farther ceremonies, fet upon the rebels, who behaved themfelves so gallantly, that after a fight of several hours, they wanted nothing but number to compleat the victory. There fell in this battle on the one fide Prince  $H_3$

Prince Rywalhon, and on the other Ithel, who being flain. Meredith was forced to give ground, and endeayour to fave himself by slight, which could not fecure him, he being narrowly purfued by Blethyn, that in fine, he was glad to escape to the mountains. where for want of victuals and other necessaries, he quickly perished, leaving Blethyn ap Confyn fole Prince of North Wales and Powis. During these Welch diffurbances, Swane king of Denmark, and Ofburn, his brother with three hundred fail came up the Humber, and being joined by Edgar Edeling and Earl Waltelfe, marched to York, and taking the caftle disposed of their forces to winter-quarters, betwixt the rivers of Ouse and Trent. The king underflanding the matter, posted to the North; whose coming so dashed the confederates, that they quickly dispersed their power, and the Danes escaped to their ships, and the king having taken vengeance upon the rebellious inhabitants of the country, and upon his fubmission, having pardoned Earl Waltelfe, returned back to London.

BLETHYN AP CONFYN.

A BOUT the same time Caradoc son to Gruffydh ap Rhytherch ap Iestyn all this while being sorely distaissified that he could not attain to the principality of South Wales, invited over a great number of Normans, to whom he joined all the forces he could raise out of Gwentland, and other parts of Wales. Then setting upon Prince Meredith who was far too weak to encounter so considerable an army, gave him an easy overthrow near the river Rymhy, where Meredith was slain, and so Caradoc obtained the government of South Wales, which for a long time he had endeavoured sinistriously to encompass. He had sometime afore procured Harold to make an invasion upon Gruffydh ap Lhewelyn, purposely that himself might arrive at the principality of South Wales; and failing then of his expectation, he now invites over the Normans, not being willing to trust the English any more, by reason that he had so ungratefully been baulked by Harold: fo that it feems he cared not by what course, or by whose means he should gain his point; though it were by the ruin and destruction of his country, which hitherto he had earnestly promoted. Being at length advanced to his long expected government of South Wales, (which though not recorded, feems yet very probable, by reason that his fon Rhytherch ap Caradoc enjoyed the fame very foon after) he did not enjoy this honour long, but dying in a short time after his advancement, left to fucceed him, his fon Rytherch ap Caradoc. At the fame time that Caradoc carried on this rebellion in Wales, the Earls Edwyn, Marcher, and Hereward revolted from the king of England; but Edwyn fufpecting the success of their affairs, and determining to retire to Malcolm king of Scotland in his journey thither was betrayed, and flain by his own followers. Then Marcher and Hereward betook themselves to the Isle of Ely, which though sufficiently fortified, was fo warmly befieged by the king, that Marcher and his accomplices were in a short time forced to surrender themselves up prisoners; only Hereward made his escape to Scotland: but the king followed him so close; and after he had received homage of Malcolm king of Scotland, returned back to England; and after a short stay here, passed over to Normandy, where he received Edgar Edeling again to mercy.

The next year, the Normans having already tasted A.D. 1071. of the sweetness of wasting and plundering a country, came over again to Wales; and having spoiled and destroyed Dysed and the country of Cardigan, returned home with very great spoil; and the following year sailed over again for more booty. About the same time, Bleythyd bishop of St. David's died, and was succeeded by one Sulien. But this was not all the missortung that besel the Welch; for Radulph Earl of the East Angles, together with Roger Earl of Hereford and Earl Waltelpe, entered into a conspiracy against King William, appointing the day of marriage between Radulph and Roger's fifter, which was to be folemnized in Effex; to treat of and conclude their defign. Radulph's mother was come out of Wales, and upon that account, he invited over feveral of her friends and relations to the wedding; meaning chiefly by this feeming affection, by their help and procurement to bring over the princes and people of Wales, to favour and affift his undertaking. But King William being acquainted with the whole plot, quickly ruined all their intrigues; unexpectedly coming from Normandy surprised the conspirators; only Radulph, who either doubted of the fuccess of their affairs, or else had intimation given him of the king's landing, before hand took shipping at Norwich, and fled to Denmark. Waltelpe and Roger were executed, and all the other adherents; more particularly the Welch, some of whom were hanged, others had A.D. 1073 their eyes put out, and the rest were banished. Soon after, Blethyn ap Confyn Prince of Wales was basely and treacherously murdered by Rhys ap Owen ap Edwyn and the gentlemen of Yftrad Tywy, after he had reigned thirteen years: a prince of fingular qualifications and virtues, and a great observer of justice and equity towards his subjects; he was very liberal and magnificent, being indeed very able, having a prodigious and almost an incredible estate, as appears by these verses made upon him;

> Blethyn ap Confyn bôb Cwys Ei bûn bioedh bên Bowis,

He had four wives, by whom he had iffue, Meredith by Haer daughter of Gylhyn, his first wise; Lhywarch and Cadogan by the second; Madoc and Riryd by the third; and Iorwerth by his last.

TRAHAERN AP CARADOC.

BLETHYN being, as is faid, traiterously murdered, there was no regard had to his iffue, as to their right of fuccession; but Trahaern ap Caradoc his coufin-german being a perfon of great power and Iway in the country was unanimously elected Prince of North Wales, and Rhys ap Owen with Rytherch ap Caradoc did jointly govern South Wales. Trahaern indeed had none of the least pretence to that principality, as having married Neft the only furviving issue of that great prince, Gruffydh ap Lhewelyn; his two fons Meredith and Ithel being lately flain in their attempt against Blethyn and Rywalhon. But his title could not fecure him in his government as much as his poffession, fince there was one still living, though much regarded, who without any difpute, was true heir and proprietor of the principality of North Wales. And this was Gruffydh fon to Conan, fon to Iago ap Edwal, who being informed of the death of Blethyn ap Confyn, and the advancement of Trahaern, thought this a proper time to endeavour the recovery of what was truly his right, and out of which he had been all this time most wrongfully excluded. Wherefore having obtained help in Ireland, where he privately fojourned during the reign of Biethyn ap Confyn, from Encumalhon king of Ultonia, Ranalht and Mathawn two other kings of that country, he failed for Wales, and landed in the isle of Anglesey, which he eafily reduced and brought to subjection. At the same time Cynwric ap Rywalhon, a nobleman of Maeler or Bromfield was flain in North Wales, but how, or upon what account, is not known. But whilst Gruffydh ap Conan endeavours to dispossess Trahaern out of North Wales, Gronow and Lhewelyn the fons of Cadwgan ap Blethyn having united their forces with Caradoc ap Gruffydh ap Rytherch, intended to revenge the murder of their grandfather Blethyn ap Confyn, upon Rys ap Owen and Rytherch ap Caradoc, the joint rulers of South Wales. And then marching confidently to find them, both armies met together and fought at a place called Camdhwr; where after a fore engagement, the fons of Cadwgan at length obtained a glorious victory. In North Wales the fame time, Gruffydh ap Conan having established his possesfion of the ifle of Anglesey, intended to proceed farther in the continent of Wales; to which end, having transported his forces over the river, encamped in the neighbouring country of Carnarvonshire, purpoling to reduce North Wales by degrees. Trahaern ap Caradoc being informed of this descent of Gruffydh's, made all possible speed to prevent his farther progress; and having made all necessary preparations that the shortness of the opportunity would permit, he drew up his forces to Bron yr Erw, where he gave Gruffydh battle, and in fine put him to a shameful flight; fo that he was glad to retire back fafe Anglesey.

Anglesey.

A.D. 1074. The next year Rytherch ap Caradoc Prince of South

Wales died, being murdered through the unnatural villainy of his cousin-german Meyrchaon ap Rhys ap Rytherch; after whom Rhys ap Owen obtained the fole government of South Wales: but his enjoyment of the whole principality was not very lasting, and scarce at all void of trouble and vexation of war. 2075. For shortly after the death of Caradoc, the sons of Cadwgan thinking they might eafily now foil and vanquish one, seeing they had some time ago victoriously overcome both princes together, with all the forces they could raife, fet upon Rhys again at a place called Gwanyffyd; who not being able to endure their number, was routed and forced to flee; however the blow was not fo mortal, but that Rhys gathered together new levies, by the help of which he was emboldened still to maintain himself in his principality. But Fortune which had advanced him to the crown, feemed now to frown at and cross all his endeavours and undertak-

ings and being reduced to a very weak condition in the late battle, he was fet upon by a fresh enemy, before he could have fufficient time to recover and recruit himself. For Trahaern ap Caradoc Prince of North Wales, perceiving the weakness and inability of Rhys to make opposition against any foreign enemy that invaded his territories, thought it now very feasible to obtain the conquest of South Wales, and then to annex it to his own principality of North Wales. Being egged on by these pleasant imaginations, he difpatched his army to South Wales, to fight with Rhys, who with all the forces he could possibly levy, as laying his whole fortune upon the event of this battle. boldly met him at Pwlhgwttic; where after a tedious fight on both fides, Rhys having lost the best part of his army, was put to flight, and so warmly pursued, that after long shifting from place to place, himself with his brother Howel fell at length into the hands of Caradoc ap Gruffydh, who put them both to death, in revenge of the base murder of Blethyn ap Confyn, by them formerly transacted. The principality of South Wales being thus vacant by the death of Rhys ap Owen; Rhys fon to Theodore, ap Eineon, ap Owen, ap Howel Dha, as lawful heir to that government, put in his claim, which being very plain and evident, so prevailed with the people of the country, that they unanimously elected him for their prince; much against the expectation of Trahaern ap Caradoc Prince of North Wales. The next year St. David's fuffered greatly by strangers, who landing there in a considerable number, A. D. 1077. spoiled and destroyed the whole town; shortly after which barbarous action, Abraham bishop of that see died; and then Sulien, who the year before had relinquished and refigned up that bishoprick, was compelled to refume it. 1079.

The government of all Wales both North and South, had been now for a long time supplied by usurpers, and forcibly detained from the right and legal inheritors; but Providence would suffer injustice to reign no longer, and therefore restored the rightful heirs to their principalities. Rhys ap Theodore had actual possession of South Wales; and there wanted no more at this time, but to bring in Gruffydh ap Conan to the principality of North Wales; both thefe princes being indisputably right and lawful heirs to their respective governments, as lineally descended from Roderic the Great, who was legal proprietor of all Wales. Gruffydh ap Conan had already reduced the isle of Anglesey, but not being able to levy a sufficient army from thence to oppose Trahaern, he invited over a great party of Irish and Scots, and then with his whole army joined with Rhys ap Theodore Prince of South Wales. Trahaern in like manner affociating to himself Caradoc ap Gruffydh and Mailyr the fons of Rywalhon ap Gwyn his coufins-german, the greatest and most powerful men then in Wales, drew up his forces together, with resolution to fight them. Both armies meeting upon the mountains of Curno, a terrible and cruel battle enfued presently thereupon; which proved the more fierce and bloody, by reason that both parties resolutely referred their whole fortune to the fuccess of their arms; and life would prove vain if the day was loft. But after a difmal fight on both fides, the victory fell at last to Gruffydh and Rhys, Trahaern with his cousins being all flain in the field; after whose death Gruffydh took possession of North Wales; and so the rule of all Wales, after a tedious interval, was again restored to the right line. About the same time, Urgeney ap Sitfylht, a person of noble quality in Wales, was treacherously murdered by the sons of Rhys Sais, or the Englishman; by which name, the Welch were accustomed to denominate all persons, as either had lived any confiderable time in England, or could fluently and handfomely speak the English tongue.

GRUFFYDH AP CONAN.

GRUFFYDH ap Conan being confirmed in the principality of North Wales, and Rhys ap Theodore in that of South Wales; there was no body that could create them any moleftation or diffurbance upon the account of right, which was unquestionably just; so that they quietly enjoyed for some time their re-spective dominions, without apprehension of any other pretender. Indeed, it had feldom been known before, but that one of the princes was an usurper; and particularly in North Wales, where from the time of Edwal Foel, none had legally ascended to the crown, excepting Edwal the fon of Meyric, eldest fon to Edwal Foel, in whose line the undoubted title of North Wales lawfully descended. And the right line being now restored in Gruffydh ap Conan, the same legally continued to Lhewelyn ap Gruffydh, the last Prince of the British blood. But during these revolutions in Wales, some things memorable were transacted in England; Malcolm king of the Scots descending into Northumberland, ravaged and destroyed the country without mercy, carrying away a great number of prisoners; after which the Northumbrians fell upon Walter bishop of Durham, whom they slew, together with a hundred men, whilst he fate keeping of court, not dreaming of any fuch treacherous villainy. The fame time Robert Curthoys the Bastard's eldest fon, being for some reason disgusted against his father, and fet on by the instigation of the king of France, entered Normandy with an army, and claimed it as his right; which King William being acquainted with, paffed over to Normandy, and meeting with his fon hand to hand in battle, was by him overthrown. But being returned from Normandy, he entered with a great army into Wales, and marching after the manner of a pilgrimage as far as St. David's, he offered and paid his devotion to that faint, and afterwards received homage of the kings and princes of the country. About the same time the tomb of Walwey king Arthur's fifter's fon, a most valiant person in his time, and governor of that country, from him called Walwethey, was discovered in the country of Ros, nigh the fea-shore, whose body proved monstrously pro-digious, being in length about fourteen foot.

This year Madawc, Cadwgan and Riryd, the fons A. D. 1086. of Blethyn ap Confyn some time Prince of Wales, raised a rebellion against Rhys ap Tewdor; and having drawn together a great number of licentious and malecontented people, thought to eject him out of the principality of South Wales. Rhys had not power and forces enough to oppose them; the rebels' army increasing daily by the addition of the discontented multitude, who always rejoice at any new commotion or disturbance; and therefore he was compelled to retire to Ireland, where he obtained a very confiderable party of Irish and Scots, upon promise of a sufficient reward, in case he was restored again to his principality. Having by this measure got a very sensible increase to his former strength, he landed in South Wales; the news of whose arrival being blazed abroad, his friends from all quarters presently retired to him; so that in a short time his army became numerous, and able to confront the enemy. The rebels were fenfible how the Prince's forces daily multiplied, and therefore to prevent any farther addition, they made all possible haste to force him to a battle, which in a short time after happened at Lhech y Creu, where the rebels were vanquished; Madawc and Riryd being flain, and Cadwgan glad to fave his life by flight. Rhys having won fo fignal a victory, and fearing no farther disturbance dismissed the Irish and Scots with great rewards, who honourably returned to their 1087. own country. Within a while after, an unaccountable facrilege was committed at St. David's; the shrine belonging to the cathedral, being feloniously conveyed

were stolen, and only the shrine left empty behind. The same year a civil war broke out in England, and feveral armies in feveral parts of the kingdom were up in arms at the fame time, and among the rest the Welch, who entering into Glocester and Worcester shires, burnt and destroyed all before them, to the gate of Worcester. The king having drawn his army together, proceeded against his enemies by degrees, and falling upon their separate parties, without any great difficulty, reduced all to obedience. With- A. D. 1089. in two years after, Archbishop Sulien, the most pious and learned person in Wales, died, in the eightieth year of his age, and in the fixteenth year of his bishoprick; presently after whose death the town of St. David's fuffered a more fenfile calamity, being first plundered, and afterwards burnt by a company of pyrates, who forely infested the British coasts. About the fame time also died Cadifor the son of Calhoyn Lord of Dyfed, whose sons Lhewelyn and Eineon moved Gruffydh ap Meredith to take up arms against his fovereign Prince Rhys ap Tewdor, with whom they joined all the forces they could levy among their tenants and dependants; then passing with their army to Lhandydoch, boldly challenged Rhys to fight; who thereupon gave them battle, and after a resolute engagement of both sides, the rebels were at length worsted, and put to flight, and then so narrowly purfued, that Gruffydh ap Meredith was taken prisoner, and in fine executed as a traitor: but Eineon made his escape, and not daring to trust himself with any of his own kindred, he fled to Iestyn ap Gurgant, Lord of Morgannwc, who was then in actual rebellion against Prince Rhys. And to ingratiate himself the more in Iestyn's favour, he promised, upon condition of the performance of certain articles, one of which more especially was, That he should receive his daughter in matrimony; that he would bring over to his aid a confiderable body of Normans, with whom he was fingularly acquainted, as having ferved a long time in England. These articles being agreed to and recorded, Eineon posted to England, and in a little time brought matters fo about, that he prevailed with Robert Fitzhamon and twelve more knights, to levy a strong army of Normans, and to come to Wales to A.D. 1090 the protection and aid of Iestyn. The beginning of the following year they landed in Glamorganshire; and were honourably received by Iestyn, who joining his power to theirs, marched to Prince Rhys's dominions, where, without the least shew of mercy to his own countrymen, he encouraged the Normans, by his own example, to spoil and destroy all that came before them. Prince Rhys was mightily grieved to find his country fo unmercifully haraffed; and though at this time very antient, being above ninety-eight years of age, he could not refrain but meet his enemies; and having with all possible speed raised a convenient army; he met with them near Brecknock, where after a terrible fight, and a great flaughter on both fides, he was unhappily flain. With him fell the glory and grandeur of the principality of South Wales, being afterwards rent in pieces, and divided into several parts and piece-meals among the Norman captains, as shall be by and by more particularly related. Prince Rhys left iffue behind him by the daughter of Rywalhon ap Confyn, two fons, Gruffydh and Grono, the latter of which was detained prisoner by the king of England; though the author of the winning of the lordship of Glamorgan, affirms, that he was flain, together with his father, in this battle against the Normans.

The Normans having received a fufficient reward from Iestyn, upon the account of their service against Prince Rhys, returned to their ships, in order to their voyage homeward. But before they could loose anchor to fail off, Eineon recalled them, being ungratefully affronted by Iestyn, who absolutely refused to make good to him the conditions which they had agreed upon, before the Normans were invited to Wales. Upon this account, Eineon was so irreconcilably incensed against Iestyn, that to be revenged upon him, he was willing to facrifice his native country into the hands of strangers, and therefore endeavoured to persuade the Normans concerning the fatness and fertility of the country, and how eafily they might conquer and make themselves masters of it. But he needed not many arguments to perfuade a people that were willing of themselves, especially being encouraged thereto by a person of some esteem in the country: whereupon, without any more questions, they prefently fell to their business; and from friends became unexpectedly foes. Ieftyn was much furprifed to find the Normans, whom he had but lately honourably dismissed from his service, and as he thought, with satisfaction, fo foon become his enemies; but perceiving a ferpent in the hedge, and Eineon fo amicably great among them, he quickly gueffed at the reason, of which there was no other remedy left but to bewail the unnecessary folly of his own knavery. The Normans easily dispossessed lestyn of the whole lordship of Glamorgan; the most pleasant and fertile part of which they divided among themselves; leaving the more mountainous and craggy ground to the share of Eineon. The knights who accompanied Fitzhamon in this expedition were, William de Londres or London; Richard de Grena villa, or Greenfield; Paganus de Turberville; Robert de S. Quintino, or Quintin; Richard de Sywarde; Gilbert de Humfrevile; Roger de Berkrolles; Reginald de Sully; Peter le Soore; John le Fleming; Oliver de S. John; William de Efterling, or Stradling. These persons having distributed that fair and pleafant lordship among themselves, and confidering that they were much better provided for here than they could be at home, fettled in Glamorgan. where their posterity have continued to this time. And here we may observe, what a train of circumstances concurred together, in favour of the Normans, having possession of this lordship: for had not Eineon, being vanquished by Prince Rhys, fled to Iestyn, rather, than to another; or had not Iestyn been so vain as to attempt the conquest of South Wales, and to that end confented to the advice of Eineon; there had been no necessity of inviting the Normans at all to Wales. And then, the Normans being arrived, had not Iestyn ungenteely violated his promise, and refused to perform the articles agreed upon between him and Eineon; or had not Eineon purfued to desperate revenge, but fatisfied his paffion upon Ieftyn, without prejudice to his country; the Normans would have returned home with fatisfaction, and confequently could never have been proprietors of that noble country they then forcibly possessed. And now again the Welch experienced the dangerous consequence of calling in a foreign nation to their aid; the Saxons had already difpossessed them of the best part of the island of Britain. and now the Normans feized upon a great part of that fmall country, which had escaped the sovereignty and conquest of the English. But here it will be necessary to lay down the state and condition of this lordship of Morgannwe or Glamorgan, and what share each particular knight obtained in the distribution of it.

The lordship of Glamorgan reaches in length twenty-seven miles, even from Rymny bridge to the east, to Pwlh Conan westward; and in breadth from Aberthaw, otherwise Aberdaon on the fouth part, to the confines of Brecknockshire above Morley's castle, twenty-two miles. This being a royal lordship, the lords thereof owing no other subjection than obedience only to the crown, assumed to themselves all the privileges of a regal court, excepting only the pardoning of criminals in case of treason. And not only Glamorgan, but the feveral petty lordships of which it confifted, namely, Sengennyth, Myscyn, Ruthin, Lhanblethian, Tir Iarlh, Glyn Rothney, Avan, Neth, Coyty, Talavan, and Lantuit or Boyiarton: exercifed the same privilege of Jura Regalia, with this difference only, that in case of wrong judgment in these courts, appeal might be made in the countycourt of Glamorgan, which being superior to the rest, had power to reverse any judgment given in them. Within this lordship were eighteen castles, and thirty-six knight's fees; besides the town and castle of Kynfig, the town of Cowbridge or Pont Vaen, and the town and castle of Caerdaf; in the latter of which the lord of Glamorgan chiefly re-Ter I fided fided, wherein the county-court was monthly kept. The annual revenue of this lordship amounted to a thousand marks; whereof four hundred was allowed for the fees and falary of the feveral officers belonging to the fame. This lordship of Glamorgan Robert Fitzhamon kept to himself; and the others he distributed between his feveral followers; namely, to William de Londres he gave the castle and manor of Ogmore: to Richard Greenfield the lordfhip of Neth; to Paine Turberville that of Coyty; to Robert S. Quintine Lhan Blethyan; to Richard Syward Talavan; to Gilbert Humfrevile the castle and manor of Penmarc; to Reginald Sully the castle and manor of Sully; to Roger Berkrolles that of East Orchard: to Peter le Soor that of Peterton; to John Fleming that of S. George; to John S. John that of Fonmon or Fenyon; and lastly, to William le Esterling or Stradling that of S. Donats. But that these knights should have dependence upon, and might feem to hold their feveral lordships and estate from him; Robert Fitzhamon appointed them their feveral apartments in his castle of Caerdaf, where they were obliged to give their attendance at every court-day, which was monthly kept upon Monday.

But about the same time that Robert Fitzhamon took the lordship of Glamorgan, Barnard Newmarch, a nobleman likewise of Normandy, obtained by conquest the lordship of Brecknock; and Henry de Newburgh fon to Roger de Bellemont, by the Conqueror made Earl of Warwick, the country of Gower. But Barnard Newmarch gave the people of Wales fome ' small satisfaction and content, by marrying Nest, the daughter also of Nest, daughter to Lhewelyn ap Gruffydh Prince of Wales, by whom he had issue, a son called Mahael. This worthy gentleman being legally to succeed his father in the lordship of Brecknock, was afterwards difinherited by the malice and baseness of his own unnatural mother. The occasion was thus, Nest happening to fall in admiration of a certain knight, with whom she had more than ordinary familiarity, even beyond what she exprest to her own husband; Mahael perceiving her dissolute and loose behaviour, counselled her to take care of her fame and reputation, and to leave off that scandalous liberty which the took; and afterwards meeting cafually her gallant coming from her, fought and grievoully wounded him. Upon this Nest to be revenged upon her fon, went to Henry the first, king of England, and in his presence took her corporal oath, that her fon Mahael was illegitimate, and not begot by Barnard Newmarch her husband, but another person; by virtue of which oath or rather persury, Mahael was difinherited, and his fifter, whom her mother attested to be legitimate, was bestowed by the king upon Milo, the fon of Walter Constable, afterward Earl of Hereford, who in right of his wife enjoyed the whole estate of Barnard Newmarch lord of Brecknock. Of this Milo it is reported, that telling King Henry of a strange accident which had occurred to him by Lhyn Savathan in Wales, where the birds upon the pond at the passing by of Gruffydh the son of Rhys ap Theodor, seemed by their chirping to be in a manner overjoyed; the king replied, It was not fo wonderful; for although, fays he, manifestly we have violently and injuriously oppressed that nation, yet it is known, that they are the lawful and original inheritors of that country.

But whilft the Normans were thus carving for themselves in Glamorgan and Brecknock, Cadogan ap Blethyn ap Confyn towards the end of April entered into Dyved, and having ravaged and destroyed the country, returned back. But within eight weeks after, there succeeded him a more statal enemy; for the Normans landing in Dyved and Cardigan, began to fortify themselves in castles and other strong places, and to inhabit the country upon the sea-shore, which before was not in their possession. Indeed the Normans having by the connivance of the Conqueror already got into their hands all the best estates in England, began now to spy out the commodities of Wales; and perceiving moreover how bravely Robert Fitzhamon and Barnard Newmarch had sped there, thought they might as well expect the like fortune. Wherefore having obtained a grant from King William (who readily consented to their request, because by this means he killed two birds with one stone, procured to himself their utmost service upon occasion, withal provided for them without any charge to him-felf) they came to Wales, and so entered upon the estates appointed them by the king, which they held of him by knight-fervice, having first done homage and fworn fealty for the fame. Roger Montgomery Earl of Arundel did homage for the lordships of Powis and Cardigan; Hugh Lupus Earl of Chester for Tegengl and Ryfonioc, together with all the land lying upon the fea-shore to the river Conwey; Arnulph a younger fon of Roger Montgomery for Dyved; Barnard Newmarch for Brecknock; Ralph Mortimer for Eluel; Hugh de Lacy for the land of Ewyas; Eustace Omer for Mold and Hapredale; and several others did the like homage for other lands. But Roger Montgomery, who by the Conqueror was created Earl of Arundel and Shrewsbury, entered in an hostile manner into Powis-land, and having won the castle and town of Baldwyn, fortified it in his own right, and called it Montgomery after his own name. King William of England was now in Normandy, and bufily engaged in a war against his brother Robert; by the advantage of whose absence, Gruffydh ap Conan Prince of North Wales, and Cadogan ap Blethyn, who now ruled in South Wales, with joint force entered into Cardigan and flew a great number of Normans, whose pride and excessive cruelties towards the Welch, were altogether intolerable. But after fufficient execution there, being returned home, the Normans fent for more aid from England; which being arrived, they thought to make a private in-road into North Wales, and fo to be revenged upon the Welch. But their design being happily discovered to Cadogan, he drew up his forces to meet them, and then unexpectedly fetting upon them in the forest of Yspys, after a very warm resistment of the Normans side, forced them to retire by slight, and then triumphantly marching through Cardigan and proved too frong, and impregnable.

The next year the Normans who inhabited the A. D. 1093. country of Glamorgan fell upon and destroyed the countries of Gwyr, Kidwely, and Ystrad Tywy, which they harraffed in fuch a cruel manner, that they left them bare of any people to inhabit. And to increase as it was thought, the miseries of the Welch, King William Rufus being informed of the great flaughter which Gruffydh ap Conan, and the fons of Blethyn ap Confyn had lately committed upon the English, as well within Cheshire, Shropshire, Worcestershire, and Herefordshire, as within Wales; entered the country at Montgomery, which place the Welch having fometime fince demolished, King William lately rebuilt, But the Welch kept all the passages through the woods and rivers, and all other streights so close, that the King could effect nothing confiderable against them; and therefore when he perceived that his labour was but loft, in continuing in those parts, he forthwith decamped, and returned with no great honour back to 1094. England. But this retreat of King William was not altogether fo favourable to the interest of the Welch, as the death of William Fitz-Baldwyn, who was owner of the castle of Rydcors, and did the greatest mischief and hurt to the South Wales men of any other. He being dead, the garrifon of Rydcors which was wont to keep the Welch in continual awe, forfook that place, and by that means gave opportunity to the inhabitants of Gwyr, Brecknock, Gwent, and Gwentlhwc, to shake off that intolerable yoke the Normans forced upon them, who after they had robbed them of their lands, kept them in perpetual subjection. But now William Fitz Baldwyn being dead, and the garrison of Rydcors scattered, they ventured to lay violent hands upon the Normans, who thought themfelves free from all fear; and prevailed fo fuccessfully, that they drove them all out of the country, and recovered their own antient estates. But the Normans

to be fo easily befooled out of what they had with a great deal of pains and danger once possessed; and therefore having drawn a great number of English and Normans to their aid, they were defirous to venture another touch with the Welch, and to return if poffible, to their once acquired habitations. But the Welch fo abhorred their pride and tyrannical dominion over them when they were mafters, that they were refolved not to be subject to such tyrants again; and therefore they boldly met them at a place called Celly Iarfawc, and fet upon them fo manfully, the very apprehension of fervitude whetting their spirits, that they put them to flight with great flaughter, and drove them out of the country. The Normans however were not fo absolutely routed with this overthrow: but like a fly in the night which destroys itself in the candle, they must needs covet their own destruction; their greediness egging them on to venture with few, what was not practicable to be effected by many. Therefore on they came as far as Brecknock, with this abfolute vow and resolution not to leave one living thing remaining in that country. But they fell short of their policy, the people of the country being removed to a narrow fireight, to expect their paffing through; whither the Normans being advanced, they fell upon them, and killed a great number of them. About the fame time, Roger Montgomery Earl of Salop and Arundel, William Fitzeaustace Earl of Glocester. Arnold de Harecourt, and Neal le Vicount, were flain by the Welch between Caerdaf and Brecknock; and Walter Eureux Earl of Sarum, Rosmer, and Mantilake; Hugh earl of Gourney, were wounded, who afterwards died in Normandy. The Normans finding that they continually lost ground, thought it not adviseable to stay any longer; and therefore having placed fufficient garrifons in those castles which they had formerly built, they returned with what speed they could to England. But all the hafte they did make, could not secure them from the fury of the Welch; for Gruffydh and Ifor, the fons of Ednerth I4

ap Cadogan, expected them privately at a place called Aberlhech, where falling unexpectedly upon them; they flew the greatest part of their number, the rest narrowly escaping safe to England. But the Norman garrisons which were left behind, defended themselves with a great deal of bravery, till at last, finding no prospect of relief, they were forced for their own fafety to deliver them up to the Welch, who from that time, became again proprietors of those places which the Normans had dispossed them from. And this encouraged the Welch to undertake other things against the English; for immediately after this, certain of the nobility of North-Wales, Uchthed the fon of Edwyn ap Grono by name, together with Howel ap Grono, and the fons of Cadogan ap Blethyn of Powys-land, paffed by Cardigan into Dyved (which country King William had given to Arnulph fon to Roger Montgomery, who had built thereon the castle of Pembrock, and appointed Gerald de Windsore governour of the same) and deftroying all the country with fire and fword, excepting Pembrock castle, which was impregnable, they returned home with a great deal of booty. In recompence of this, when the lords of North-Wales were returned, Gerald issued out of the castle, and spoiled all the country about S. Davids; and after he had got fufficient plunder, and taken divers prifoners returned back into the castle.

Normandy, and having heard how that the Welch had cut off a great number of his subjects in Wales, gathered all his power together, and with great pomp and oftentation entered the marshes, resolving utterly to eradicate the rebellious and implacable humour of the Welch nation. But after all this boast and seeming resolution, he durst venture no farther than the marshes, where having built some few castles, he returned with no greater homogeneous transfers. But the next Spring, Hugh de Montgomery earl of Arundel and Salop, by the Welch

named Hugh Goch, and Hugh Fras, or the Fat, Earl of Chefter, being invited by some disaffected Welch lords, came into North-Wales with a very great army. Prince Gruffydh ap Conan, and Cadogan ap Blethyn, perceiving themselves to be too weak to oppose so numerous an army, and what was worse, being very suspicious of the fidelity and honesty of their own forces, thought it their best way to take the hills and mountains for their fafety, where they were like to remain most secure from the enemy. Then the English army marched towards Anglesey, and being come over against the island, they built the castle of Aberlhiennawc. But Gruffydh and Cadogan could no longer endure to fee their country over-run by the English, and therefore they descended from the mountains, and came to Anglesey, thinking, with what succours they should receive from Ireland, of which they were disappointed, to be able to defend the island from any attempt that should be made upon it. And now the whole reason, and the occasion of the English coming to Wales was discovered; for Owen ap Edwyn, the Prince's chiefest counsellor, whose daughter Gruffydh had married (having himself also married Everyth the daughter of Confyn, aunt to Cadogan) upon some private grudge or other, called in the English into Wales, and at this time openly joined his forces with theirs, and led the whole army over into Anglesey. Gruffydh and Cadogan finding how they were betrayed by their dearest friend, as they thought; for fear of farther treachery, judged it prudent to fail privately for Ireland; after whose departure, the English fell cruelly to work, destroying all they could come at, without any respect to either age or fex.

And whilst the English continued in Anglesey, Magnus the son of Harold, lately King of England, came over with a great fleet, intending to lay faster hold upon that kingdom, than his father had done, and to recover the same to himself. But whilst he steered his course thitherward, he was driven by contrary winds to the coasts of Anglesey, where he would fain have landed, had not the English army kept him off-But in this skirmish Magnus accidentally wounded Hugh Earl of Salop with an arrow in the face, whereof he died; and then of a sudden both armies relinquished the island, the English returning to England,

A.D. 1097 appointing Owen ap Edwyn, who invited them over, prince of the country. But Owen did not enjoy the principality long; for in the beginning of the following spring, Gruffydh ap Conan and Cadogan ap Blethyn teturned from Ireland, and having concluded a peace with the Normans, for some part of their lands in Wales; Gruffydh remained in Anglesey, and Cadogan had Cardigan, with part of Powis. But though Cadogan recovered his estate, yet in a little while after he lost his fon Lhewelyn, who was treacherously murdered by the men of Brecnock; at which time also died Rythmarch archbishop of S. David's, the son of Sulien, being in the forty-third year of his age; a man of the greatest piety, wisdom, and learning, as had flourished a long time in Wales, excepting his father, under whose tutelage he was educated.

following, King William Rufus, as he was hunting in the new forrest, was accidentally slain with an arrow, which one Walter Tyrrel shot at a stag; and his eldest brother being then engaged in the holy war, Henry his younger brother, whom in his life-time he had nominated his successor, was crowned in his stead. The same year, Hugh Earl of Chester, Grono ap Cadogan, and Gwyn ap Gruffydh departed this life.

About two years after, a rebellion broke out in England; Robert de Belesmo, the son of Roger de Montgomery Earl of Salop, and Arnulph his brother Earl of Pembrock, took up arms against king Henry; which he being informed of, sent them a very gracious message to come before him, and declare their grievances, and the reason of their rising up in arms against his Majesty. But the Earls instead of appearing in person, sent him slight and frivolous excuses, and in the mean while made all necessary preparations for the war, both by raising of forces, and fortifying fortifying their castles and strong holds. And to strengthen themselves the more, they sent rich pre-sents, and made large promises to Iorwerth, Cadogan, and Meredith, the fons of Blethyn ap Confyn; for to bring them to their fide. Robert fortified four castles, namely, Arundel, Tekinhil, Shrewsbury, and Brugge; which last, by reason that Robert built it without the confent of the king, was the chief occasion of this war; and Arnulph fortified his castle at Pembrock. After this, they entered in an hostile manner into the territories of the king of England, wasting and destroying all before them. And to augment their ftrength, Arnulph fent Gerald his fteward, to Murkart King of Ireland, defiring his daughter in wedlock; which was eafily granted, with the promife too of great fuccours and large supplies. King Henry, to put a ftop to their bold adventures, marched in person against them; and laying siege to the castle of Arundel, won it without any great opposition; and quickly afterwards the castle of Tekinhill; but that of Brugge, by reason of the situation of the place, and the depth of the ditch about it, feemed to require longer time and harder fervice; and therefore King Henry was advised to fend privately to Iorwerth ap Blethyn, promising him great rewards if he forfook the earl's part, and came over to him; urging to him, what mischief Roger, earl Robert's father, and his brother Hugh, had continually done to the Welch-men. And to make him the more willing to accept of his proposals, he promised to give him all fuch lands as the earl and his brother had in Wales, without either tribute or homage; which was a part of Powys, Cardigan, and half Dyfed; the other part being in the possession of William Fitz-Baldwyn. Iorwerth receiving these offers, accepted of them very gladly, and then coming to the king, he fent all his forces to earl Robert's lands, who having received very strict orders, destroyed without mercy every thing they met with; and what made the spoil the greater, earl Robert upon his rebelling against King Henry, had caused his people to convey all their goods to Wales, for fear of the English; not thinking how his father's memory founded among the Welch. But when the News of Iorwerth's revolt reached the ears of the earl. Cadogan and Meredith, Iorwerth's brothers; their fpirits began to faint, as despairing any longer to oppose the king, since Iorwerth, who was the perfon of greatest strength in Wales, had left and forfaken them. Arnulph was gone to Ireland to fetch home his wife, and to bring over what fuccour his father-in-law, King Murkart, could afford to fend him; but he not coming in time, fome other method was to be tried, how to get fome aid against the English. A little before this rebellion broke out. Magnus, Harold's fon, landed the second time in the isle of Anglesey, and being kindly received by Gruffydh ap Conan, he had leave to cut down what timber he had need for; and so returning to the Isle of Man, which he had got by conquest, he built there three castles, and then sent to Ireland to have the daughter of Murkart in marriage to his fon, which being obtained, he created him king of Man, earl Robert hearing this, fent to Magnus for aid against king Henry; but receiving none, he thought it now high time to look to his own fafety; and therefore he fent to the king, requesting that he might quietly depart the kingdom, in case he should lay down his arms; which the king having granted, he failed to Normandy. And then king Henry fent an express to his brother Arnulph, requiring him either to follow his brother out of the kingdom, or to deliver himself up to his mercy; and so Arnulph went over also for Normandy. When the king was returned to London, Iorwerth took his brother Meredith prifoner, and committed him to the king's custody; his other brother Cadogan having reconciled himself beforehand, to whom Iorwerth gave Cardigan, with a part of Powys. Then Iorwerth went to London, to put the king in mind of his promise, and the service he had done him against earl Robert; but the king finding now all matters at quiet, was deaf to rall fuch remembrances, and inftead of promifing what he had once voluntarily proposed, against all rules of equity and gratitude, he took away Dyfed from Iorwerth, and gave it to a knight of his own, called Saer; and Stratywy Cydwely, and Gwyr he bestowed upon Howel ap Grono, and sent Iorwerth away more empty than he came: nor was this sufficient reward for his former fervices; but the next year King Henry must send some of his counsel A.D. 1101. to Shrewsbury, and cite Iorwerth to appear there, under pretence of consulting about the king's business and affairs of those parts. But the plot was laid deeper; and when without any suspicion of treachery he made his appearance, he was furprizedly attainted of high treason, and then contrary to all right and justice actually condemned to perpetual imprisonment; the true reason of this unparalleled feverity being, the king feared his strength, and was apprehensive that he would revenge the wrong and affront he received at his hands. And indeed, well had he reason to fear that, when he so ungratefully treated him, whose service he had experienced to be so greatly advantageous to him. But the policy of Princes is unaccountable; and whether to value an eminent person for his service, or to fear him for his greatness, is a subject that frequently disturbs their most settled considerations. But the noblemen that were at this time fent by the king to Shrewsbury, were Richard de Belmersh, who being chief agent about Roger Montgomery earl of Salop, was prefered to the bishoprick of London, and afterwards appointed by this king, to be warden of the marshes, and governour of the county of Salop. With him were joined in company, Walter Constable, the father of Milo, earl of Hereford, and Rayner the king's lieutenant in the county of Salop. About this time, as Bale writes, the church of Menevia or S. Davids, began to be subject to the see of Canterbury, being always afore the metropolitan church of all Wales.

CON

A.D. 1102. Shortly after this, Owen ap Edwyn, who had been author of no small mischief and disturbance to the Welch, in moving the English against his natural prince, and fon-in-law Gruffydh ap Conan, departed this life, after a tedious and miferable fickness: of which he was fo much the less pitied, by how much he had proved an enemy and a traitor to his native country. He was the fon of Grono, by his wife Edelflede the widow of Edmund, furnamed Ironfide, king of England; and had the title of Iegengl; though the English, when they had compelled Gruffydh ap Conan to flee to Ireland for fafety, constituted him prince of all North Wales. After his death, Richard Fitz-Baldwyn laid siege to, and took the caftle of Rydcors, and forcibly drove Howel ap Grono, to whom king Henry had committed the custody of it, out of the country. But Howel quickly returned, and with a high spirit of revenge, began to deftroy and burn whatfoever he could meet with, and then meeting a party of the Normans in their return homewards, he fell upon the flank of them with a very confiderable flaughter; and fo brought all the country to his subjection, excepting some few garrifons and castles which would not surrender to him. The same time King Henry took away from Saer the government of Dyfed, which formerly was Iorwerth ap Blethyn's, and bestowed it upon Gerald, who had been some time earl Arnulph's steward in those parts; and therefore by reason of his knowledge of the country, was in all probability best able to take upon him the management of it. But the Normans in Rydcors caftle being fensible that they were not able to effect any thing against Howel ap Grono in open field, after their accustomed manner, began to put that in execution by treachery, which they could not compass by force of arms. And how to make Howel a facrifice to those Normans he had lately flain, they could find no fafer way than by corrupting one Gwgan ap Meyric, a man in great favour and esteem with Howel, upon the account chiefly that one of his children was nurfed by Gwgan's

wife. This ungrateful villain, to carry on his wicked intrigue the more unfuspected, gave Howel a very earnest invitation to his house to a merriment, where, without any fuspicion of treachery, being come, he was welcomed with all the seeming affection and kindness imaginable. But no sooner was he settled A.D. 1103: but Gwgan gave notice thereof to the Norman garrifons; and therefore by break of day they entered the town, and coming about the house where Howel lay in bed, they presently gave a great shout. Howel hearing the noile, suspected something of mischief, and therefore leaping in all haste out of bed, he made to his weapons, but could not find them, by reason that Gwgan had conveyed them away whilst he was afleep. And now being affured of treachery in the case, and finding that his men had fled for their lives, he endeavoured all he could to make his escape; but Gwgan and his company were too quick for him; and fo being secured, they strangled him, and delivered his body to the Normans, who having cut off his head, conveyed it to the castle of Rydcors. This most villainous murder, so barbarously committed upon the king's lieutenant, was not in the least taken notice of; for King Henry was fo unreasonably prejudiced in favour of the Normans, that whatever misdemeanor, be it of never so high a nature, was by them committed, it was prefently winked at, and let fall to the ground; whereas, if the Welch trespassed but against the least injunction of the king's laws, they were most severely punished: which was the cause that they afterwards stood up against the king in their own defence, being by experience affured, that he minded nothing more than their utter destruction.

About this time Anselm, archbishop of Canterbury, convened a fynod at London, wherein among other injunctions then decreed, the celibacy of the clergy was enjoined; marriage being before ever allowed of in Britain, to them in holy orders. But this new injunction created a great deal of heat and animosity among the clergy, some approving of it as reasonable and orthodoxical; others condemning it, as an innovation, and contrary to the plain letter of scripture. But during these disputes between the clergy, king Henry being now in the fifth year of his reign, sailed over with a great army into Normandy, where his brother Robert, together with Robert de Belesmo, Arnulph, and William earl of Mortaign, gave him battle; but the king having obtained the victory, took the duke his brother, with William of Mortaign, prisoners; and carrying them into England, he caused first his brother Robert's eyes to be plucked out, and then condemned them both to perpetual imprisonment in the castle of Cardysis.

A.D.1104 About the same time Meyric and Gruffydh, the sons of Trahaern ap Caradoc were both slain by the means of Owen ap Cadogan ap Blethyn; whose uncle Meredith ap Blethyn, who had been prisoner for a long time in England, now broke open the prison, wherein he was very narrowly confined; and returning to his own country, had his estate restored, which afterwards he quietly enjoyed.

The next year a very difmal and calamitous accident happening in the Low-countries, proved very incommodious and prejudicial to the Welch; for a great part of Flanders being drowned by the overflowing of the fea, the inhabitants were compelled to feek for fome other country to dwell in, their own being now covered with water. And therefore a great many being come over to England, they requested of King Henry to assign them some part of his kingdom which was empty and void of inhabitants, where they might fettle and plant themselves. The king taking advantage of this charitable opportunity, and being in a manner affured, that thefe Flemings would be a considerable thorn in the side of the Welch, bestowed upon them very liberally what was not justly in his power to give; and appointed them the country of Ros, in Dyfed or West-Wales, where they continue to this day. But Gerald the king's lieutenant in those parts, was resolved to be afore-hand with them, and rebuilt the castle of Pembrock,

Pembrock, in a place called Congarth Fechan; whither he removed his family and all his goods. But A. D. 1106. here a very unfortunate accident happened to him; for Cadwgan ap Blethyn having prepared a sumptuous feast in the Christmas, invited all the lords to his country-house in Dyfed, and among the rest his son Owen. who lived in Powis. This young gentleman being at his father's house, and hearing Nest the wife of Gerald univerfally praifed for her incomparable beauty, was fo fmitten with the rumour that went abroad of her, that by all means he must see the lady, who was by all fo much admired. And forafmuch as Gwladys, wife to Rhys ap Theodore, and mother to Nest, was the daughter of Rywalhon ap Confyn, cousin-german to Cadwgan his father; under pretence of friendship and relation, he made bold to pay her a visit. But finding the truth far to surpais the fame that went of her, he returned home fo inflamed with her charms, that not being able to keep the mastery over himself, he went back again the same night, and being attended by a company of wild, head-strong youths, they privily entered into the castle, and encompassing the chamber about, where Gerald and his wife lay, they fet the house on fire. Gerald hearing a noise, would fain go out to know the meaning of fuch unfeafonable disturbance; but his wife fearing some treachery, perfuaded him to make as private an escape as he could: and then pulling up a board in the privy, let him go that way. Then returning to her chamber, she would fain affure those notorious youths, that there was no body besides herself and children there; but this being not fatisfactory, they forcibly broke in, and having fearched every the most private corner, and not finding Gerald, they took his wife and two fons, with a fon and a daughter born by a concubine, and carried them away to Powis; having first set fire to the castle, and destroyed the country as they went along, Cadwgan, Owen's father, hearing of what outrageous crime his fon had committed, was exceedingly concerned and forry, chiefly because hereby he was like to incur King Henry's great displeasure; and therefore he went with all fpeed to Powis, and defired his for with all intreaties, to fend home to Gerald his wife and children, with whatever else he had taken away from him. But Owen was fo amouroufly inexorable with respect to the woman, that he would by no means part with her; however, upon her requeft, he was willing to restore Gerald his children back again, which forthwith he performed. But when Richard bishop of London, whom King Henry had constituted Warden of the Marches, being now at Shrewsbury, heard of this, he fent for Ithel and Madoc the fons of Ryryd ap Blethyn, persons of great power and interest in Wales, promifing them very confiderable rewards, befides the government of the whole country, in case they could bring Owen and his father Cadwgan, either dead or alive, to him, that he might revenge that heinous affront which they had done to the king of England. With them he joined Lhywarch the son of Trahaern ap Caradoc, whose two brethren Owen had flain, and Uchtryd the fon of Edwyn; which four undertook to answer effectually the bishop's proposal to them. But when they had united their forces, and began in an hostile manner to destroy the country as they passed along; Uchtryd sent private notice before him, requiring all who were any way defirous of their own fafety, to come to him; because no quarters was to be given to any that was found in the country. The people being thus fo opportunely forewarned, began to bethink with themselves how they might best avoid so eminent a danger; and thereupon some fled to Arustly, others to Melienyth, fome to Stradtywy, and fome to Dyfed; but in this latter place they met with very cold welcome; for Gerald, who was then very bufy in exercising revenge upon that country, falling it among them, cut off a confiderable number of them. The like fate befel them who escaped to Arustly and Melienyth; for Walter bishop of Hereford having raifed an army in defence of the town of Caermyrdhyn, before he could come thither, accidentally met with these stragling fugitives, and knowing to what country they belonged to, without any further ceremony, he fell upon them, and put most of them to the sword. But they who fled to Stradtywy, were gently received by Meredith ap Rytherch, and fuch as reforted to Uchtryd, were kindly entertained by him; and fo he marched with the rest of his confederates to Rydcors castle; it being the general opinion, that it was best to enter the country by night, and to take Cadwgan and Owen his fon by furprife. But Uchtryd reflecting upon the difficulty of the country, and how eafily they might be entrapped by an ambuicade, diffuaded them from any fuch nocturnal undertakings; and told them, that it was far more adviseable to enter the country in good order, when the light gave the foldiers opportunity to keep and observe their ranks. But whilst they were thus confidering of the most effectual way to carry on their purpose, Owen got a ship at Aberdysi, bound for Ireland; and escaping thither, avoided the narrow fearch that was the following day made for them. But when neither father nor fon could be found. all the fault was laid upon Uchtryd, who had diffuaded them from falling upon the castle unexpectedly; and therefore all they could do, fince their escape, was to burn and destroy the country; which they did effectually, excepting the two fanctuaries of Lhanpadarn and Lhandewi Brefi; out of which however they took feveral persons who had escaped thither, and carried them away prisoners to their several countries. But Owen, with them who were accessary to the burning of Rydcors caftle, being fled into Ireland, defired the umbrage and protection of King Murcart; who received him very gladly, upon the account of their former acquaintance; for Owen, during the war betwixt the Earls of Arundel and Chester, and the Welch, had fled to King Murcart, and brought him very rich presents from Wales, Cadwgan all this while lay privately in Powis; but thinking it impossible to continue there long undiscovered, he adjudged it his wifer way to fend to King Henry, and to declare his innocency and abhorrence of that fact which his fon had committed. The King was eafily perfuaded that the old man was guiltless, and wholly ignorant of his K 2 fon's fon's crime; and therefore he gave him permission to remain in the country, and to enjoy the town and lands he received by his wife, who was the daughter of a Norman lord, called Pygot de Say. But his lands in Powis were otherwise distributed; for his nephews Madoc and Ithel, finding what circumstances their uncle Cadwgan lay under, upon the account of his fon Owen; they divided betwixt themselves such lands as he and his fon possessed in Powis, though afterwards they could never agree about the equal distribution of it. To counterbalance this, Cadwgan made fuch friends to the King of England, that upon paying the fine of 100 l. he had a grant of all his lands in Cardigan, and a power to recall all the inhabitants, who had rubbed off upon the publication of the King's late order, That no Welchman or Norman should dwell in Cardigan. Upon information of this grant to Cadwgan, several of them that retired to Ireland returned again privately to Wales, and lurkingly remained with their friends; but Owen durst not appear in Cardigan, by reason that his father had received that country from King Henry, upon condition that he would never entertain nor receive his fon, nor by any means fuccour him either with men or money. Nevertheless, Owen came to Powis, and would fain be reconciled to the king, and make an atonement for his late misdemeanor; but he could find no body that would venture to speak in his behalf, nor make the king acquainted with his defire and willingness to submit. And thus being hopeless and full of despair, he could not possibly divine which way to turn himself; till at last, a very unexpected opportunity offered him means and occasion to oppose the English. The matter was this, there happened a difference betwixt Madoc ap Ryryd and the bishop of London, lieutenant of the marches of Wales, about certain English felons, who being under the protection of Madoc, he would not restore at the bishop's request. The bishop being much offended at Madawc's denial, threatened him very feverely; and therefore to make all possible preparations preparations against an ensuing storm, Madawc sent to Owen, who heretofore was his greatest enemy, desiring his help against the bishop; and by this means being reconciled, they took their mutual oaths not to betray each other, and that neither should make a separate agreement with the English without the knowledge and approbation of the other. And so uniting their power, they spoiled and ravaged all the country about them, destroying whatever they could meet with which belonged to those they had no kindness or affection for, without the least distinction of English or Welch.

Iorwerth ap Blethyn had been very unjustly detained A.D. 1107. in prison all this time; and now King Henry calling to mind what hardship he laboured under, and that he committed him to custody upon no pretence of reason, sent to know of him, what he was willing to pay for his liberty, Iorwerth being now almost ready to fink under a fatigue of fo long imprisonment, was glad to give any thing he was able, to obtain that which he had so long in vain hoped for; and therefore he promised either 300 l. in specie, or to the value of it in cattle and horses; for the payment of which, Iorwerth and Ithel the fons of his brother Ryryd were delivered for pledges. Then the king released him out of prison, and restored him all his lands which were taken from him; and of the due for his liberty, the king bestowed 10 l. upon Henry, Cadwgan's son by the daughter of Pygot de Say the Norman. Owen and Madawc all this while committed all the waste and destruction possible, and cruelly annoyed both the English and Normans; and always withdrew and retired to Iorwerth's estate, which so troubled him, by reason of the king's strict orders, not to permit Owen to come to his or Cadwgan's territories, that at length he fent to them this politive and peremptory rebuke; "Since it hath pleased God to place us in the midst " of our enemies, and to deliver us into their hands; " and hath so far weakened us, as that we are not able " to do any thing by our own strength; and your fa-"ther Cadwgan and myself, are particularly com-K 3 " manded

"these your rebellious practices; therefore as a friend
"I intreat you, command you as a lord, and desire

"or your father Cadwgan's territories,"

Owen and Madawe receiving fuch a prefumptuous message, were the more enraged, and in the way of a malignant retribution, did more frequently than heretofore, shelter themselves in lorwerth's country; in somuch, that at last, since that they would neither by threats nor intreaties defift from their wonted courses, he was forced to gather his power, and drive them out by force of arms. Being chased out hence, they made in-roads into Uchtryd's country in Merionethshire; but Uchtryd's fons, being then in Cyveilioc, hearing of it, they fent to the people of the country, with politive orders to oppose and resist any offer they would make to enter the country. The people, though wanting a skilful commander, were recolved to do as much as lay in their power; and so meeting with them by the way, they let upon them so furiously, that Owen and Madawc, though after a brave defence, were forced to bear back, and to take the heels; Owen to Cardigan to his father Cadwgan, and Madawc to Powis. Yet all this misfortune could not suppress the restless spirit of Owen; for as foon as he could rally together his fcattered troops, he made divers inroads into Dyfed, and carrying away feveral persons to the ships, that they came in from Ireland; he first ransomed them, and then lifting them under his own command, made such addition to his army, that he ventured to fet upon a town in Dyfed belonging to the Flemings, and having rased it to the ground, he returned to Cardigan; having no regard to what inconveniency might befal his father from the king of England, upon this account: which a little afterwards unhappily fell out. For it happened that some of Owen's men having had intelligence, that a certain bishop called William de Brabant, was upon his journey through that country to the court of England, laid wait for his coming; who without any apprehension prehension of treachery, passing through the country was unexpectedly flain, he and all his retinue. Iorwerth and Cadwgan were then at court, to speak with King Henry, concerning certain business of their own; but whilst they discoursed the king, in comes a Fleming, that was a brother to the deceased bishop, and with a very loud exclamation, complained how that Owen, Cadwgan's fon had flain his brother and the rest of his company; and that he was succoured and entertained in Cardigan's country. King Henry hearing this, was wrathfully displeased at such cruel barbarity, that a person of that quality and profession should be so treacherously murdered; and therefore he asked Cadwgan what he could fay to the matter; who answered, that what had so unhappily fell out, was done without the least of his knowledge or approbation, and therefore defired his Majesty to impute all the blame and guilt of that unfortunate action to his fon Owen. But King Henry was fo far from being fatisfied with this reply, that he told Cadwgan in a violent passion, That since he could not keep his son so, but that he was aided and continually entertained in his country, he would bestow it upon another perfon, who was better able and more willing to keep him out; and would allow him a maintenance upon his own proper charges, upon these conditions, that he should not enter into Wales any more, without his farther orders; and so granting him twenty days for the ordering his affairs, he gave him liberty to retire to any part of his dominions, excepting Wales. When Owen and Madawc were informed how Cadwgan was treated by the king of England, and that Cardigan, which was their chiefest place of refuge, was to be given to another person, they thought that their condition by this time was desperate, and that they had not better stay any longer in Britain; and there-fore with all speed they took shipping for Ireland, where they were fure to be honourably entertained by King Murkart. Then King Henry fent for Gilbert Strongbow, Earl of Strygill, a person of noted worth and valour, and one who had often fued to the king for to grant him some lands in Wales, and bestowed upon him all the lands and inheritance of Cadwgan ap Blethyn, in case he could conquer and bring the country under. Gilbert very thankfully accepted of the proposal, and having drawn together all the forces he was able to raise, he passed to Wales, and being come to Cardigan, without the least trouble or opposition, he reduced the whole country to his subjection. The first thing he did, was the best he could to secure himself in this new purchased inheritance; in order to which, he erected two castles, one upon the frontiers of North Wales, upon the mouth of the river Ystwyth, a mile distant from Lhanbadarn; the other towards Dysed, upon the river Teisi, at a place called Dyngerant; where, as some think, Roger Montgomery had some time before laid the foundation of Cil-

Owen and Madawc were all this while in Ireland; but this latter being at length tired with the country, and not willing to endure the manners and customs of the Irish, came over for Wales, and passed to the country of his uncle Iorwerth. Iorwerth being acquainted with his arrival was feaful to fuffer the same fate with his brother Cadwgan, by winking at his being there; and therefore without any regard to relation or confanguinity, he prefently iffued out a proclamation, forbidding any of his fubjects under a great penalty to receive him, but that they should account him an open enemy to their country, and endeavour all they could to fecure him, and to bring him prisoner be-When Madawc understood this, how that his person was in continual danger whilst he remained there; having drawn to him all the out laws and villains in the country, he kept in the rocks and mountains devising all the ways and means he could to be revenged upon Iorwerth; and fo made a private league and agreement with Lhywarch ap Trahaern, who for a long time had been a mortal enemy of Iorwerth's. These two affectates, having intelligence that Iorwerth lay one night at Caereineon, gathered all their strength, and came and encompassed the house at midnight; which when Iorwerth's fervants perceived, they arose and defended the house with all the might they could; but the affailants at last putting the house on fire, they were glad, as many as could, to escape through the flames; the greatest part being forced to yield, either to the enemies sword, or the more conquering fire. Iorwerth feeing no remedy, but that he must undergo the same fate as his men had done, chose rather to die in the presence of his enemies, with his fword in his hand, than to commit his life to the cowardly flames; and therefore rushing out with great violence, he was received upon the points of the enemies spears, and so being toffed into the fire, he miferably perished by a double death. As foon as King Henry heard of his death, he fent for Cadwgan to him, and gave him all his brother's estate, being Powys-land; and promising his fon Owen his pardon, upon condition he would demean himself quietly and loyally hereafter, willed him to fend for him back from Ireland. King Henry also about this time, married his natural son Robert to Mabil daughter and fole heir to Robert Fitz-hamon, lord of Glamorgan, in whose right this Robert became lord of Glamorgan, being before the king created earl of Glocester; by whom the castle of Cardaf was built.

But Madawc finding the matter nothing mended, and that his other uncle Cadwgan, who lay under the same obligation to the king of England, ruled the country, hid himself in the most private and inaccessible places, watching only an opportunity to commit the like fact upon Cadwgan, and to murder him by one treacherous way or another. And this he effected in a little time; for Cadwgan having reduced the country to some sort of settlement and quietness, and restored the courts of judicature, where he sate in person to administer justice; came with the rest of the elders of the country to Trallwng, now Pool; and having begun to build a castle, he thought to make that the constant seat of his habitation. Madawc

understanding his defign, laid in amoush for him in his way to Trallwng; and as Cadwgan unconcernedly passed by, without the least suspicion of treachery, he suddenly set upon him, and slew him, without allowing him any time either to fight or escape. Then he fent prefently a message to Shrewsbury, to the bishop of London, the king's lieutenant in the marches, to put him in mind of his former promises to him, when he chased Owen out of the country; because that the bishop bearing an inveterate enmity to Cadwgan, and his fon Owen, granted Madawc fuch lands, as his brother Ithel was possessed of. But Meredith ap Blethyn, being informed of the death of both his brothers, went in all hafte to the king, defiring of him the lands of Iorwerth in Powys, which he had lately granted to Cadwgan; which the king granted him, till fuch time as Owen should return from Ireland. Owen did not stay long before he came over; and then going to King Henry, he was honourably received, and had all his father's estate restored to him; whereupon, in gratitude of this fignal favour, he voluntarily promifed to pay the king a confiderable fine, for the due payment of which, he gave very responsible pledges. Madawc finding himself alone to be left in the lurch, and that he had no feeming power to bear head against the king, thought it also his wifest way to make what reconciliation he could; and therefore he offered the king a very great fine, if he should peaceably enjoy his former estate, promising withal, never to molest or disturb any one that was subject to the crown of England. King Henry willing to bring all matters to a fettled condition, readily granted his request, and conferred upon him all he could reasonably ask for; only with this proviso, that upon his peril, he should provide for the relations of them whom he had so basely murdered.

A.D. 1109. And thus all matters being brought to a peaceable conclusion in Wales; the next year, Robert de Belefmo, who had been one of the chief instruments of these Welch disturbances, in that great rebellion, which himself, with Roger de Montgomery, carl of Salop, and his brother Arnulph earl of Pembroke had raifed against the king; was taken prisoner by King Henry in Normandy, and committed to perpetual imprisonment in Warham-castle. The year following, Mere-A.D. 1110. dith ap Blethyn detatched a considerable party of his men, to make incursions into the country of Lhywarch ap Trahaern ap Gwyn, who was an inveterate enemy of himself and Owen; by reason that by his aid and instigation, Madawc was encouraged to kill his uncles Iorwerth and Cadwgan. These men as they passed through Madawc's country, met a person in the nighttime who belonged to Madawc; who being asked where his mafter was, after some pretence of ignorance, at last through fear confessed, that he was not far from that place. Therefore lying quietly there all night, by break of day they arose to look out their game; and unexpectedly furprizing Madawc, they flew a great number of his men, and took himself prisoner; and so carrying him to their Lord, they delivered him up, as the greatest honour of their expedition. Meredith was not a little proud of his prifoner, and therefore to ingratiate himself the more with his nephew Owen, he committed him to fafe custody, till he was fent for; who coming thither streight, Meredith delivered Madawc up to him. Owen, though he had the greatest reason for the most cruel revenge, by reason that both his father and uncle were basely murdered by this Madawc, would not put him to death, remembering the intimate friendship and oaths that had passed betwixt them; but however, to secure him from any future mischief he might practise, he pulled out his eyes, and then set him at liberty. But least he should be capable of any revenge, by reason of his estate and strength in the country, Meredith and Owen thought fit to divide his lands betwixt them; which were Caernarvon, Aberhiw, with the third part of Deuthwfyr.

These home bred disturbances being pretty well abated, a greater storm arose from abroad; for the next year, King Henry prepared a mighty army to enter into Wales, being provoked thereto by the request of those who enjoyed a great part of the Welchmens lands, but would not be fatisfied till they got all. For Gilbert Strongbow earl of Strygill, upon whom the king had bestowed Cardigan, made great complaints of Owen ap Cadwgan, declaring how that he received and entertained fuch persons as spoiled and robbed in his country; and Hugh earl of Chefter made the like of Gruffydh ap Conan Prince of North Wales, how that his subjects and the men of Grono ap Owen ap Edwyn Lord of Tegengl, unreproved, wasted, and burnt the country of Cheshire; and to aggravate the matter the more, he added farther, that Gruffydh neither owed any fervice, nor paid any tribute to the king. Upon these complaints, King Henry was so cruelly enraged, that he fwore he would not leave one living creature remaining in North-Wales and Powys-land; but having extirpated utterly the prefent race of people, he would plant a colony of new inhabitants. And then dividing his army into three parts, he delivered one to the conduct of the Earl of Strygill, to go against South-Wales, which comprehended the whole power of the fourth part of England and Cornwall: the next battle was defigned against North-Wales, in which was all the strength of Scotland and the North, and was commanded by Alexander king of the Scots, and Hugh Earl of Chefter: the third the king led himfelf against Powys, wherein was contained the whole strength of the middle part of England. Meredith ap Blethyn hearing of these mighty preparations, and being informed that this vast army was designed against Wales, was quickly apprehensive that the Welch were not able to make any great defence; and therefore thought it his fafeft way to provide for himfelf beforehand; and so coming to the king, yielded himself up to his mercy. But Owen fearing to commit himself to those whom he knew so greedily to covet his estate, and whom he was affured were far more defirous to dispossess the Welch of their lands, than any other way to punish them for former crimes and miscarriages, fled to Gruffydh ap Conan to North-Wales. Upon that, king Henry converted his whole force that way, and came himself as far as Murcastelh, and the Scotch king to Pennant Bachwy; but the people flying to the mountains, carried with them all the cattle and provision they had; so that the English could not follow them, and as many as attempted to come at them, were either flain or wounded in the streights. But Alexander king of the Scots finding that nothing could possibly be effected against the Welch, as long as they kept the rocks and mountains, fent to Prince Gruffydh advising him to submit himself to the king, promifing him all his interest to obtain an honourable peace. But the prince was too well acquainted with English promises, and therefore refused his proposals; and fo King Henry being very unwilling to return without doing fomething in this expedition, fent to Owen to forfake the prince, who was not able to defend himfelf, but was ready to strike a peace with the Scottish king and the earl of Chester. But this cunning infinuation would not take effect; for Owen was for his life as distrustful of King Henry as Prince Gruffydh; and therefore he would hearken to no intreaties for revolting from him, who had all this while afforded him refuge, till at length his uncle Meredith, an old infinuating politician, perfuaded him, with much ado, not to forfake the king of England's propofals, who offered him all his lands without tribute, in case he would come to his fide; and therefore Meredith advised him instantly to accept of his offer, before Prince Gruffydh made a peace with the king, which if it was once done, he would be glad upon any fcore to purchase the king's mercy. Owen being prevailed upon by fuch arguments, came to the king, who received him very graciously, and told him, that because he believed his promife, he would not only perform that, but likewife exalt him above any of his kindred, and grant him his lands free from any payment of tribute. Prince Gruffydh perceiving how that Owen had submitted to the king, thought it also his wisest way to fue for peace; and fo promising the king a great fum of money, a peace was then actually agreed upon, and confirmed; which the King of England England was the more ready to confent to, because he found it impossible to do him any hurt, whilst he continued encamped in that place. Some affirm, that the fubmission as well of Prince Gruffydh as Owen, was procured by the policy of Meredith ap Blethyn and the earl of Chester; this last working with Gruffydh, and affuring him that Owen had made his peace with the king before any fuch thing was in agitation, fo that the prince yielding fomewhat to the earl's request, if Owen had gone contrary to his oath, which they had mutually taken, not to make any peace with the English, without one anothers knowledge, seemed to incline to a peace. On the other hand, Meredith going in person to his nephew Owen, affirmed for truth, that the prince and the earl of Chester were actually agreed, and the prince was on his journey to the king to make his submission. And in the mean while Meredith took especial care that all messengers betwixt the prince and Owen should be intercepted, and by that means Owen wilfully submitted himself to the king. King Henry having thus finished and brought to an end all his business in Wales, calling Owen to him, told him, that in case he would go over with him to

Normandy, and there be faithful to him, he would upon his return confirm all his promises upon him; and so Owen accepting of the king's offer, went with him to Normandy, where he behaved himfelf fo gallantly, that he was made a knight; and after his return the year following, he had all his lands and A. D. 1112. estate confirmed unto him. About the same time Griffri bishop of St. David's died, and king Henry appointed to succeed him one Barnard a Norman, much against the good-will and inclination of the Welch, who before this time were ever used to elect their own bishop. And this year the rumour of Gruffydh fon to Rhys ap Theodore was spread throughout South-Wales, who, as the report went, for fear of the king had been from a child brought up in Ireland, and having come over about two years afore, past his time privately among his relations, particularly with Gerald Steward of Pembroke his brother in law. And now the noise of a new prince being spread abroad, it came at last to the ears of the king of England, that a certain person appeared in Wales, who pretended to be the fon of Rhys ap Theodore, late prince of South Wales, and laid claim to that principality, which was new in the king's hands. King Henry being somewhat concerned with such a report, and fearing left that this new starter should create him some greater trouble, he thought to nip him in the bud, and fent down orders to apprehend him. But Gruffydh ap Rhys being aware of the traps laid against him, sent to Gruffydh ap Conan prince of North Wales, defiring his affiftance, and that he might have liberty to remain fafe in his country, which Gruffydh for his father's account, readily granted, and treated him honourably. A little after, his brother Howel who was imprisoned by Ardulph Earl of . Pembroke in the castle of Montgomery, where he had remained for a great while, made his escape and fled to his brother, then with Gruffydh ap Conan in North Wales. But King Henry being informed that Gruffydh ap Rhys and his brother Howel were entertained by the Prince of North Wales, fent very fmooth letters to Gruffydh ap Conan, desiring to speak with him, who being come, he received him with all the tokens of honour and friendship, and bestowed upon him very rich presents, just after the Norman policy, who usually make very much of those whom they defign afterwards to be serviceable to them. After some time's general discourse, King Henry came at length to the main point, and promifed the prince even mountains of gold, in case he would send Grusfydh ap Rhys or his head to him, which the Prince, overcome by fuch fair words and large promifes, promifed to perform, and so returned joyfully home, big with the expectation of his future reward. But some who wished better to Gruffydh ap Rhys and his brother Howel, presently suspected the occasion of the king's message, and therefore they advised them to withdraw themselves privately for some time, till Prince Gruffydh's mind be better understood, and whether he had made any agreement with the king of England to betray them to him. As foon as the Prince was returned to his palace at Aberffraw, he presently enquired for Gruffydh ap Rhys, and learning in a little time where he was, he fent a troop of horse to recall him to his court, but Gruffydh hearing of their approach, with all speed made his escape to the church of Aberdaron, and took fanctuary there. But Prince Gruffydh was fo resolute to make his promise good to the king of England, that without any respect to the religious place he had escaped too, he commanded the fame messengers to return, and to bring him away by force, which the clergy of the country unanimously withstood, protesting that they would not fee the liberties of the church in the least infringed. And whilst the clergy and the prince's officers were thus at debate, that fame night, fome who had compassion upon the young prince, and seeing how greedily his life was thirsted for, conveyed him away out of North Wales to Straywy in South Wales. And so being delivered from the treacherous and more dishonourable practices of the Prince of North Wales, he was forced for the defence of his own life to bid open defiance to the king of England, and thereupon having raifed all the forces which the shortness of the opportunity would permit, he made war upon the Flemings and Normans.

A.D. 1113. The next year, he laid fiege to the castle which stood over-against Arberth, and winning the same, made it plain with the ground, and from thence marched to Lhanymdhfry castle, belonging to Richard de Pwns, upon whom the King had bestowed Cantres Bychan, but the garrison commanded by Meredith ap Rytherch ap Caradoc, so mansfully defended it, that Gruffydh after killing only some few of the besieged, and burning the out-works, was forced to remove with no small loss of his own men. Finding this place impregnable, he came before Abertawy-castle, which was built by Henry Beaumont

Earl of Warwick, but this proving too strong to be quickly furrendered, after he had burnt fome of the outward buildings, he returned to Stratywy, burning and destroying all the country as he went along. And now his fame being spread abroad through all the country, all the wild and head-ftrong youth, and they whose fortunes were desperate, resorted unto him from all parts, by which means being waxed ftrong and numerous, he made in-roads into Ros and Dyfed, spoiling and destroying the country before him. Normans and Flemings were cruelly enraged with these continual depredations, and how to remedy this mischief, was not easily determined; but after a long consultation, they thought it the best way to call together fuch Welch lords as were friends to the king of England, fuch were Owen ap Rhytherch, and Rhytherch ap Theodore, with his fons Meredith and Owen, whose mother was Heynyth the daughter of Blethyn ap Confyn, and Owen ap Caradoc the fon of Gwenlhian another daughter of Blethyn, and Meredith ap Rhytherch. These protesting their loyalty and fidelity to King Henry were defired to defend the king's castle of Carmardhyn, and that by turns; Owen ap Caradoc the first fortnight, and then by succession by Rhytherch ap Theodore and Meredith ap Rhytherch. Owen undertook the defence of Carmardhyn castle for the time required of him, and Blethyn ap Gadifor had committed to him the government of Abercomyn or Abercorran castle, which appertained to Robert Courtmain. But for all these preparations, Gruffydh ap Rhys had a wishful eye upon Carmardhyn, and therefore he fent out fome spies to learn the strength and condition of the town, who bringing him a very kind and hopeful account, he decamped by night, and rushing suddenly into the town, ordered his men to make a great shout, thereby to strike a great terror into those within. Owen ap Caradoc the governor, being furprifed with fuch an unexpected uproar, made all possible haste to the place where he had heard the shouting, and thinking that his men were at his heels, fell in among the enemy; but having having none to support him, his men being all fled, he was after a manful defence cut in pieces, and fo the town being taken, Gruffydh burnt every thing to the ground, excepting the caftle, which was also fore defaced. And then returning with a great deal of spoil and booty to his usual residence at Stratywy; his forces were confiderably increased by the accession of many young men, who came to him from all quarters, and thought that fortune fo prospered his arms, that no body was able to stand before him. After this he marched to Gwyr, but William de Londres thinking it impossible to stand before him, forlook the castle with all his men in all haste, so that when Gruffydh was come thither, he found a great deal of cattle and spoil, and none to own them, and therefore having burnt down the castle, he carried away every thing of value in the country. When the Cardiganshire men heard how fortunately he succeeded in all his attempts, and being extremely fearful, lest his next expedition should be against them, sent to him, defiring him, as being their near relation and countryman, to take upon him the rule and government over them. Gruffydh willingly accepted of their offer, and coming thither, was joyfully received by the chief men in the country, who were Cadifor ap Grono, Howel ap Dinerth, and Trahaern ap Ithel, which three persons had forsaken Dysed, by reason that it was so thwacked with Normans, Flemings and English men. Nor was Cardigan free from strangers, who pretended to fway and rule the country, but the people bearing in mind the continual wrong and oppression they received from them, bore an inveterate hatred to them, and were very glad to be delivered from their infolent and imperious oppressors. For King Henry what by force and banishment of those that stood up stiff for their liberty, and what by corrupting of those that were wavering, had brought all that country to his subjection, and bestowed what lands he thought fit upon his English or Norman favourites. But notwithstanding the strength of the English in this country, Gruffydh was not a whit cast down, down, but boldly coming on to Cardigan Iscoed, he laid fiege to a fort that Earl Gilbert and the Flemings had built at a place called Blaen Porth Gwythan. After divers affaults, and the killing of feveral of the befieged, with the lofs only of one of his men, Gruffydh took the place, and razing it to the ground, brought all the country thereabouts to subjection. This action proved very fatal to the English, for immediately upon this, they began to forfake their houses and habitations, as thinking it too hot for them to stay any longer in the country, and so the Welch burnt and destroyed as far as Penwedie all the houses of those ftrangers whom Earl Gilbert had brought with him. Then Gruffydh befieged the castle of Stradpythylh which belonged to Ralph Earl Gilbert's steward, and having made himself master of it, he put all the garrison to the sword. Removing from thence, he incamped at Glasgryg a mile from Lhanbadarn, purpoling to beliege Aberystwith castle next morning, but for want of provision necessary for his army, he was forced to make bold with fome cattle which grazed within the limits of the fanctuary. And here it may be observed, that not only men enjoyed the privilege of these sanctuaries, but also cattle and horses, and whatever else lived within the liberties of them. But the day following, Gruffydh marched diforderly towards the castle, being apprehensive of no great op-position, by reason that he was ignorant of the number of the garrison, and so encamping upon an opposite hill, which was divided from the castle by a river, with a bridge over it, he called a council to determine with what engines they might with best success play against it, and so make a general assault. The Normans observing their disorder, very cunningly sent out some of their archers to skirmish with them, and fo by little and little to entice them to the bridge, where some of the best armed horsemen were ready to iffue out upon them. The Welch not thinking the garrison to be so strong approached near the bridge, still skirmishing with the Normans, who pretended to give ground; but when they came very near, out fallies one on horseback, who would fain pass the bridge; but being received upon the points of their spears, he began to flag, and as he endeavoured to return, he fell off his horse, and so the Welch pursued him over the bridge. The Englishmen seeing this, fled towards the castle, and the Welch with all speed followed them to the top of the hill; but whilit they thought that the day was their own, up rifes a party of horse which lay in ambuscade under the hill, and standing betwixt the Welch and the bridge, prevented any fuccour to come to them. And the Welch being thus hemmed in betwixt both parties, the former recoiling with greater strength, were so unmercifully cut off, that scarce one man was left living. When the rest of the Welch army, that staid on the other side of the river, faw what number the garrison contained, and that they were strong beyond their expectation, presently decamped, and with all speed departed out of the country.

When King Henry was informed of all the mischief and cruelties that Gruffydh ap Rhys had committed among his fubjects in Wales, he fent for Owen ap Cadwgan, defiring him and Lhywarch ap Trahaern to use all the effectual methods possible to take or kill the arch-rebel Gruffydh, promifing very speedily to fend his fon Robert with an army to Wales for that purpose. Owen being very proud that the king put fuch confidence in him, encouraged his men to be now so industrious to merit the king's favour, as they had been formerly to deferve his displeasure; and so joining his forces with Lhywarch, they both marched to meet Prince Robert at Stratywy, where they supposed Gruffydh ap Rhys had hid himself in the woods. When they were come to the frontiers of the country, they made a vow, that they would let neither man, woman, or child escape alive; which fo affrighted the people of the country, that all made what shift they could to save their lives, some by sleeing to the woods and mountains, and fome by getting into the king's castles, from whence they had come but a little before. Then Owen and Lhywarch separated. feparated with distinct parties to scour the woods, which about Stratywy are very desertous; and Owen having entered with an hundred men, presently discovered the tract of men and cattle, and followed their footsteps so close, that within a little while he overtook them; and having slain a great many of them, and put the rest to slight, he carried away all their cattle back to his army.

But whilft Owen was bufy in fearthing the woods, Gerald steward of Pembrock, who with a great power of Flemings was upon his march to join the king's fon, met with them who fled from Owen; who defiring help of Gerald, declared how Owen had forcibly drove them out, slain a great many of their companions, and spoiled them of all their goods. Gerald and his Flemings understanding that Owen was fo nigh with fuch a finall number of men, thought he had now very convenient opportunity to be revenged of him upon the account of his wife; and therefore to make fure work with him, he purfued him close into the woods. Owen being forewarned by his men that a great number followed him, and advised to make all speed to get away, was deaf to all such counfels, as thinking that they of whom his men were fo much afraid of, were the king's friends, and therefore their integrity need not be questioned, since they had all respect to the same common cause. But he found, that a private quarrel is fometime more regarded than the publick good; and therefore when Gerald was advanced within bowshot, he greeted him with a volley of arrows, to shew how great a friend he was; but Owen, though perfuaded to flee, was so little terrified at fuch an unwelcome falutation, that though the enemy were feven to one, yet he told them, that they were but Flemings, and fuch as always trembled at the hearing of his name. And then falling on with a great deal of courage, he was at the first onset struck with an arrow into the heart, of which wound he prefently died; which when his men faw they all fled, and brought word to Lhywarch and the rest of their fellows of what had happened; and fo fuspecting the king's army, feeing they could not be trusted in their fervice, they all returned to their respective countries.

Owen being in this manner unhappily flain, his brethren divided his lands betwixt them; excepting Caereneon, which properly belonged to Madawc ap Ryryd ap Blethyn; and which he had forcibly taken away from his uncle Meredith. His father Cadwgan had several children by different women; and besides himself, he had iffue Madawc by Gwenlhian the daughter of Gruffydh ap Conan; Eineon by Sanna the daughter of Dyfnwal; Morgan, by Efelhiw or Elhiw the daughter of Cadifor ap Colhoyn lord of Dyfed; Henry and Gruffydh were by the daughter of the lord Pigot his wedded wife; Meredith by Euroron Hoodliw; and himself by Inerth the daughter of Edwyn. But a while afterwards, Eineon ap Cadwgan and Gruffydh ap Meredith ap Blethyn, befieged the castle of Cymmer in Merionethshire, which was lately built by Uchtryd ap Edwyn; for Cadwgan had bestowed upon Uchtryd his cousin-german Merioneth and Cyfeilioc, upon condition, that in all cases he should appear his friend, and his sons after him; contrary to which promise he bore no manner of regard to Cadwgan's children after Owen's death; but to strengthen himself the better, he erected this castle of Cymmer, which very much displeased many of Cadwgan's sons. And therefore Eineon and Gruffydh, to make Uchtryd sensible of his error in despising of them, furiously set upon Cymmer castle, and having slain divers of the garrison, the reft furrendered themselves; and so taking possession of it, they divided the country betwixt them; Mowdhwy Cyfyeilioc and half Penlhyn to Gruffydh ap Meredith; and the other half of Penlhyn with all Merioneth to Eineon.

The next year King Henry failed with a great army into Normandy, against the French king, who with the Earl of Flanders and others, went about to make William the fon of Robert Curthoise duke of Normandy; but at the appearance of the king of England, they all fcattered, and laid afide their intended defign. About the fame time Gilbert Strongbow Earl of Strigill, to whom King Henry had given all Cardigan, departed this life, after a long fit of a confumption; much to the joy and fatisfaction of the Welch, who were in great measure displeased, that they should be deprived of their own natural lord Cadwgan, from whom this country was taken away, and be forced to ferve and be subject to a stranger, whose kindness they had no great reason to expect. But the year following, an irreconcileable quarrel A. D. 1115 happened betwixt Howel ap Ithel lord of Ros and Ryfonioc, now Denbigh-land, and Riryd and Lhywarch the fons of Owen ap Edwyn. And when they could not otherwise agree, they broke out into open war; and thereupon Howel fent to Meredith ap Blethyn, and to Eineon and Madawc, Cadwgan's fons; who came down from Merioneth with a party of four hundred well-disciplined men, and encamped in Dyffryn Clwyd. Riryd and Lhywarch on the other hand, defired the affistance of their cousins the fons of Uchtryd; and fo both armies meeting in the vale of Clwyd, they fell to blows with a great deal of spirit and alacrity, and after a tedious and a bloody fight, Lhywarch, Owen ap Edwyn's fon, was at last slain, and with him Iorwerth the fon of Nudh, a noble and a valorous perfon; and Riryd was forced to make his escape by flight. But though Howel obtained the victory, yet he did not long furvive his flain enemies; for having received a desperate wound in the action, died of it within forty days; and then Meredith ap Blethyn, and the fons of Cadwgan finding it dangerous to stay longer there, for fear of some French, who lay garrisoned in Chester, returned home with all speed. King Henry was still in Normandy, and about this 1116:

time, a very great battle was fought betwixt him, and the French king, who was shamefully vanquished and overthrown, and had a great number of his nobles taken prisoners. But as King Henry returned the fol-lowing year for England, one of the ships happened, by

by the negligence of the pilot, to be cast away, wherein perished the king's two sons, William who was legitimate and heir apparent to the crown, and Richard his base son; together with his daughter and niece, and several others of his nobility, to the number in all of one hundred and fifty persons. This unparallelled loss of so many kindred and friends did not perplex his mind so long, but that within a short time, he began to solace and raise his drooping spirits with

A.D. 1118, the thoughts of a new wife; and having married Adelice the daughter of the duke of Lovain, he purposed to go against Wales, and having prepared his forces, he led them in person to Powis-land.

When Meredith ap Blethyn and Eineon, Madawc and Morgan, the fons of Cadwgan and lords of the country heard of it, they fent to Gruffydh ap Conan Prince of North Wales, defiring some help at his hands; who flatly refused, assuring them, that because he was at peace with the king of England, he could neither with honour nor fafety fend them any fuccour, nor permit them to come within his dominions. The lords of Powis receiving this unwelcome answer, and having now no manner of hopes of any aid, were refolved however to defend themselves as well as they could; and therefore they thought it the most effectual means to annoy the enemy, and to keep them from entering into the country, was to observe and defend the streights, by which the enemy must of necessity pass. Neither were they out in their policy; for it happened that the king himself, with a small number, advanced to one of these narrow passages, the rest of the army, by reason of their carriages, having taken some compass about; which the Welch perceiving, prefently poured a shower of arrows upon them, and the advantage of the ground giving help to their execution, they flew and wounded a great many of the English. The king himself was struck in the breast, but for all that the arrow could not hurt him, by reason of his armour; yet he was so terrified with this unexpected conflict, and confidering with himself, that he must receive several such brushes before he could advance to the plain country; and what was above all, being fenfible that by fuch a rash misfortune he might lofe all the honour and fame which he had before obtained, fent a message to parly with them who kept the passage, and with all assurance of safety, to defire them to come to the king. The Welch being come, and questioned how they had such confidence to oppose the king, and to put his life in so much danger; made answer, that they belonged to Meredith ap Blethyn, and according to their master's orders they were resolved to keep the passage, or to die upon the spot. The king finding them so refolute, defired them to go to Meredith, and propose to him an agreement of peace, which he and his cousins the sons of Cadwgan accepted of; and promised to pay the king 10,000 head of cattle, in retribution for former offences. And fo King Henry leaving all things in a peaceable and quiet posture in Wales, and appointing the Lord Fitz-Warren warden or lieutenant of the Marches, returned to England.

But when a foreign enemy was removed out of the A.D. 1120. country, the Welch could never forbear quarrelling with each other; for Gruffydh ap Rhys ap Theodore, who had been now for fome time quiet, fell upon Gruffydh ap Sulhaern, and for what reason not discovered, treacherously slew him. But the next year there happened another occasion of disturbances and falling out among the Welch; for Eineon the fon of Cadwgan dying, left all his share of Powis and Merioneth to his brother Meredith. But his uncle Meredith ap Blethyn, thinking that these lands more properly belonged to him, ejected his nephew Meredith to whom his brother Eineon had left them, and took possession of them himself. And what augmented these differences, King Henry fet now at liberty Ithel ap Riryd ap Blethyn, Meredith's nephew, who had been for a long time detained in prison; who coming to his own country, was in expectation to enjoy his estate, which, upon his being put in custody, his relations had diyided betwixt them; of which, the greatest share fell nan was informed, how that Meredith ap Blethyn, contrary to all justice, had taken away by force the lands of his nephew Meredith ap Cadwgan, he sent his fons Cadwalhon and Owen with an army into Merioneth, who conquering and bringing to subjection all the country, carried away the chief of the people, and all the cattle to Lhyn. And at the fame time the fons of Cadwgan entered into the lands of Lhywarch ap Trahaern, and cruelly wasted and destroyed it, by reason that he had countenanced the doings of their uncle Meredith ap Blethyn. But these inward clashings and animolities concerning effates and titles, were feconded by most unnatural bloodshed and unparallelled cruelties; for Meredith ap Blethyn, when he found that his nephew Meredith ap Cadwgan was affifted by the Prince of North Wales, and that it was impracticable to keep Merioneth from him, he was resolved to practife that upon his nephew, which he had failed A.D. 1122 to effect upon another. And therefore lest his other nephew Ithel ap Riryd should meet with the like help and encouragement to recover those lands, which during his imprisonment were taken away from him, of which his uncle actually enjoyed a confiderable share; Meredith thought it his wifest way to prevent all manner of disputes, by fending Ithel out of the world, which upon mature deliberation he treacherously effected. Nor was this the only murder committed at this time; for Cadwalhon the fon of Gruffydh ap Conan exceeded him far, and flew his three uncles, Grono, Ryryd, and Meilyr the fons of Owen ap Edwyn; but which was most unnatural of all, Morgan ap Cadwgan with his own hands killed his brother Meredith; a crime most execrable, though he did afterwards re-

Not long after this, Gruffydh ap Rhys, by the false and invidious accusations of the Normans, was dispossed of all the lands which King Henry had formerly granted him, and which he had for a considerable time peaceably enjoyed. And towards the end of the same year died Daniel ap Sulgien bishop of St. David's, and archdeacon of Powis, a man of extraordinary piety and learning, and one who made it his continual employment to endeavour to work a reconciliation betwixt North Wales and Powis, which in his time were at perpetual variance and enmity with one another. The next year died likewife Gruf-A.D. 1125, fydh the fon of Meredith ap Blethyn; and about the fame time Owen ap Cadwgan having got into his hands Meredith ap Lhywarch, delivered him to Pain Fitz-John, to be kept safe prisoner in the castle of Bridgnorth. The reason of this was, because Meredith had slain Meyric his cousin-german, and very barbarously had pulled out the eyes of two more of his cousins the fons of Griffri. This cruel and inhuman custom of plucking out the eyes of such as they hated or feared, was too frequently practifed in Wales; for the following year Ievaf the fon of Owen 1126, ferved two of his brethren after this unnatural manner, and thinking that too little, passed a sentence of perpetual banishment upon them. A little after, his brother Lhewelyn ap Owen flew Iorwerth ap Lhywarch; but all this mischief practised by these two brothers Ievaf and Lhewelyn, turned at last upon themselves; for their uncle Meredith ap Blethyn being apprehensive that his two nephews were a considerable rub in his way, and if they trooped off, that all their estate would of right fall to him; slew Ievaf outright, and having plucked out Lhewelyn's eyes, caftrated him, for fear he should beget any children to inherit his lands after him. These no doubt were implacable times, when for the least offence, nay sometime fuspicion, murder was so openly and incorrigibly committed; which must of necessity be attributed to this one principle, That so many petty states having equal power and authority in their own territories, and being subject to none but the king of England, still endeavoured to outvie and overtop each other. And fo, nearness of relation giving way to ambition, they never regarded those of the same blood, so that themselves might add to their strength, and increase their estate by their fall; and for this reason Mey-

ric flew Lhywarch, and his fon Madawc, his own cousins; but before he could make any advantage of their death, he was himself served after the same manner. But the only person who afterwards repented of such a foul crime, was Morgan ap Cadwgan, who being severely troubled in mind for the murder he had lately committed upon his brother Meredith, took a journey to Jerusalem to expiate for his crime, and in his rerurn from thence, died in the isse of Cyprus. But this treacherous way of private murdering those by whom they were offended, could not be forgot among the Welch: for Eineon the son

A.D. 1129 not be forgot among the Welch; for Eineon the fon of Owen ap Edwyn calling to mind how that Cadwalhon the fon of Gruffydh ap Conan had basely slain three of his brothers, and taking the opportunity of his being at Nanhewdwy, assisted by Cadwgan ap Grono ap Edwyn, set upon him, and slew him. About the same time, that great usurper Meredith ap Blethyn ap Confyn, who by most unnatural and most hellish practices, had got the lands of all his brothers and nephews, and by that means was become a man of the greatest strength and sway in Powis, died of a severe fit of sickness, which reduced him to that apprehension of his former miscarriages, that he endured penance for the expiation of former guilt.

In the year 1134, till which time nothing of moment was transacted in Wales, Henry, the first of that name, king of England, died in Normandy in the month of October; after whom Stephen Earl of Buloign fon to the Earl of Blois, his fifter's fon, by the means of Hugh Bygod, was crowned king by the archbishop of Canterbury, all the nobility of England confenting thereunto; though contrary to a former oath they had taken to Maud the Empress. The first thing that employed his thoughts after his accession to the government, was against David king of the Scots; who taking advantage of this new revolution in England, by some treacherous means or other, got the towns of Carlifle and Newcastle into his hands. But King Stephen, though fearcely fettled in his throne, prefently marched towards the North; of whose coming David being affured, and fearing to meet him, voluntarily restored Newcastle, and compounded for Carlisle; but would not swear to him by reason of his oath to Maud; which, however, his fon Henry did not stick at; and thereupon was by King Stephen created Earl of Huntington. This change and alteration of affairs in England made also the Welch beftir themselves; for Morgan ap Owen, a man of con-A.D. 11352 fiderable quality and estate in Wales, remembering the wrong and injury he had received at the hands of Richard Fitz-Gilbert, slew him, together with his fon Gilbert. And shortly after, Cadwalader and Owen Gwyneth the sons of Gruffydh ap Conan Prince of North Wales, having raifed a mighty army, marched against the Normans and Flemings, and coming to Cardigan, committed very confiderable wafte and havock in the country, and took two of the strongest places, one belonging to Walter Espec, and the castle of Aberystwyth. In this last place they were joined by Howel ap Meredith, and Rhys ap Madawc ap Ednerth; who marching forward, took the castle of Richard de la Mare, together with those of Dinerth and Caerwedros, and then returned with very valuable booty. But having fucceeded fo well in this expedition, they could not rest satisfied, till they had rid the whole country from the intolerable pride and oppreffion of the Normans and Flemings; and therefore returning the same year to Cardigan with 6000 foot, and 2000 horse, well disciplined and experienced soldiers; and being joined by Gruffydh ap Rhys and Howel ap Meredith of Brecknock with his fons, and Madawc ap Ednerth; they over-ran the country, as far as Aberteifi, restoring all the former inhabitants to their proper inheritances, and discarding all such strangers as the late Earl of Strygil had placed in the country. But when Stephen, who was governor of Aberteifi, faw that, he called to him Robert Fitz-Martyn, the fons of Gerald, and William Fitz-John, with all the strength of the Normans, Flemings, and English in Wales, or the Marches; and meeting with the Welch berwixt Aber Ned and Aber Dyfi, gave them battle. But after

trusting too much to the strength of their towns and fortifications, began to look how to fave themselves that way. But the Welch pressed upon them so hard, that they killed above 3000 men, besides several that were drowned and taken prisoners. This victory being fo happily obtained, Cadwalader and Owen over-ran the whole country, forcing all the Normans and Flemings to depart the country with all speed, and placing in their room those miserable Welch, who had been so long deprived and kept from their own estates; and after they had weeded the country of those insatiable caterpillars, they returned to North Wales, laden with very rich spoils and acceptable plunder. The king of England was not in a condition to take notice to what extremities his fubjects were reduced to in Wales, by reason that his own nobles of England were risen in arms against him; the reason of which tumult among the nobility was occasioned by a fallacious report that went about of the king's death, who then lay fick of a lethargy. They that bore him no good will, verified the rumour as much as they could, and stirred up the common people in behalf of the Empress; whereas on the other hand the king's friends betook themselves to castles and strong holds for fear of the Empress, and among others Hugh Bygod fecured the castle of Norwich, and after that he was affured that the king was well again, he was loth to deliver the same out of his A.D. 1136. possession, unless it were to the king's own hands. But during these commotions and troubles in England, Gruffydh ap Rhys, fon to Rhys ap Theodore, the right heir to the principality of South Wales, died, leaving iffue behind him a fon called Rhys, commonly known by the name of Lord Rhys, by Gwenlhian the daughter of Gruffydh ap Conan, who by some is said to have poisoned her husband. Towards the end of the fame year died likewise Gruffydh ap Conan Prince of North Wales, after he had reigned 57 years; to the great grief and discontent of all his subjects, as being a Prince of incomparable qualities, and one who after divers divers victories obtained over the English, had thoroughly purged North Wales from all strangers and foreigners. He had iffue by Angharad the daughter of Owen ap Edwyn, three fons, namely, Owen, Cadwalader, and Cadwalhon, and five daughters, Marret, Sufanna, Ranulht, Agnes, and Gwenlhian; and by a concubine, Iago, Ascain, Edwal abbot of Penmon, Dolhing, and Elen, who was married to Hova ap Ithel Felyn of There were feveral good and wholfome laws and statutes enacted in his time; and among the rest. he reformed the great diforders of the Welch minstrels. which were then grown to great abuse. Of these there were three forts in Wales; the first were called Beirdh. who composed several songs and odes of various meafures, wherein the poet's skill was not only required, but also a natural endowment, or a vein which the Latins term furor poeticus. These likewise kept the records of all gentlemen's arms and pedigrees, and were principally esteemed among all the degrees of the Welch poets. The next were fuch as played upon musical instruments, chiefly the harp and the crowd; which musick Gruffydh ap Conan first brought over into Wales; who being born in Ireland, and descended by his mother's fide of Irish parents, brought with him from thence feveral skilful musicians, who invented almost all the instruments as were afterwards played upon in Wales. The last fort were called Atcaneaid. whose business it was to sing to the instruments played upon by another. Each of these, by the same statute, had their feveral reward and encouragement alloted to them; their life and behaviour was to be spotless and unblameable, otherwise their punishment was very severe and rigid, every one having authority to punish and correct them, even to the deprivation of all they had. They were also interdicted and forbidden to enter any man's house, or to compose any song of any one, without the special leave and warrant of the party concerned; with many other ordinances relating to the like purpose.

OWEN GWYNEDH.

AFTER the death of Gruffydh ap Conan, his eldest fon Owen, surnamed Gwynedh, succeeded in the principality of North Wales; who no fooner had entered upon the government, but together with the rest of his brethren, he made an expedition into South Wales; and having demolished and overthrown the castles of Stradmeyric, Stephan, and Humffreys, and laid in ashes the town of Caermardhyn, he returned home with no less honour than booty and plunder. About the same time, John archdeacon of Lhanbaran departed this life, a man of singular piety and strictnels of life, who for his rigid zeal in religion and virtue, was thought worthy to be canonized, and to be counted among the number of the faints. This year likewife King Stephen paffed over to Normandy, and having concluded a peace with the French king, and the duke of Anjou, returned back to England without any further delay. But the following Spring gave opportunity for greater undertakings; David king of Scots, upon the king of England's going to France last summer, had entered the borders of England, and continued to make confiderable wafte and havock in that part of the country. Whereupon King Stephen, to rid his country and his subjects from so dangerous an enemy, marched with an army towards the North, whose coming the king of Scots hearing of, he relinquished the borders of England, and retired to his own country. But that would not fatisfy King Stephen, who defired to be further revenged for the unpardonable hostilities committed by the Scots in his country; and therefore pursuing the Scots to their own country, he haraffed and laid wafte all the fouth part of the kingdom kingdom of Scotland. But the king's absence ani-mated several of the English nobility to rebel; to which purpose they fortified every one their castles and strong holds; William Earl of Glocester those of Leeds and Briftol; Ralph Lunel, Cari; William Fitz-Allen, Shrewsbury; Paganellus, Ludlow; William de Moyun, Dunester; Robert de Nichol, Warham; Eustace Fitz-John, Merton; and Walklyn, Dover. But for all these mighty preparations, the king in a short time became master of them all; some he won by asfault, others upon fair promises and advantageous conditions were furrendered up, and some he got by treacherous and under-hand contrivances. The Scots thought to make good advantage of these commotions in England; and thereupon, as foon as they heard that fome of the nobility were in actual rebellion against the king, they entered into the borders, and began, as they thought, without any apprehension of oppofition, to ravage and lay wafte the country before them. But William, Earl of Albemarle; William Pyppell, Earl of Nottingham; Walter Espec and Gilbert Lacy, gathered together all the forces they could raise in the North; and being animated and encouraged by the eloquent and pressing oration of Ralph bishop of Orkneys, which he delivered in the audience of the whole army, they fet upon the Scots at Almerton with fuch unanimous courage, that after a very great flaughter of his men, King David was glad to escape with his life by flight. After this, King Stephen seized to his own use the castles of Ludlow and Leeds, and pressed the bishops of Salisbury and Lincoln, so hard, that to prevent their perishing by famine, they were constrained to surrender; the former the castles of Vises and Shirburn; the latter those of Newark upon Trent and Sleeford. This did not a little augment the king's strength against the ensuing storm; for in the summer this year, Maud the Empress, daughter and heir to King Henry, to whom King Stephen, with all the nobility of England, had sworn allegiance, landed at Arundel, with her brother Robert Earl of Glocester, and was there honourably received by William de Albineto, M who

who was lately married to Queen Adeliz, King Henry's widow, with whom he received the earldom of Arundel in dowry. But as foon as King Stephen heard of her landing, he marched with all possible speed to Arundel, and laid fiege to the castle; but finding it upon trial impregnable, he raifed the siege, and by that means suffered the Empress and her brother to escape to Bristol.

A.D. 1138. The next year an unlucky accident fell out in Wales; Cynric, one of Prince Owen's fons, having by fome means or other difgusted Madawc ap Meredith ap Blethyn ap Confyn, a person of considerable esteem and estate in the country, was, with his connivance fet upon and flain by his men. But the affairs of England this year, afforded greater rarity of action; King Stephen with a formidable army laid fiege to the city of Lincoln, to the relief of which, Ranulph Earl of Chefter, and Robert Earl of Glocester, marched with their forces. But before they could arrive, the town was taken; whereupon they drew up their forces in order to give the king battle, who on the other fide, was as ready to receive them. King Stephen drew up his forces in three battles, the first being led by the Earls of Britain, Mellent, Norfolk, Hampton, and Warren; the fecond by the Earl of Albemarle, and William of Ypres; and the third by the king himfelf, affifted by Baldwyn Fitz-Gilbert, with feveral others of his nobility. Of the enemy's fide, the difinherited barons had the first place; the Earl of Chester, with a confiderable party of Welchmen, far bet-ter couraged than armed, led the second; and the Earl of Glocester the third battle. After a hot and bloody dispute of both sides, the victory at length favoured the barons, King Stephen being first taken prifoner, and a little after the queen, together with William of Ypres, and Bryan Fitz-Count. But within a while after, William Martell and Geffrey de Mandeville gathered together some fresh forces, and fought the Empress and her brother at Winchester, and having put the Empress to flight, took Earl Robert prifoner, for exchange of whom, the king was fet at liberty. The next year King Stephen would try the A.D. 1139, other adventure, and received a fecond overthrow at Wilton; which, however, did not fo much discourage him, but that he laid so close a siege to the Empress at Oxford, that she was glad to make her escape to Wallingsford. The same year died Madawc ap Ednerth, a person of great quality and note in Wales; and Meredith ap Howel, a man of no mean esteem, was slain by the sons of Blethyn ap Gwyn.

For the two fucceeding years nothing remarkable 1140. paffed in Wales; excepting that this year Howel ap Meredith ap Rhytherch of Cantref Bychan, and Rhys ap Howel were cowardly flain by the treachery and perfidious practices of the Flemings; and the next 1141. year Howel ap Meredith ap Blethyn was basely murdered by his own men; at which time, Howel and Cadwgan the fons of Madawc ap Ednerth, upon fome unhappy quarrel, did kill each other. But shortly af- 1144. ter this, an irreconcileable difference fell out betwixt Anarawd fon to Gruffydh ap Rhys Prince of South Wales, and his father-in-law Cadwalader the fon of Gruffydh ap Conan, and brother to Prince Owen Gwynedh; which from words quickly proceeded to blows. In this fcuffle Anarawd was unhappily flain; which so exasperated Prince Owen against his brother Cadwalader, that together with his fon Howel, he marched with an army into his brother's country, and after a confiderable waste and destruction, burnt to the ground the castle of Aberystwyth. Cadwalader, upon the news of Prince Owen's approach, withdrew himself and fled to Ireland; where having hired a great number of Irish and Scots for two thousand marks; under the command of Octer, and the fons of Turkel and Cherulf, he struct fail for Wales, and landed at Abermeny in Carnarvonshire. The Prince, to protract no time, marched with all speed to prevent their farther progress into the country; and both armies being come in view of each other, a peace was happily concluded betwixt the two brothers. The Irish understanding this, and how that their coming over was like to prove but a fool's errand to them, they furprised and secured Cadwalader, till their wages and arrears were paid; who, to obtain his liberty, delivered to them two thousand heads of cattle, besides many prisoners, and other booty, which they had taken in the country. But as soon as the Prince was informed that his brother Cadwalader was set loose, without any farther demur upon the case, he fell in upon the Irish, and having slain a very considerable number of them, recovered all the booty they purposed to ship off, and forced as many as could escape, to return with great loss, and a greater shame back to Ireland.

But the Normans fped far better in Wales; Hugh fon to Radulph Earl of Chefter, having fortified his castle of Cymaron, set upon and won the country of Melienyth a second time; and the castle of Clun being fortified by another lord, all Eluel became subject to the Normans. The same time King Stephen took Geffry Mandeville prisoner at St. Albans, where the earl of Arundel, by the slip of his horse, was like to be drowned in the river. But the Earl of Mandeville, to obtain his liberty, delivered up to the king the tower of London, with the castles of Walden and Plassey, which reduced him to that condition, that he was forced to live upon the plunder and spoil of abbies and other religious houses, till at length he was slain in a skirmina against the king, and his son banished the kingdom.

A.D. 1144. The next year a skirmish happened betwixt Hugh de Mortimer and Rhys ap Howel, wherein the latter was taken prisoner, with many others of his accomplices, who were all committed to prison by the English. But it fared much better with Howel and Conan the sons of Prince Owen, who having raised an army against the Flemings and Normans, gained a considerable victory at Abertiefi, and having placed a garrison in the town, returned home with great honour, and much booty.

About the same time, Sulien ap Rhythmarch, one of the college of Lhanbadarn, and a person of great reading and extensive learning, departed this life. Shortly after, Gilbert Earl of Clare, came with a great number of forces to Dyfed, and built the castle of Caermardhyn, and the castle of the sons of Uchtryd. Hugh A.D. 1145. Mortimer likewise slew Meyric ap Madawc ap Riryd ap Bleddu, and Meredic ap Madawc ap Ednerth. And fo far it went of the fide of the English; but now the Welch begin to gain ground; Cadelh the fon of Gruffydh ap Rhys Prince of South Wales, laid fiege to the castle of Dynefowr, belonging to Earl Gilbert, which being furrendered up, Cadelh, affifted by his brethren Meredith and Rhys, brought his army before the castle of Caermardhyn, which after a short siege yielded in like manner, referving only this one condition, that the garrison should not be put to the fword.

From thence he marched to Lhanstephan, and set before the castle; to the relief of which the Normans and Flemings coming with their forces, were shamefully vanquished and overcome, and so the castle was eafily delivered up to the Welch. But the Normans were fo cruelly nettled at this, that they mustered up all the forces they could possibly draw together out of the neighbouring countries, and unexpectedly furrounded the castle, intending by all possible means to recover the same. But the governor, Meredith ap Gruffydh, a man of great years, and no less experience, so animated and encouraged the befieged, that when the Normans and Flemings ventured to scale the walls, they were beat back with fuch vigour, and loss of their fide, that at length they were compelled to raise the siege, and leave the Welch in possession of the castle.

Shortly after this, Run the fon of Prince Owen of North Wales, a youth of excellent hopes, and incomparable qualifications, died, whose death his father took fo much to heart, that for some time he seemed to be past all comfort, being fallen into such a melancholy disposition, that he was diverted with nothing but retirement. But an accident fell out, which roused him out of this lethargical fit of forrow and discontent; the castle of Mould was so very strong and well garrisoned by the English, that it mightily annoyed the country thereabouts, and had been frequently befieged, but could never be taken. Prince Owen at this time levied an army and laid close fiege to it; and the garrison for several affaults, behaved itself so manfully, that the place seemed impregnable and invincible. But the presence and example of Prince Owen fo encouraged his men, that they fell on with all possible vigour and might, and at last forced their entrance into the castle. Having put a great number of the garrison to the sword, and taken the rest prisoners, the castle was razed to the ground; and this fortunate attempt so pleased the Prince, that he forgot all forrow for his fon, and returned to his usual temper and accustomed merriments. At the fame time, King Stephen of England obtained a remarkable victory over his enemies at Farendon; and although the enfuing year Rondel Earl of Chefter and he were reconciled, yet he thought it more adviseable to detain him prisoner, though contrary to his promise, until fuch time as the Earl would deliver up the castle of Lincoln, with all the forts and places of strength in his custody.

The next year, Cadelh, Meredith, and Rhys, the fons of Gruffydh ap Rhys ap Theodor, brought an army before the castle of Gwys; but finding themselves too weak to master it, they desired Howel, son to Prince Owen Gwynedh, a person famously remarkable for martial endowments, to come to their affiftance. Howel, who was very defirous to fignalize himfelf, and to evidence his valour to the world, readily confented to their request; and having drawn his forces together, marched directly towards Gwys, where being arrived, he was joyfully received, and honourably entertained by fuch lords as defired his help. Having viewed the strength and fortification of the castle, he found it was impracticable to take the place, without the walls could be destroyed; and therefore he gave orders, that certain battering engines should be provided, whilft the rest should gaul and molest the befieged, fleged, by throwing of great stones into the castle. The enemies perceiving what irrefiftible preparations the beliegers contrived, thought it to no purpose to withstand their fury; and therefore to do that voluntarily which must be done by compulsion, they presently yielded up the castle. Shortly after this a great difference happened betwixt the fons of Prince Owen, Howel, and Conan, and their uncle Cadwalader whereupon the former entered with an army into the country of Merioneth, and committed great wastes and hostilities there, infomuch that the inhabitants flocked into fanctuaries to fave their lives. But the young lords finding what fearful and unstable condition the people were in, and the better to draw them to their fide, iffued out their proclamation, affuring that all who would favour their country, should not only enjoy their lives, but their former liberty and accustomed privileges; upon the publication of which edict, the people returned to their own habitations. Having by this stratagem brought all the country under their own pleasure and good will, they led their army before the castle of Cynfael, belonging to Cadwalader, which he had built and strongly fortified, The government of this castle Cadwalader had committed to Merfyn, abbot of Tygwyn, or the White-House; who being summoned to surrender, by the brothers Howel and Conan, did not only refuse, but defied their utmost efforts upon the place. The lords finding they could do no good by threats and menaces, judged it more convenient to make use of the other extream; and therefore promifed the abbot a very high reward, if he would deliver the castle into their hands. But all proved to no effect, the abbot being a person, of more honesty and greater honour, than to be corrupted to betray his trust; told them flatly, That he would not deceive his master's expectation, and therefore would choose rather to die with honour, than to live with shame. The lords finding him inexorable, and withal being vexed, that a churchman should put such a stop to their fortunate proceedings, made M 4 made fuch a vigorous affault upon the caftle, that after they had pulled down some part of the walls, they entered in by force, and ravaged so furiously, that they killed and wounded the whole garrison, the abbot only escaping, who by the help of some of his friends in Howel's army, got away safe. Towards the close of this year, several persons of note departed this life, among whom were Robert Earl of Glocester, and Gilbert Earl of Clare, as also Uchthryd bishop of Llandas, a man of great piety and learning, in whose see succeeded Nicholas ab Gurgant.

AD. 1147. The following year also died Bernard bishop of St. David's, and was succeeded by David Fitzgerald, then archdeacon of Cardigan. Sometime after, Prince Owen Gwynedh built a caitle in Yale, called Caftelh y Rodwyrth; and his brother Cadwalader built another at Lhanrystid, and bestowed his part of Cardigan upon his fon Cadwgan. Also Madoc the son of Meredith ap Blethyn sounded the castle of Oswestry, and gave his nephews Owen and Meyric the sons of Gruffydh ap Meredith his share of Cyfeilioc.

The next year Conan fon to Prince Owen Gwynedh for certain faults and miscarriages committed against his father, though the particulars are not discovered, was put in prison, where for some time he continued in custody. But it fared better with his brother Howel, who having made his uncle Cadwalader his prisoner, reduced all his country, together with his castle subject to himself. In South Wales, some business of moment happened this year; Cadelh the fon of Gruffydh ap Rhys having fortified the castle of Carmardhyn, marched with his army towards Cydwely, wasted and destroyed the whole country, and being returned home, joined his army with his brothers Meredith and Rhys, who entering into the country of Cardigan, won that part called Is Aeron. This was fucceeded by an action of greater importance in North Wales; some irreconcileable difference arising betwixt Prince Owen, and Rondel Earl of Chester, quickly broke out into open war. The Earl made all the possible preparations

tions the opportunity would permit, and drew together a confiderable army from all parts of England, and which strengthened and encouraged him the more, he was joined by Madoc ap Meredith prince of Powys, who disdaining to hold his lands of prince Owen Gwynedh, chose rather to side with, and abet his enemies. The prince, on the other hand, was not backward in his preparations, and perceiving the enemy to come upon him, thought it not adviseable to fuffer him to advance too far into the country, but to stop and prevent his career before he should take too firm a footing in his dominions. To this end he marched with his whole power as far as Counfylht, with full resolution to give the earl of Chester battle, which the English were glad of, as thinking themselves far more numerous, and much better armed and disciplined than the Welch. both armies having joined battle, they quickly faltered in their expectation of undoubted fuccess, and finding the Welch to press so irresistably severe upon them, they thought it wifer to retire, and endeavour to fave themselves by slight. But the Welch purfued them so hard, that few escaped without being either flain or taken prisoners, and they fome of the chief commanders, who through the fleetness of their horses, avoided the fury of their purfuers.

The next year, the scene of action removed to A.D. 1156. South-Wales, Cadelh, Meredith and Rhys, the sons of Gruffydh ap Rhys prince of South Wales, being entered with an army into Cardigan, won all the country from Howel the prince of North-Wales's son, excepting the castle of Lhansihangel in Pengwern. The sleepe of Lhansystyd castle proved so difficult and unmanageable, that the young lords of South-Wales lost a great part of their bravest soldiers before it, which so troubled and vexed them, that when they got possession of the castle, they put all the garrison to the sword. From thence they marched to Ystratmeyric castle, which after they had won, manned and re-fortissed, they disbanded their forces, and returned home. But Cadelh, the eldeft of the brothers, was upon the point of receiving his last blow by treachery at home, which he had escaped from the enemies abroad. For fome of the inhabitants of Tenbigh in Pembrokeshire, having conceived some displeasure and hatred against Cadelh, were resolved to revenge themselves, and to lay a trap for his life; and having observed what pleasure he took in hunting, were refolved to execute their plot, whilft he was hot and eager at his fport. Observing therefore one day how he went a hunting with only a few companions, they placed themselves in an ambuscade, and when the game came that way, they unexpectedly fet upon the unarmed sportsmen, and having eafily made all the rest fly away, they wounded Cadelh fo cruelly, that he narrowly escaped their hands alive; who making shift to get home, lay for a long time dangerously ill, and with great difficulty at length recovered his life. Upon this, his brothers Meredith and Rhys paffed with an army into Gwyr, and having burnt and destroyed the country thereabouts, they belieged and took the castle of Aberlhychwr, but finding they could not keep it, they rased it to the ground, and after that, returned home with great booty to Dynefawr, and repaired the fortifications of the castle there. About the same time alfo, Howel, Prince Owen Gwynedh's fon, fortified

A D. 1151. But the following year, prince Owen did a very barbarous action to Cunetha, his brother Cadwalhon's fon, for fearing left that this young man should lay claim to any part of his estate as his father's right, he first pulled out his eyes, and afterwards castrated him, for fear he should beget any children, who might some time or other renew their claim and right to Cadwalhon's estate. This inhuman severity was succeeded by another of no small remark; Lhewelyn son to Madoc ap Meredith having watched a convenient opportunity, set upon, and slew Stephen the son of Baldwin. But Cadwalader, Prince Owen's brother brother, after a tedious imprisonment which he had fustained through the malice and rancour of his nephew Howel, at length made his escape, and flying to the Isle of Anglesey, brought a considerable part of that island under his subjection. But prince Owen hearing how that his brother had got loose from custody, and that he was in actual possession of a great part of Anglesey, he presently dispatched an army over, which proving too formidable to Cadwalader's party, he was constrained to escape to England, and to desire succour from his wise's relations, who was the daughter of Gilbert Earl of Clare. This year Galfrede Arthur, commonly called Gesfrey of Monmouth, was made bishop of St. Asaph, and at the same time Simon Archdeacon of Cyseilioc, a man of great worth and esteem in his country died.

But the year following, Meredith and Rhys the fons A.D. 1152;

of Gruffydh ap Rhys, Prince of South-Wales, laid fiege to Penwedic caftle, which belonged to Howel Prince Owen's fon, and after great pains and confiderable loss of men of their side, at last made themselves mafters of it. From thence they marched by night to Tenby, and unexpectedly falling upon the cattle, of which one William Fitzgerald was governor, they scaled the walls before the garrison were aware of any danger, and fo possessing themselves of the castle, they fell foul upon the garrison, in revenge of the mischief they had done, and further designed to their brother Cadelh. For Cadelh at this time was gone upon a pilgrimage, and during his absence had committed his whole inheritance and all other concerns in Wales, to the care of his brethren Meredith and Rhys. But after the taking Tenby castle, they divided their army into two parties, with one of which Rhys marched to Ystratcongen, and after great havock and waste committed there, he passed to Cyfeilioc, which fared in like manner with Ystratcongen. Meredith, with the other party, fat before Aberavan castle, and after a short siege won and got possession of it, and then returned home with very considerable booty, and many rich spoils. About the same time Rondel, earl of Chefter, who had lived in continual enmity and frequent hostility with prince Owen of North-Wales, departed this life, leaving his fon Hugh to enjoy both his titles and estate in England, and to prosecute the seuds and hostilities against the Welch.

A. D. 1153. And shortly after died Meredith, fon to Gruffydh ap Rhys, prince of South-Wales, who was Lord of Cardigan, Ystratywy, and Dyfed, being not passed the twenty-fifth year of his age; a person of incomparable valor and audacity, and in all his warlike attempts and atchievements very fortunate. He was prefently followed by Geoffrey Bishop of Llandas, a man as famous for learning and a good life, as the other was for masculine bravery and martial prowess. England the face of things looked very lowering, Henry, furnamed Shortmantel, the empress' fon, landed in England, and in his progress through the country took feveral castles, among which were Malmesbury, Wallingford, and Shrewsbury. But his fury was quickly appeased by the death of Eustace, king Stephen's fon, fo that the fole obstacle for his succeeding to the crown, being now removed, we willingly concluded a peace with king Stephen, permitting him to enjoy the crown peaceably for his life, upon con-

Stephen did not long furvive this treaty; and then Henry Plantagenet, the empress's son, was crowned in his flead. Towards the hearinging of King Hanry's reign, Rhys Gruffydh ap Rhys, king of South-Wales, upon apprehension that Owen Gwynedh had raised an army for the conquest of South-Wales, drew together all his strength, and marched to Aberdysi to face the enemy upon their own borders. But finding the rumor to be false, and that the prince of North-Wales had no fuch design in hand, having built a castle at Abedysi, which might defend the frontiers from any suture design of his country, he returned back without attempting any thing farther. At the same time, Madoc ap Meredith built a castle at Caereneon near Cymer, and then Eglwys Fair in Mysot, was founded. About this time also, Meyric, nephew to prince Madoc ap Meredith, made his escape out of prison, wherein he had been detained by his uncle for a considerable time.

The fame year king Henry being displeased with the Flemings, whom his predeceffor King Stephen had brought over into England, iffued out a proclamation, charging the greatest part of them to depart his dominions, and to retire to their countrymen in West-Wales, where his grandfather, Henry the first the Bastard's son. had planted them. And thus that part of Wales, called Pembrokeshire, was over-run with these strangers, who being better befriended by the Kings of England, than the Welch could well expect to be, made fure footing in that country, where they have ever fince continued firm. It was the English policy of those times to accept of any opportunity to curb and keep under the Welch, whom they experienced to be none of the fafest neighbours, and therefore the kings of England did grant any lands and privileges in Wales to any that would accept of them, which, honeftly, they had no power to bestow.

But this was not enough in detriment to the Welch, A.D. 1156: for the year following, King Henry raifed a very great army, which he gathered from all parts of England, with purpose to subdue all North-Wales, being principally moved hereto, by the instigation of Cadwalader the prince's brother, whom Owen Gwynedh, for what reasons not known, deprived of his estate, and banished the country. Also Madoc ap Meredith, prince of Powis, who maligned the liberty and privilege of the princes of North-Wales, who owned subjection to no other than the king of England, whereas those of Powis were obliged to do homage to the prince of North-Wales, did jointly consent to this invitation. The king of England accepted of their proposals, led his army to West-Chester, and encamped upon the marsh called Saltney, in Welch, Morfa-Caer-Lleon. Prince Owen, all this while, was not ignorant of this intended invasion; and therefore having made all possible preparations to confront the enemy, he marched his army to the frontiers of England, and encamping at Basingwerk, resolved to give the English battle. King Henry understanding of the prince's resolution, detached some of the chiefest troops out of the main-body, under the command of feveral earls and other lords, and fent them towards the prince's camp. But after they had advanced fome little way, and were paffing through a wood, called Coed-Eulo, David and Conon, prince Owen's fons, unexpectedly fet upon them, and what by the advantage of the ground, and the fuddenness of the action, the English were born down with a great flaughter, and those who survived narrowly escaped to the king's camp. This was a very unwelcome beginning to king Henry; but however, in order to prosper better hereafter, he thought it advifeable to decamp from Saltney, and to rank his troops along the fea-coaft, thinking thereby to get betwixt prince Owen and his country, which if he could effect, he was fure to reduce the Welch to a very great inconveniency. But the prince, foreseeing the danger of this, retired with his army to a place called Cil Owen, that is, Owen's Retreat, which when King Henry perceived, he let fall his defign. and came to Ruthlan. W. Parnus writes, that in this expedition against the Welch, King Henry was in great danger of his life, in passing through a strait at Counfylth near Flint, where Henry Earl of Effex, who by inheritance enjoyed the office of bearing the standard of England, being over-charged by the enemy, cast down the same and fled, This accident fo encouraged the Welch, that they bore on fo violently, that the king himfelf narrowly escaped, having of his party Eustace Fitz-John, and Robert Curcie; two valiant knights, together with feveral others of his nobility and gentry slain in the action.

After this prince Owen decamped from Cil Owen, and intrenched himself upon Bryn y Pin, where little of moment passed between the two armies, only some slight skirmishes happened frequently. King

Henry

Henry in the mean time fortified the castle of Ruthlan, and during his stay there, Madoc ap Meredith prince of Powis, failed with the English fleet to Anglesev. and having put some men on shore, they burnt two churches, and ravaged part of the country about, But they paid very dear for it, for all the strength of the island being met together, they set upon them in their return to their ships, and cut them off in such a manner, that not one remained to bring tidings to the fleet of what had befel them. But they on board quickly perceived what had happened, and therefore thought it not very fafe harbouring upon that coast, but judging it more adviseable to weigh anchor, they prefently fet fail for Chester; when they were arrived thither, they found that a peace was actually concluded betwixt King Henry and prince Owen upon this article; That Cadwalader should have all his lands restored to him, and he received to the favour and friendship of his brother. Then king Henry leaving the castles of Ruthlan and Basingwerk well manned and fortified, and having near the latter founded a public structure for the order of Knights Templars, returned to England, But the troubles of Wales did not end with him, for Iorwerdh Goch ap Meredith who had taken part with the king of England during this war, laid siege to the castle of Yale, which was built by prince Owen, and making himself master of it, rased it to the ground.

The next year commenced with a very unfortu-A.D. 1157. nate action, Ifor ap Meyric having long before casts a very wishful eye upon the land and estate of Morgan ap Owen, was now resolved to put in execution what he had before contrived; and as covetousness seldom bears any regard to virtue or honour, he treacherously set upon him, and slew him; and with him sell Gurgan ap Rhys, the most samous British poet of his time. Morgan's estate Ifor bestowed upon his brother Iorwerth, who about the same time got also possession of the town of Caer-Lheon. But these inward and home-bred discovered to the same time got also possession of the town of Caer-Lheon. But these inward and home-bred discovered to the same time got also possessions.

flurbances were quickly mitigated by a general peace. which was presently after this concluded, betwixt the king of England and all the princes and lords of Wales, Rhys ab Gruffydh ap Rhys, prince of South-Wales, only excepted. For this prince Rhys, who probably would not rely too far upon the king of England's fidelity, refused to consent to a peace; but however, to fecure himfelf the best he could from the English, whom he had no small reason to be afraid of, he thought it his best prudence to issue out his orders, commanding his fubjects to remove their cattel and other effects to the wilderness of Tywy, where they were like to remain fecureft from the eyes and reach of the enemies. But he had not continued there long, when he received a more pofitive express from King Henry, commanding him to appear forthwith at his court, and to accept of the proposals of peace, before the joint forces of England and Wales were fent to fetch him up. Prince Rhys, having received fuch a threatning meffage, thought it now high time to repent of what he had afore so rashly resolved upon, and therefore after long confultation, he judged it his wifest way to accept of the king's propofals and to appear at court. There it was agreed upon, that Rhys, whose lands heretofore lay scattered about, and were intermixed with other person's estates, should enjoy Cantref Mawr, and any other Cantref which the king should be pleased to beflow upon him. But contrary to this article, the king affigned him feveral lordships and other lands far remote from each other, and particularly intermixed them with the estates of Englishmen, whom he was fure would be a watch and a curb to all the motions of prince Rhys. This was indeed a very politick contrivance of king Henry to keep under the high and restless spirit of Rhys; but the justice of the action does not fo evidently appear in breaking one of the chiefest articles of the peace, and chopping and bestowing that which was not justly in his power to give. But it is manifestly apparent that the English of these times were mainly concerned right of wrong to oppress and keep under the Welch, of whose mortal hatred to subjection they had so frequently and fo cruelly felt. Prince Rhys was not at all ignorant of these wrongful and deceitful dealings of king Henry, but knowing himself to be unable to redress these grievances, he thought it more adviseable for a time to live quietly with a little, than rashly to hazard all. But in a short time he had opportunity either to demand redrefs from the king, or else to endeavour it himself by force of arms. For as foon as Roger earl of Clare was informed of the diffribution which the king of England had granted to prince Rhys, he came to king Henry, requesting of his majesty, that he would grant him such lands in Wales, as he could win by force of arms. The king readily complied with his request, being always very forward to grant any thing which feemed to curb and discommode the Welch, and therefore the earl of Clare marched with a great army into Cardigan, and having fortified the castles of Ystrat-Meyric, Humphrey, Dyfi, Dynerth and Lhanrhystyd, he made several incursions into the country. In the fame manner, Walter Clyfford who was governor of Lhanymdhyfri castle, made inroads into the territories of prince Rhys, and after he had flain feveral of the Welch, and made great wafte in the country, returned with confiderable booty.

Prince Rhys as he was unable to bear these outrages, so he was resolved either to have immediate redress, or else to proclaim open war against the English, and therefore he sent an express to king Henry, complaining of the hostilities which his subjects the earl of Clare and Walter Clysford had committed in his country. But finding the king to put him still off with only smooth words and fair promises, and that he always winked at the faults of the English and Normans, without any farther consultation about the matter, he laid siege to the castle of Lhanymdhyfri, and in short time made himself master of it. Also Eineon the son of Anarawd, Rhys's brother's son, and a person of great valour, being desirous to free his country from that miferable fervitude other now groaned under, and judging withal that his uncle was now discharged from the oath he had lately sworn to the King of England fat before the castle of Humphrey, and having forcibly made his entrance into it, he put all the garrison to the sword, where he found a great number of horses and armour, enough to arm a considerable body of men. And whilst Eineon was thus engaged at Humphrey's castle, Prince Rhys perceiving that he could not enjoy any part of his inheritance but what he afterwards got by the fword, drew all his power together and entered Cardigan, where like a most violent torrent, he over-run the country, that he left not one castle standing of those which his enemies had fortified. and so brought all the country to his subjection. King Henry being fore offended at the progress which Prince Rhys fo fuddenly made against him, returned with a great army into South Wales, but finding it to no purpose to attempt any thing against the Prince, he thought it more adviseable to permit him to enjoy all that he had gotten, and only to take hostages for his observing of peace during his absence out of the kingdom, which Prince Rhys promifing to do, he forthwith returned to England, and foon after went for Normandy, where he concluded a peace with the French King.

A. D. 1158. But the year following, Prince Rhys of South Wales without any respect to his promise to King Henry last: year, led his forces to Dyfed, and destroyed all the castles that the Normans had fortified in that country, and then laid fiege to Caermardhyn. But Reynold Earl of Bristol, the king's base son, being informed of it, called together the Earl of Clare, his brotherin-law Cadwalader, Prince Owen of North Wales's brother, Howel and Conan Owen's fons, with two Earls more, who with their joint forces marched to raise the siege. But Prince Rhys was wifer than to abide their coming, and therefore upon the first intimation of fuch great opposition, he retired to the mountains called Cefn Refter, and there encamped being

being sufficiently secure from any enemy, by the natural fortification of the place. The confederate army lay at Dynwylhir; and there built a castle, but sinding no news or tidings of Prince Rhys; they returned home without effecting any thing of note. King Henry was still in Normandy, and there made war against the Earl of St. Giles, for the city and earldom of Tholouse.

Towards the beginning of this year, Madoc ap Meredith ap Blethyn Prince of Powis died at Winchefter, whence his body was honourably conveyed to Powis, and buried at Myfod. He was a Prince very much affected to piety and religion, very charitable to the necessitous, and good to the distressed; but his great fault was, that he stickled too hard for the interest of the English, and was always in confederacy with King Henry against the good success of his native country. He had issue by his wife Susanna, the daughter of Gruffydh ap Conan Prince of North Wales, three sons, Gruffydh Maylor, Owen and Elis, and a daughter named Marred. He had also three natural sons, Owen Brogynton, Cynwrid Eselh, and Eineon Eselh, who though base born, yet according to the custom of Wales, co-inherited with their brethren who were legitimate.

And here it will not be amifs, once for all, to give a particular account of the principality, afterwards the lordships of Powis, how it came to be divided into many shares and portions, and by that means became fo irrecoverably broken and weakened, that it was made subject to the Normans before the rest of Wales. For Powis before King Offa's time, reached eastwards to the rivers of Severn and Dee, in a right line from the end of Broxon hills to Salop, and comprehended all the country between the Wye and Severn, which was antiently the estate of Brochwel Yscithroc, of whom mention is made before. But after the making of Offa's dike, Powis was contracted into a narrower compass, the plain country towards Salop being inhabited by Saxons and Normans, fo that the length of it reached north-east from Pul-

ford bridge to Lhangiric parish on the confines of Cardiganshire, to the south-west, and the breadth from the farthest part of Cyfeilioc westward, to Elfmere on the east-fide. This principality, Roderic the Great gave to his youngest fon Mersyn, in whose posterity it remained entire, till the death of Blethyn ap Confyn, who though he had divided it betwixt his fons Meredith and Cadwgan; yet it came again whole and entire to the possession of Meredith ap Blethyn. But he again broke the union, and left it between his two fons Madawc and Gruffydh; the first of which was married to Susanna the daughter of Gruffydh ap Conan Prince of North Wales, and had with her that part, afterward called by his name, Powis Fadoc. After his death, this lordship was divided also betwixt his fons Gruffydh Maelor, Owen ap Madawc, and Owen Brogynton, which last, though basely born, had however, for his incomparable valour and courage, a share of his father's estate, namely, Edeyrneon and Dinmael, which he left to his fons Gruffydh, Blethyn and Iorwerth. Owen Madawc had to his portion Mechain-is-Coed, and had iffue Lhewelyn and Owen Fychan. But Gruffydh Maelor the eldest fon, lord of Bromfield, had to his part, both the Maelors with Mochnant-is-Raydar, and married Angharad the daughter of Owen Gwynedh Prince of North Wales, by whom he had iffue one fon named Madawc, who held his father's inheritance entirely, and left it so to his only fon Gruffydh, who was called Lord of Dinas Bran, because he lived in that castle: he married Emma the daughter of James Lord Audley, by whom he had iffue Madawc, Lhewelyn, Gruffydh and Owen. This Gruffydh ap Madawc took part with King Henry the Third and Edward the First against the Prince of North Wales; and therefore for fear of the faid prince, he was forced to keep himself secure within his castle of Dinas Bran, which being fituated upon the fummit of a very steep hill, seemed impregnable to all the daring efforts that could be used against it. After his death, Edward the First dealt very unkindly with his children, who were of age to manage their own concerns; and making two of them privately away, bestowed the wardship of Madoc his eldest son, who had by his father's will, the lordships of Bromfield and Yale, with the reversion of Maelor Saesnec Hopesdale and Mouldsdale his mother's jointure, on John Earl Warren; and the wardship of Lhewelyn, to whose share fell the lordships of Chirke and Nanheudwy, to Roger Mortimer, third fon to Roger Mortimer the fon of Ralph Mortimer, Lord Mortimer of Wigmor. But Emma, Gruffydh's wife, having in her possession for her dowry, Maelor Saesnec, Hopesdale, and Moulfdale with the presentation of Bangor rectory; and feeing two of her fons difinherited and done away, and the fourth dead without iffue, and doubting left Gruffydh her only furviving child could not long continue, she conveyed her estate to the Audley's. her own kin, who getting possession of it took the fame from the king, from whom it came to the house of Derby, where it continued for a long time; till at length it was fold to Sir John Glynne, serjeant at law, in whose family it still remaineth. But Earl Warren and Roger Mortimer forgetting what fignal fervice Gruffydh ap Madoc had performed for the king, guarded their new possessions with such caution and strictness, that they took especial care they should never return to any of the posterity of the legal proprietor; and therefore having obtained the king's patent, they began to secure themselves in the said lordships. John Earl Warren began to build Holt castle, which was finished by his fon William, and so the lordships of Bromfield and Yale continued in the name of the Earls of Warren for three descents, viz. John, William and John, who dying without iffue; the faid lordships, together with the earldom of Warren descended to Alice sister and heir to the last John Earl Warren, who was married to Edmond Fitz Alan Earl of Arundel, in which house they remained for three descents, namely, Edmund, Richard, Richard his fon, and Thomas Earl of Arundel. But for want of iffue to this last, Thomas Earl of Arundel and Warren, the said lordships fell to two of his sisters, N 3 whereof whereof one named Elizabeth was married to Thomas Mowbray duke of Norfolk, and the other called Joan, to William Beauchamp Lord of Abergavenny: but fince they came to the hands of Sir William Stanlev knight, who being attainted of High treason, they devolved by forfeiture to the crown, and now are annexed to the principality of Wales. But Roger Mortimer the other sharer in the lands of Gruffydh ap Madoc, was made Justice of North Wales, built the castle of Chirke, and married Lucia the daughter and heir of Sir Robert de Wafre knight, by whom he had iffue Roger Mortimer, who was married to Joan Turbervill, by whom he had John Mortimer Lord of Chirke. This John fold the lordship of Chirke to Richard Fitzalan Earl of Arundel, Edmund's fon, and fo it was again annexed to Bromfield and Yale.

The third fon of Gruffydh Lord of Dinas Bran, named also Gruffydh, had for his part Glyn Dwrdwy, which Gruffydh ap Gruffydh had iffue Madoc ' Crupl, who was the father of Madoc Fychan, the father of Gruffydh, the father of Gruffydh Fychan, who was the father of Owen Glyndwr, who rebelling in the days of Henry the Fourth, Glyndwrdwy by confiscation came to the King, of whom it was afterwards purchased by Robert Salisbury of Rug, in whose family it still remaineth. Owen the fourth son of Gruffydh Lord of Dinas Bran had for his share Cynlhaeth with the rights and privileges thereunto belonging. The other part of Powys, comprehending the countries of Aruftly, Cyfeilioc, Lhannerch-hudol, Caereneon, Mochnach uwch Rayadr, Mechan uwch Coed, Moudhwy, Deudhwr, Yftrad Marchelch, and Teir Tref, or the Three Towns, rightfully descended to Gruffydh ap Meredith ap Blethyn, by Henry the First, created Lord Powis, who married Gweyryl or Weyryl the daughter of Urgene ap Howel ap lefaf ap Cadogan ap Athlestan Glodryth, by whom he had iffue Owen furnamed Cyfeilioc. This Owen enjoyed his father's estate entire, and married Gwenlhiam the daugh ter of Owen Gwynedh Prince of North Wales, who bore him one fon, named Gwenwynwyn or Wenwynwyn, from whom that part of Powis was afterwards called Powis Wenwynwyn. He had moreover a base brother, called Caswalhon, upon whom he bestowed the countries of Swydh Lhannerch Hudol, and Braniarth. Gwenwynwyn fucceeded his father in all his estate, saving what Caswalhon enjoyed, and married Margaret the daughter of Rhys ap Theodor Prince of South Wales, by whom he had Gruffydh ap Gwenwynwyn, who fucceeding his father in all his poffessions, had issue fix sons, by Margaret the daughter of Robert Corbet, brother to Thomas Lord Corbet of Cous; and so the entire estate of Gruffydh ap Meredith ap Blethyn Lord of Powis, became shattered, and torn into divers pieces. Owen, Gruffydh ap Gwenwynwyn's eldest ion, had for his part Aruftly, Cyfeilioc, Lhannerch Hudol, and a part of Caereneon; Lhewelyn had Mochnant uwch Rayadr and Mechain uwch Coed; John the third fon, had the fourth part of Caereneon; William had Moudhwy; Gruffydh Fychan had Deudhwr Ystrat-Marchelh, and Teir Tref; and David the fixth and youngest son, had the other fourth part of Caereneon. Owen ap Gruffydh had iffue one only daughter, named Hawys Gadarn, or the Hardy, whom he left his heir; but her uncles Lhewelyn, John, Gruffydh Fychan and David, thinking it an easy matter to dispossess an orphan, challenged the lands of their brother Owen, alledging for a cloak to their usurpation, that a woman was not capable of holding any lands in that country. But Hawys made fuch friends in England, that her case was made known to King Edward the Second, who bestowed her in marriage upon a fervant of his, named John Charleton, termed Valettus domini regis, who was born at Appley rear Wellington, in the county of Salop, anno One thoufand two hundred fixty-eight, and in her right, created him Lord Powis. on tolt make a morner, who was lineally on rained

This John Charleton Lord Powis, being aided and fupported by the King of England, quickly broke all their measures; and having taken Lhewelyn, John, and David, his wives uncles, he put them in fafe custody, in the king's castle of Harlech; and then obtained a writ from the King to the Sheriff of Shropshire, and to Sir Roger Mortimer, Lord of Chirkland, and Justice of North Wales, for the apprehension of Gruffydh Fychan, with his sonsin-law, Sir Roger Chamber and Hugh Montgomery, who were then in actual hostility against him and his wife Hawys. But Gruffydh Fychan and his accomplices suspecting their own strength, and having lost Thomas Earl of Lancaster, their main support, thought it most adviseable to submit themselves to the king's pleafure, touching the difference betwixt them and Hawys; who finding upon record, how that Gruffydh ap Meredith, ancestor to the said Hawys, upon his fubmission to King Henry the First, became subject to the King of England, and thereupon was created Baron of Powis, which barony he and his posterity had ever since held in capite from the king; was of opinion, that Hawys had more right to her father's possessions now in their hands, than any pretence they could lay to her estate. But to make a final determination of this matter, and to compose the difference more amicably betwixt them; it was agreed, that Hawys should enjoy her inheritance in fee-simple to her and her heirs for ever, after the tenure of England; and that her uncles Lhewelyn, John, David, and Gruffydh, should quietly enjoy their portion, and the same to descend to their heir males perpetually; but in default of fuch heir males, the same was to descend to Hawys and her heirs. But William Lord of Moudhwy, the fourth brother, called otherwise Wilcock Mowdhwy, because he did not join with the rest against Hawys, had all his lands confirmed to him, and to all his heirs, both male and female for ever. He married Elianor, the fifter of Elen, Owen Glyndwr's mother, who was lineally descended from Rhys ap Theodore, Prince of South Wales, by whom whom he had iffue John de Mowdhwy; whose daughter Elizabeth, being heir to his whole estate, was married to one Sir Hugh Burgh, knight. His son Sir John Burgh, Lord of Moudhwy, married Jane the daughter of Sir William Clapton of Glocestershire, by whom he had sour daughters, Elizabeth, Ancreda, Isabel and Elianor; the first of whom was married to Thomas Newport, the second to John Leighton of Stretton; the third to John Lingen; and the younger to Tho. Mytton; who, by equal distribution, had the lordship of Modhwy divided betwixt them.

But John Charleton Lord of Powis had iffue by his wife Hawys, a fon named John, who enjoyed the fame lordship for about seven years, and then left it to his fon, of the same name, who was Lord of Powis fourteen years; and then it descended to his fon, called also John Charelton who enjoyed his father's estate twenty-seven years; but dying without iffue, the lordship of Powis fell to his brother Edward Charleton. This Edward had iffue by his wife Elianor, the daughter and one of the heirs of Thomas Earl of Kent, and the widow of Roger Mortimer Earl of March, two daughters, Jane and Joyce; the first of which was married to Sir John Gray, knight; and the fecond to John Lord Tiptoft, whose son was by King Henry VI. created Earl of Worcester. But after the death of Elianor, this Edward Lord Powis married Elizabeth the daughter of Sir John Barkley, knight; and so after his death, which happened in the year 1420, the lordship of Powis was divided into three parts, whereof his widow Elizabeth had for her jointure Lhannerch Hudol, Ystrad Marchelh, Deudhwr and Teirtref, and was afterwards married to Lord Dudley. Jane his eldest daughter had Caereneon, Mechain, Mochnant, and Plasdinas; and Joyce had Cyfeilioc, and Arustly. But the lordship of Powis continued in the family of Sir John Gray, for five descents, in right of his wife Jane; the last of whom, Edward Gray, Lord Powis, married Anne, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk, and died without any lawful iffue.

issue. This Edward Lord Powys, in 15 Henry VIII. Bar. Engl. accompanied the Duke of Suffolk in the expedition then made into France, and was at the taking of Bray, and other places then won from the French. And in 36 Henry VIII. being again ready to march in the King's fervice, he made his last testament, whereby he fettled the fuccession of his whole barony and lordship of Powys, his castle and manor of Pool, with divers other lordships in the county of Montgomery, and all the rest of his estate in the county of Salop, upon the heirs of his own body lawfully begotten, or to be begotten; and in default of fuch iffue, his castle and manor of Charlton and Pontifbury in Shropshire, upon Jane Orwell, daughter of Sir Lewis Orwell, knight, and her affigns, during her natural life. And in case he should die without any iffue of his own body lawfully begotten, that then Edward Grey, his illegitimate fon by the fame Jane Orwell, should have and enjoy his faid barony and manor of Powis, his caftle and manor of Pool, and all other his lordships in the county of Montgomery; with the reversion of the castle and manor of Charlton and Pontifbury, to him and his heirs lawfully begotten; and for lack of fuch iffue, to remain to that child, in case it should be a fon, wherewith the same Jane Orwell was then great by him, and to the heirs of his body lawfully begotten. But if it should not prove a son, or if the son die without iffue, then that the whole barony of Powis and all the premises before-mentioned, should come to Jane Grey his daughter, and to the heirs of her body lawfully begotten; and for lack of fuch iffue, to Anne Grey, his other daughter, and heirs of her body lawfully begotten; and laftly for default of fuch iffue, to fuch woman-child as should be born of the body of the faid Jane Orwell. But after Edward Grey, the title of Lord of Powis lay extinct to the fifth year of King Charles I. when Sir William Herbert son of Sir Edward Herbert of Redcastle (antiently called Pool-castle, now Powis castle) in the county of Montgomery, fecond fon to William Earl of of Pembrock, was advanced to the dignity of a Baron of the realm, by the title of Lord Powis of Powis. in the marches of Wales; in whose family it still continues, though the title has been changed from a Baron to an Earl, and fince to a Marquiss.

About the same time that the Prince of Powis died, Cadwalhon ap Madawc ap Ednerth, who had been for some considerable time at variance with his brother Eineon Clyd, was taken prisoner by him; who delivered him up to Owen Prince of North Wales. But the Prince being willing to gratify the king of England, whose interest Cadwalhon has as much as in him lay opposed, fent him to the king's officers to be imprisoned at Winchester; from whence he quickly found a way to escape: and by the advice of the rest of his brethren he returned home to his country. King Henry continued all this while in Normandy, and during his stay there, a match was concluded upon betwixt his fon Henry and Margaret daughter to Lewis king of France. But this new alliance could A.D. 1160. not prevent these two monarchs from falling at variance with each other, which happened the year following; and thereupon King Henry marched with his army into Gascoyne, to quell certain rebels, who upon first notice of this breach between both kings, were up in arms against the English. But the next year, a 1161. peace was again concluded, and fo all things returned to their former state of amity and quietness.

But it was not so in Wales; for Howel the son of Ievaf ap Cadwgan ap Athlestan Glodryth, having got into his hand the castle of Walwern in Cyfeilioc, rased it to the ground, which so incensed Prince Owen, who was owner of it, that nothing could lay his fury, till he had drawn his forces together, and made an incurfion into Lhandhinam in Aruftly, Howel's country; which he cruelly harraffed, and carried away confiderable booty. The people of the country perceiving these devastations of the North Wales men, came together to the number of three hundred men, offering their service to their natural Lord, Howel ap Iefaf; who upon this addition of strength, followed the enemy to the banks of Severn, where they were encamped. Prince Owen finding them to march after him, was glad of the opportunity to be further revenged upon Howel; and so turning studenly upon them, he slew about two hundred men; the rest narrowly escaping with Howel to the woods and rocks. Owen being more joyful for the revenge he had taken of Howel, than for any victory he had gained, rebuilt Walwern castle, and having well fortised and manned it, returned home to North Wales.

A D. 1162. The year following, the like thing happened: Owen the fon of Gruffydh ap Meredith, commonly called Owen Cyfeilioc o Wynedh, together with Owen ap Madawc ap Meredith, and Meredith ap Howel, fet upon Carrechofa castle near Oswestry, and having over-powered the garrifon, committed great waste and destruction therein. But about the same time, a pleasant passage happened in England; Robert Mountford and Henry de Essex, who had both fought against the Welch upon the marches, and both run, began now to impeach each other, as being the first occasion of flying. The dispute was to be tried by combat, in which being engaged, Henry was overcome; and for his false accusing of Robert, he was fentenced to have his estate forfeited, and then having his crown shorn, he was entered a monk at Redding. Within a little after, King Henry calling to mind what Prince Rhys had committed during his absence out of the kingdom, drew up a great army against · South Wales, and having marched as far as Pencadyr near Brecknock, Rhys met him, and did his homage; and having delivered up hostages for his future behaviour, stopped the king's farther progress, so that thence he returned to England. But after the king's departure, two very unlucky accidents happened in Wales; Eineon the fon of Anarawd ap Gruffydh, nephew to Prince Rhys, being villainously murdered in his bed by his own fervant, called Walter ap Lhywarch; as also Cadwgan ap Meredith in like manner, by one Walter ap Riccart. But the loss of his nephew Prince Rhys made up, by possessing himself of that large country called Cantres Mawr, and the land of Dynesowr, which he afterwards enjoyed. Of men of learning there died this year, Cadisor ap Daniel, arehdeacon of Cardigan; and Henry ap Arthen, the greatest scholar that had flourished in Wales for many years.

The next year, a total rupture broke forth betwixt A.D. 1163. the English and Welch; Prince Rhys, a man of an active and uncontroulable spirit, being now experimentally fensible he could never carry on the greatness and grandeur of his quality, with fuch lands as the king of England had allotted him, made an invasion into the lordship of Roger de Acre Earl of Glocester; being moved thereto in a great measure, by reason that his nephew Anarawd ap Gruffydh was murdered by his motive and instigation. Being advanced with a strong army into the Earl of Glocester's estate, without any great opposition he took Aberheidol castle, with those belonging to the fons of Wyhyaon; all which he rased to the ground. Thence he marched to Cardigan, bringing all that country under his fubjection; and from thence he marched against the Flemings, whose country he cruelly harrassed with fire and fword. The rest of the estates of Wales, perceiving Prince Rhys to prosper so successfully against the English, thought they might equally succeed, and shake off the English yoke, which so unreasonably oppressed them. And therefore they unanimously agreed to cast off their subjection to the English, whose tyranny they could no longer bear, and to put over them princes of their own nation, whose superiority they could better tolerate. And fo this year concluded with making fuitable preparations for the following campaign.

And therefore as foon as the time of year for action 1164, was advanced, David fon of Owen Prince of North-Wales fell upon Flintshire, which pertained to the king of England; and carrying off all the people and cattle with him, brought them to Dysfryn Clwyd,

otherwise Ruthyn land, King Henry understanding this, gathered together his forces, and with all speed marched to defend both his subjects and towns from the incursions and depredations of the Welch. Being come to Ruthlan, and encamped there three days, he quickly perceived he could do no great matter, by reason that his army was not sufficiently numerous; and therefore he thought it more adviseable to return back to England, and to augment his forces, before he should attempt any thing against the Welch. And accordingly he levied the most chosen men throughout all his dominions of England, Normandy, Anjou, Gafcoin and Gwien; besides those succours from Flanders and Britain; and then fet forward for North Wales. purpofing to destroy without mercy every living thing he could possibly meet with; and being advanced as far as Croes-Ofwalt, called Ofwestry, he encamped there. On the other side, Prince Owen and his brother Cadwalader, with all the strength of North Wales; Prince Rhys with those of South Wales; Owen Cyfeilioc and Madawc ap Meredith with all the power of Powis; the two fons of Madawc ap Ednerth, with the people living betwixt the rivers of Severn and Wye, met together, and pitched their camp at Corwent in Edeyrneon, intending unanimously to defend their country against the king of England. King Henry understanding that they were so near, was very defirous to come to battle; and to that end he removed to the banks of the river Ceireoc, caufing all the woods thereabouts to be cut down, for fear of any ambushment lurking therein, and for a more clear prospect of the enemy. But some of the Welch took advantage of this opportunity, who being well acquainted with the passage, without the knowledge of their officers, fell upon the king's guard, where all the pikemen were posted; and after a hot skirmish, feveral were flain on both fides. But in fine, the king won the passage, and so marched on to the mountain of Berwyn, where he lay fometime without any hostility on either side, both armies standing in fear of each other. The English kept the open plains, and were afraid to be entrapped in the streights and narrow passages; and the Welch on the other hand watched the advantage of the place, and observed the English so narrowly, that neither forage or victuals could pass to the king's camp. And what augmented the misery of the English army, there happened to fall fuch a rain, that mightily diffurbed their encampment, in fo much that the foldiers could scarcely stand, for the disadvantage of those slippery hills. But in the end King Henry was forced to decamp, and after a very confiderable loss of men and ammunition, befides the great charges of this expedition, was compelled to return back to England. But to express the great diffatisfaction he entertained of this enterprize, in a great fury he plucked out the eyes of the hostages, which he had some time afore received from the Welch; which were Rhys and Cadwalhon the fons of Owen Prince of North Wales, and Cynric and Meredith the fons of Rhys of South Wales. Some write, that in affailing of a bridge, the king was in no small danger of his life; one of the Welch having aimed directly at him, was like to pierce him through the body, had not Hubert de Clare, Constable of Colchefter, who perceived the arrow a-coming thrust himself betwixt the king and it, though to the loss of his own life.

But though King Henry was shamefully forced to return to England, yet he did not give over the thoughts of subduing the Welch; and therefore after a long consultation, he made a third expedition into Wales, conveying his army by sea, as far as Chester. There he staid for some time, till all his sleet, as well those ships that he had hired out of Ireland, as his own, were all arrived. But when they were all come together, and got safely to Chester, his mind was altered; and instead of a design against Wales, he unexpectedly dismissed his whole army. Prince Rhys was glad of this opportunity, and therefore withdrawing his forces from the consederate army, he marched to the siege of Aberteisi castle, which being surrendered to him, he rased to the ground. From thence he got before Cilgerran, which he used after the same manner, and therein took prisoner Robert the son of Stephen his cousin-german, who was the son of Nest his aunt, who after the death of Gerald, had married Stephen Constable. The joy of these happy successes on the part of the Welch, was somewhat clouded by the death of Lhewelyn, son of Owen Prince of North Wales, a person of great worth and exceedingly well beloved of all his country.

beloved of all his country. A. D.1165. And now the Welch being fomething fecure from any invasion from the English; there rose up another enemy to create them disturbance; the Flemings and Normans finding the English to fail in their attempt against the Welch, thought they might with better fuccess quell and subdue them. And therefore they came to West Wales with a great army, and laid siege to the castle of Cilgerran, which Rhys had lately fortified; but after two different affaults, they were manfully beat back, and forced to depart home again. But what the Flemings could not affect against the Welch in South Wales, the Welch eafily brought about against the English in North Wales; for Prince Owen having befieged Basingwerk castle, then in the possession of the king of England, without much time spent, made himself master of it. But it was always the misfortune of the Welch, that when they found themselves secure from any enemy abroad, they were fure to quarrel and fall out at home; though indeed it could not be well otherwise expected, where fo many petty states endeavoured still to surmount and out-vie one another. And now when all things went very fuccessfully of their sides, in opposition to the English; two ambitious persons began to kindle a flame in their own bosoms; Owen Cyfeilioc the fon of Gruffydh ap Meredith Lord of Powis, and Owen Fychan fecond fon to Madawe ap Meredith, forcibly dispossessed Iorwerth Goch of his estate in Powis, which they divided betwixt themselves; Mochnant uwch Rayadr to Owen Cyfeilioc, and Mochnant is

But the rest of the princes of Wales could not A. D. 1166. brook this injury done to Iorwerth Goch; and therefore Owen Prince of North Wales, with his brother Cadwalader, and Rhys Prince of South Wales, went with an army into Powis against Owen Cyfeilioc, and having chased him out of the country, they beflowed Caereneon upon Owen Fychan, to hold it of Prince Owen; and Rhys had Walwern, by reason that it lay near his own territories. But within a while after, Owen Cyfeilioc returned with a numerous band of Normans and English along with him, and laid fiege to the castle of Caereneon, which he burnt to the ground. But the loss of this place was made up by the taking of Ruthlan castle, which Owen, Rhys, and Cadwalader jointly befieged; and which was fo ftrongly fortified, and fo manfully defended, that it cost them three months before they could make themselves masters of the place. Afterwards they won the castle of Prestatyn, and reduced the whole country of Tegengl, subject to Prince Owen; and then returned home to their respective dominions. And from henceforward nothing of moment was trans- 1167. acted, during the remainder of Prince Owen's reign, only his fon Conan most unmercifully slew Urgeney abbot of Lhwythlawr, together with his nephew Lhawthen. But a little after, Prince Rhys of South 1168. Wales released out of prison his nephew Robert, fon to Stephen Constable, whom as is faid before, he had taken at the fiege of Cilgarran castle, and sent him to Ireland to the aid of Dermot the fon of Murchart king of Linster, who was then in actual war with the king of Leimster. With him and his brother Morris Fitz-Gerald, and their nephews Robert Meyler and Raymond, went over a strong detachment of Welchmen, under the command of Richard Strongbow Earl of Strigule, who were the chief motive of the conquest of Ireland, when it was first brought in subjection to the crown of England.

But the next year, Owen Gwynedh fon of Gruf- 11694 fydh ap Conan prince of North Wales, departed this life in the two and thirtieth year of his reign.

Te

A.D. 1169. He was a wife and valourous prince, ever fortunate and victorious in all his undertakings, infomuch, as he never undertook any design but what he accomplished. He had by different women feveral iffues, who got themselves greater esteem by their valour, than by their birth and parentage. He had by Gwaldus the daughter of Lhywarch ap Trahaern ap Caradoc, Iorwerth Drwyndwn, or the Broken Nofe, Conan Maelgon, and Gwenlhian; by Christian the daughter of Grono ap Owen ap Edwyn, he had David, Roderic, Cadwalhon abbot of Bardsey and Angharad, afterwards married to Gruffydh Maylor. He had by other women feveral other children, as Conan, Lhewelyn, Meredith, Edwal, Rhun, Howel, Cadelh, Madawc, Eineon, Cynwric, Philip, and Ryrid Lord of Clochran in Ireland, Of these, Run, Lhewelyn, and Cynwric died before their father; and the rest will be mentioned in the sequel of this history.

DAVIDAPOWEN.

PRINCE Owen Gwynedh being dead, the fuccession was of right to descend to his eldest legitimate fon, Iorwerth Drwyndwn, otherwise called Edward with the Broken Nose; but by reason of that blemish upon his face, he was laid aside as unfit to take upon him the government of North Wales, Therefore his younger brothers began every one to aspire, 3170 in hopes of succeeding their father; but Howel, who was of all the eldest, but base born, begotten of an' Irish woman, finding they could not agree, stept in himself and took upon him the government. But David, who was legitimately born, could not brook that a bastard should ascend his father's throne; and therefore therefore he made all the preparations possible to pull him down. Howel on the other hand was as refolute to maintain his ground, and was not willing fo quickly to deliver up, what he had not very long got poffession of; and so both brothers meeting together in the field, were refolved to try their title by the point of the fword. The battle had not lasted long, but Howel was flain; and then David was unanimoufly proclaimed and faluted Prince of North Wales, which principality he enjoyed without any molestation, till Lhewelyn, Iorwerth Drwyndwn's fon came of age, as will hereafter appear. But Madawc, another of Owen Gwynedh's fons, finding how his brothers contended for the principality, and that his native country was like to be turmoiled in a civil war, did think it his better prudence to try his fortune abroad; and therefore leaving North Wales in a very unfettled condition, failed with a small fleet of ships which he had rigged and manned for that purpose, to the westward; and leaving Ireland on the north, he came at length to an unknown country, where most things appeared to him new and uncustomary, and the manner of the natives far different from what he had feen in Europe. This country, fays the learned H. Lhoyd, must of necesfity be some part of that vast tract of ground, of which the Spaniards, fince Hanno's time, boast themselves to be the first discoverers; and which by order of Cosmography, feems to be some part of Nova Hispania or Florida; whereby it is manifest, that this country was discovered by the Britains, long before either Columbus or Americus Vesputius sailed thither. But concerning Madawc's voyage to this country, and afterwards his return from thence; there be many fabulous stories and idle tales invented by the vulgar, who are fure never to diminish from what they hear, but will add to and increase any fable as far as their invention will prompt them. However fays the same author, it is certain that Madawc arrived in this country, and after he had viewed the fertility and pleasantness of it, he thought it expedient to invite more of his countrymen out of Britain; and therefore leaving most of those those he had brought with him already behind, he returned for Wales. Being arrived there, he began to acquaint his friends with what a fair and extensive land he had met with, void of any inhabitants, whilst they employed all their skill to supplant one another, only for a ragged portion of rocks and mountains; and therefore he would perfuade them to change their present state of danger and continual clashings for a more quiet being of ease and enjoyment. And so having got a considerable number of Welch together, he bid his final adieu to his native country, and failed with ten ships back to them he had left behind. It is therefore to be supposed, says our author, that Madawc and his people inhabited part of that country, fince called Florida, by reason that it appears from Francis Loves, an author of no small reputation, that in Acusanus and other places, the people honoured and worshipped the cross; whence it may be naturally concluded, that christians had been there before the coming of the Spaniards; and who these christians might be, unless it were this colony of Madawe's cannot be easily imagined. But by reason that the Welch who came over, were not many, they intermixt in a few years with the natives of the country, and fo following their manners and using their language, they became at length undistinguishable from the barbarians. But the country which Madawc landed in, is by the learned Dr. Powel supposed to be part of Mexico; for which conjecture he lays down these following reasons; first, as it is recorded in the Spanish chronicles of the conquest of the West Indies, the inhabitants and natives of that country affirm by tradition, that their rulers descended from a strange nation, which came thither from a strange country; as it was confessed by King Montezuma, in a speech at his submission to the king of Castile, before Hernando Cortez the Spanish general. And then the British words and names of places used in that country, even at this day do undoubtedly argue the same; as when they speak and confabulate together, they use this British word Gwrando.

Gwrando, which fignifies to hearken or liften; and a certain bird with a white head, they call Pengwyn, which fignifies the fame in Welch. But for a more complete confirmation of this, the island of Corroeso, the cape of Bryton, the river of Gwyndor, and the white rock of Pengwyn, which are all British words do manifestly shew, that it was that country which Madawc and his people inhabited.

As foon as the troubles of North Wales were over, A. D. 1117. and Prince David securely settled in his throne, the ftorm fell prefently upon Powis: for Owen Cyfeilioc the lord of the country, had always, as much as in him lay, opposed the interest and advantage of Rhys Prince of South Wales; upon which account Prince Rhys came with a great army against Powis, and having subdued Owen Cyfeilioc his enemy, he was for all that so favourable to him, that upon his delivering him pledges for his future behaviour, he presently departed out of Powis, and returned with much honour to South Wales. And now all the states of Britain being at perfect rest and amity with one another, the whole tide and scene of action returned to Ireland; for Henry king of England having called together all his nobility, began to confult about the Irish expedition, which had already been determined to be taken in hand. To this confultation there came fome messengers from Richard Strongbow Earl of Strigule Marshal of England, to deliver up to the king's hands the city of Dublin, the town of Waterford, with all fuch towns and castles as he got in right of his wife; whereupon the king restored to him all his lands both in England and Normandy, and created him Lord Steward of Ireland. For this Earl Strigule had lately, without the king's permission, gone over to Ireland, and had married the daughter of Dermott king of Dublin; which King Henry took in fuch indignation, that he presently seized upon all his lands in England and Normandy. Therefore the king having now fome footing in Ireland, the expedition was unanimously concluded upon; and fo the king fet upon his journey, and coming towards Wales was received by Prince Rhys, whose submission the king liked so well, that he presently confirmed to him all his lands in South Wales. To return the king's favour, Rhys promised to his Majesty three hundred horses and four thousand oxen toward the conquest of Ireland; for the sure payment of which he delivered source pledges. Then King Henry marching forward, came to Caerlheon upon Uske, and entering the town, he dispossed the right owner Iorwerth ap Owen ap Caradoc, and kept it for his own proper use, placing a garrison of his own mentherein.

But Iorwerth was not so easy-mouthed, as to be so unreasonably curbed by the king; and therefore departing in a great fury from the king's presence, he called to him his two fons Owen and Howel, whom he had by Angharad the daughter of Uchtryd bishop of Llandaf, and his fifter's fon Morgan ap Sitsvhlt ap Dyfnwal; and bringing together all the forces they were able, upon the king's departure they entered the country, and committing all the waste and destruction as they came along, they at last came before Caerlheon, which when they took, they used in the like manner, spoiling and destroying whatever they could meet with; fo that nothing escaped their fury, excepting the caftle, which they could not win. The king was in the mean time upon his journey to Pembrock, where being accompanied by Prince Rhys, he gave him a grant of all Cardigan, Ystratywy, Arustly, and Eluel; in recompence of all the civilities and honour he paid him. And fo Rhys returned to Aberteifi, a town he had lately won from the Earl of Glocefter, and there having prepared his prefent, about the beginning of October he returned again to Pembrock, having ordered eighty-fix horses to follow him; which being presented to the king, he accepted of thirty-fix of the choicest, and returned the rest with great thanks. The fame day King Henry went to St. David's, and after he had offered to the memory of that faint, he dined with the bishop, who was the fon fon of Gerald, cousin-german to Rhys; whither Richard Strongbow Earl of Strygule came from Ireland to confer with the king. Within a while after, King Henry being entertained by Rhys at the White-House, restored to him his son Howel, who had been for a confiderable time detained as a pledge, and appointed him a certain day for payment of his tribute, at which time, all the rest of the pledges should be set at liberty. The day following, being the next after the feast of St. Luke, the king went on board, and the wind blowing very favourably, fet fail for Ireland; and being fafely arrived upon those coasts, he landed at Dublin; where he rested for that whole winter, in order to make greater preparations against the fol-

But the change of the air and climate occasioned fuch a raging diffemper and infection among the foldiers, that to prevent the perishing of his whole army, A. D. 11720 the king was forced to return with what speed he could back for England; and so having shipped off all his army and effects, he loofed anchor, and landed in Wales in the Passion-week next year, and coming to Pembrock, he staid there on Easter-day, and then proceeded upon his journey towards England. Rhys hearing of the king's return, was very officious to pay him his devotion, and would gladly feign to be one of the first who should welcome him over; and so meeting with him at Talachan, he expressed all the ceremo-nies of duty and allegiance. Then the king passed on, and as he came from Caerdyf by the new castle upon Usk, meaning to leave Wales in a peaceable condition, he fent for Iorwerth ap Owen ap Caradoc, who was the only person in open enmity against him, and that upon very just ground, willing him to come and treat about a peace, and affuring him of a fafe conduct for himself, his sons, and all the rest of his associates. Iorwerth was willing to accept of the propofal, and thereupon fet forward to meet the king, having fent an express to his fon Owen, a valourous young gentleman, to meet him by the way. Owen, according to his father's orders, fet forward on his journey, with a small 0'4 retinue.

retinue, without any thing of arms or weapons of war, as thinking it folly to clog himself with such needless carriage, when the king had promifed a fafe conduct, But he did not find it so safe; for as he passed the new castle upon Uske, the Earl of Bristol's men, who were garrisoned therein, laid in wait for him as he came along, and fetting cowardly upon him, flew him, with most of his company. But some few escaped to acquaint his father Iorwerth of fuch a treacherous action; who hearing that his fon was fo basely murdered, contrary to the king's absolute promise of a safe pasfage; without any farther confultation about the matter, presently returned home with Howel his son, and all his friends, and would no longer put any trust or confidence in any thing that the king of England, or any of his subjects, promised to do. But on the other fide to avenge the death of his fon, who was fo cowardly cut off; he presently raised all the forces that himself and the rest of his friends were able to do; and fo entering into England, he deftroyed with fire and fword all the country, to the gates of Hereford and Glocester. But the king was so intent upon his return, that he seemed to take no great notice of what Iorwerth was doing; and therefore having by commission constituted Lord Rhys Chief Justice of all South Wales, he forthwith took his journey to Normandy. About this time died Cadwalader ap Gruffydh, the fon of Gruffydh ap Conan, fometime Prince of North Wales; who by his wife, Alice the daughter of Richard Clare Earl of Glocester, had iffue, Cunetha, Radulph, and Richard; and by other women, Cadfan, Cadwalader, Eineon, Meredith Goch, and Cadwalhon. Towards the end of this year Sitfylht ap Dyfnwal, and Iefan ap Sitfyhlt ap Riryd, furprifed the castle of Abergavenny, which belonged to the king of England, and having made themselves masters of it, they took the whole garrison prisoners, difference, and a falling out betwixt King Henry and his fon of the same name; this latter being upholden by the queen his mother, his brothers Geffrey and

Richard,

Richard, the French King, the Earl of Flanders, together with the Earl of Chester, William Patrick, with leveral other valiant knights and gentlemen. old King having a frout and faithful army, confifting of Almanes and Brabanters, was not in the least difmaved or discouraged at such a seeming storm; and which made him more bold and adventurous, he was joined by a strong party of Welchmen, which Lord Rhys had fent him, under the command of his fon Howel. King Henry overthrew his enemies in divers encounters, and having either killed or taken prisoners most of them who were rose up against him, he easily diffipated the cloud which at first seemed so black and threatening. Iorwerth ap Owen was not very forry to fee the English clash, and fall into civil diffentions among themselves; and therefore taking advantage of fuch a feafonable opportunity, he drew his army against Caerlheon, which stood out very stiflly against him. But after many warm disputes of both sides, Jorwerth at length prevailed, and entering the town by force, he took most of the inhabitants prisoners; and then laying siege to the castle, it was surrendered up in exchange for the prisoners he had taken in the town. Howel his fon at the same time was busy in Gwent is Coed; and having reduced all that country, excepting the castle, to subjection, he took pledges of the inhabitants, to be true and faithful to him, and to withdraw their allegiance from the King of England. At the same time, something of action passed in North-Wales; for David ap Owen Gwynedh, Prince of North-Wales, bringing an army over the river Menai into Anglesey, against his brother Maelgon who kept that island from him, forced him to make his escape to Ireland; in his return from whence the following year, he was accidentally discovered and seized upon, and then by his brother's orders committed to close prison. Prince David having brought the ifle of Anglesey to its pristine state of subjection to him, was refolved to move all manner of obstacles which might at any time for the future endanger its falling off from him; and these he judged to be his own next relations, and 1174 and therefore he expelled and banished all his brethren and cousins out of his territories of North-Wales. But before this sentence was put in execution, his brother Conan died, and so escaped the ignominy of being banished his native country, for no other reason but the jealousy of an ambitious brother.

About the fame time. Howel the fon of Iorwerth ap Owen of Caerlheon, took prisoner his uncle Owen Pencarn, who was right heir of Caerlheon and Gwent; and now having him fecure, and to prevent his getting any children to inherit those places which himfelf was next heir to, he first pulled out his eyes, and then very inhumanly cut off his testicles. But vengeance did not permit such a base action to go unpunished; for upon the Saturday following, a great army of Normans and Englishmen came unexpectedly before the town, and won both it and the castle, notwithstanding all the opposition which Howel and his father Iorwerth made; though this last was not privy to his fon's action. About the fame time King Henry came over to England, a little after whose arrival, William king of Scots, and Roger de Moubray, were taken prisoners at Alnewike by the Barons of the north, as they came to destroy the northern part of the country in the quarrel of the young King. But old King Henry having committed them to the fafe cuftody of the Earl of Leicester, and received Hugh Bygod Earl of Chester to his mercy, returned to Normandy with a very confiderable army of Welchmen, which David prince of North-Wales had fent him; in return of which, he gave him his fifter Emme in marriage. When he was arrived in Normandy, he fent a detachment of the Welch to cut off fome provisions which were going to the enemies camp; but in the mean time the French King came to a treaty of peace, which was shortly afterwards concluded upon; so that all the brethren, who had all this time maintained fuch an unnatural rebellion against their father, were forced to beg the old King's forgiveness and pardon for all their former misdemeanours. David Prince of North

North Wales began to grow very bold and assuming, by reason of his new alliance with the King of England; and nothing would ferve his turn, but he must put his brother Roderic in prison, and secure him with fetters. for no other account, than because he demanded his share of his father's lands. It was the custom of Wales, as is faid before, to make an equal division of the father's inheritance between all the children; and therefore David had no colour of reason or pretence to deal fo feverely with his brother; unless it were to verify that proverb; Might overcomes right. But though Prince David might depend much upon his affinity with the King of England; yet Rhys Prince of South-Wales gained his favour and countenance the more, by reason that he let slip no opportunity to further the King's interest and affairs in Wales, and by that means was a very necessary and useful instrument to keep under the Welch; and to promote the furer fettlement of the English in the country. Not that he bore any love or affection to either King Henry or his subjects; but because he was sufficiently rewarded for former services, and was still in expectation of receiving more favours at the King's hands, he was resolved to play the politician fo far, as to have regard to his own interest, more than the good of his native country. And what did ingratiate him to King Henry most of all, upon the feast of St. James he brought all fuch lords of. South-Wales as were at enmity with the King, to do him homage at Glocester; namely, Cadwalhon ap Madawc of Melvenyth, his cousin-german; Eineon Clyt of Eluel, and Eineon ap Rhys of Gwerthrynion, his fonsin-law; Morgan ap Caradoc ap Iestyn of Glamorgan; Gruffydh ap Ifor ap Meiric of Sengennyth, and Sitsylht ap Dyfnwal of Higher Gwent, all three his brothers-inlaw, who had married his fifters; together with Iorwerth ap Owen of Caerlheon. King Henry was so well pleased with this stratagem of Rhys, that notwithstanding these persons had been his implacable enemies, he readily granted them their pardon, and received them to favour; and restored to Iorwerth ap Owen the town and castle of Caerlheon, which he had unjustly taken from him. This

A.D. 1175. This reonciliation betwixt King Henry and these Welch lords, some of the English in Wales took advantage of, and more particularly William de Bruce Lord of Brecnock, who having for a long time a great longing to Gwentland, could not bring about his defign, by reason that Sitsylht ap Dyfnwal, the person of greatest sway and power in the country, was an inveterate enemy to all the English. But being now reconciled to the King, William de Bruce, under pretence of congratulating this new peace and agreement between the English and Welch, invited Sittylht and Geffrey his fon, with feveral others of the persons of chiefest note in Gwentland, to a feast in his castle of Abergavenny, which by composition he had lately received from them. Sitfylht, with the rest, came according to appointment, and without the least suspicion of any treasonable designs; but after they had been civilly entertained for some time, William Bruce, to move a quarrel against them, began at last to propound certain articles to them, to be by them kept and performed; and among other unreasonable conditions, they were to fwear, that none of them should at any time carry with them bow or fword. The Welch refusing to consent to and sign such improper articles as these: William Bruce presently calls out his men, who were ready for that purpose, and bidding them fall to their business, they most treacherously fell upon and slew the innocent and naked Welch; and as if it did not fufficiently express their cruelty and inhumanity, they immediately went to Sitfylht's house, which stood not far from Abergavenny, and taking hold of Gwladus his wife, they slew her son Cadwalader before her face, and then fetting fire to the house, they packed her away to the castle. This execrable murder being thus most barbarously, and which was worst of all, under pretence of friendship and kindness, committed; William Bruce, to cloak his treason with some reasonable excuse, and to make the world believe it was not for any private interest or expectation he had done such an act, as he knew would be by all men abhorred; caused it to be reported ported abroad, that he had done fuch a thing in revenge of the death of his uncle Henry of Hereford, whom the Welch on the Eastern-Even before had flain. But whilft these things passed in South-Wales, Roderic, David Prince of North-Wales's brother, made his escape by some means or other out of prison, and fleeing to Anglesey, he was received and acknowledged by all the country on the other fide the river Conwey, for their Lord and Prince; which they were the more willing to do, by reason that they conceived an utter abhorrence of Prince David, who contrary to all rules of equity, and almost nature, had disinherited all his brethren and coufins; as boldly relying upon his affinity and relation to the King of England. But David perceiving the ftorm to grow very violent, and that the country did numerously flock and adhere to his brother Cadwalader, thought it his best way to stay a while, till the storm was abated; and so retired over the river Conwey. Towards the end of this year, Cadelh the fon of Gruffydh ap Rhys, and brother to Lord Rhys, after a tedious fit of fickness. and taken upon him the Monkish order, departed this life, whose body was very honourably interred at Stratflur.

In the spring of the following year, died also David 1176. Fitz-Gerald Bishop of Menevia, or S. Davids, whose fee was supplied by one Piers, being nominated thereunto by the King of England. But what happened most remarkable this year; the Lord Rhys Prince of South-Wales made a very great feast at Christmas in his castle of Aberteisi, which he caused to be proclaimed through all Britain, Ireland, and the islands adjacent, some considerable time before; and according to their invitation, many hundreds of English, Normans, and others coming to Aberteifi, were very honourably received, and courteously entertained by Prince Rhys. But among other tokens of their welcome and entertainment, Rhys caused all the bards or poets throughout all Wales to come thither; and for a better diversion to the company, he provided chairs to be set in the hall, in which the bards being seated, they were to answer each other in rhyme; and those that acquitted themselves most handsomely, and overcame the rest, were promised great rewards and rich presents. In this poetical disceptation, the North-Wales bards obtained the victory, with the applause and approbation of the whole company; and among the professors of musick, between whom there was no counted the most expert. But for all this civil and obliging treatment of Prince Rhys, the Normans upon the marches fell to their accustomed manner of treacherous way-laying, and privately affaulting the harmless and undeligning Welch; and therefore Lineon Clyt Rhys his fon-in-law, and Morgan ap Meredith, falling into the net which the Normans had deceitfully laid for them, were treacherously murdered. Therefore, to keep the Normans under greater fear and awe for the future. Prince Rhys built a castle at Rhayadr Gwy, being a place where the river Wye falls with a very great noise and precipitation down a great rock. But this castle was like to stand him in a double stead; Z178. for it was not long after he had perfectly finished it, that the fons of Conan ap Owen Gwynedh made war against him; but finding upon trial that their defign adviseable to retire back to North-Wales.

The next year, Cadwalhon, brother to Owen Gwynedh, an uncle to David and Roderic, who for fear of his brother had some time ago fled for refuge to the King of England; as he was conveyed home by fome of the King's fervants, to enjoy his patrimonial Estate in Wales, was by those barbarous and treacherous villains murdered in his journey. This year the sepulchre of that famous and noble British King Arthur, with his wife Gwenhofar (by the means of some Welch bard, whom King Henry had heard at Pembrock relate in a fong the worthy and mighty acts of that great Prince, and the place where he was buried) was found in the isle of Afalon, without the Abbey of Glastenbury; their bodies being laid in a hollow elder tree, buried fifteen foot in the earth. The bones of King Arthur were of marvelous and almost incredible against Rhys was impracticable, they thought it more

dible bigness, having ten wounds in the skull, whereof one being confiderably larger than the rest, seemed to be his death-blow; and the Queen's hair feemed to the fight to be fair and yellow, but when touched crumbled presently to dust. Over the bones was laid a stone, with a cross of lead, upon the lower side of which stone were engraven these words:

HIC JACET SEPULTUS INCLYTUS REX ARTHURUS IN INSULA AVALONIA.

No action of moment had passed in Wales this long time, and the Welch were in perfect amity and concord with the King of England; but fome unlucky accident fell out at last to dissolve this happy union and agreement. One Ranulph de Poer, who was 11823 sheriff of Glocestershire, or rather as Giraldus Cambrensis observes, of Herefordshire, being a cruel and unreasonable oppressor of the Welch, put the Lord of Gwentland to death; in revenge of whom a certain young person of that country, set upon Ranulph with feveral other gentlemen his companions, and flew them to a man. King Henry was implacably enraged at this news, and fo cruelly incenfed, that he prefently raised and drew together all his power, and came to Worcester, intending to march forward to Wales, and to invade the enemies country. But the Lord Rhys ap Gruffydh, a fubtile and a politick Prince, thinking it impossible to withstand the English army, and fearing the King's puissance, which he perceived to be so implacably bent against the Welch, went in person to Worcester, and swearing fealty to the King, became his perpetual liege-man; and for the due observance of this contract, he promised to send his fons and nephews for pledges. But when he would have perfuaded them to answer his request, the young men confidering with themselves, how former pledges had not been very genteely treated by the English,

refused to go; and so the whole matter rested for that fime. What became of the matter afterwards we know not; but probable it is, that King Henry returned to England satisfied with Rhys's submission; for we hear no more of his coming to Wales. And fo the country remained quiet and undisturbed for a long time; till at length the Welch began to fall to their wonted method of killing and murdering one another. A.D. 1185. walader Prince Rhys's fon was privately murdered in West-Wales, and buried in the Ty Gwyn. And the year following, Owen Fychan the fon of Madawc ap Meredith, was flain by night in the castle of Carrergova near Ofwestry, by Gwenwynwyn and Cadwalhon the fons of Owen Cyfeilioc. But what was most unnatural of all, Lhewelyn, whose father Cadwalhon ap Gruffydh ap Conan was lately murdered by the Englishmen, was taken by his own brothers, who very barbaroufly put out his eyes. About the same time, Baldwyn, Archbishop of Canterbury, being attended by Giraldus Cambrensis, took a progress into Wales, being the first Archbishop of Canterbury that visited that country; whose authority the clergy of Wales in vain opposed, though they stifly alledged the liberties and priviledges of their metropolitan church of S. Davids. In this visitation, described by Giraldus in his Itinerarium Cambriæ, he persuaded many of the nobility of Wales to go to the Holy Land against those prevailing enemies of christianity, the Saracens; to whose prevailing greatness, Jerusalem itself was now in great danger to become subject. The Archbishop having left the country, Malegon the fon of Lord Rhys brought all his power against Tenbigh, and having by force made himself matter of it, burnt the whole town to the ground, and so carried away very considerable spoil. He was a person of such civil behaviour and easy accefs, of fo comely personage, and honesty in all his actions, that he attracted the most earnest love and affec> tion of all his friends; by which means he became very terrible and formidable to his enemies, especially the Flemings, of whom he obtained divers victories and conquests.

The next year, being the year of Christ 1189, A. D. 1189. Henry the Second, furnamed Courtmantel, king of England died, and was buried at Fonteverard; after whom, his for Richard, called Curdelyon, was by the unanimous confent of all the peers and nobility of England, crowned in his place. Prince Rhys being thus deprived of his greatest friend, thought it his wifest way to make the best provision he could for himself, by enlarging his dominions, and extending the bounds of his present territories; and therefore having raifed all the ftrength he could, he won the castles of Seynclere, Abercorran, and Lhanstephan; and having taken and committed to prison Maelgwn his fon, who was the greatest thorn in his fide, as one that was most passionately beloved by the South Wales men, he brought the whole country to his fubjection. Then he built the castle of Cydwely; but 1190 what took away from him the joy of all this good fortune, he lost his daughter Gwenlhian, a woman of fuch incomparable beauty, and exceeding in all feminine qualifications, that she was accounted the fairest and best accomplished lady in all the country. And 1191 not long after her died Gruffydh Maylor, lord of Bromfield, a man of great prudence and experience, and one that excelled all the nobility of his time in hofpitality, and all other acts of generofity and liberality. His corps was carried to Myfod, and honourably interred there, being attended by most of the perfons of quality throughout the whole country. He had iffue by his wife Angharad daughter of Owen Gwynedh prince of North Wales, a fon called Madawc, who fucceeded his father in that part of Powys, called from him Powys Fadawc. Rhys, prince of South Wales, was growing very powerful, and had made himself master of the greatest part of South Wales, only with some few places more, Dynefawr held out still; which however, upon the first affault he made against it, was delivered up to him. But as he increased in the number of towns and castles, he had the misfortune to have that of his children diminished; for his daughter Gwenlhian was lately deceased; and now he had no sooner got Dynefawr castle into his possession, but his son Owen died at Strata Florida, or Ystratsfur. King Richard was gone to the Holy Land against the Saracens; but on his return to England, he won the kingdom of Cyprus, and gave it to Gwido king of Jerusalem, upon condition he would resign his former title to him: during his stay in this island, he married Berengaria the daughter of the king of Navarre.

A. D. 1192. Maelgon, Prince Rhy's fon had been now detained a long time in prison, where his father had shut him up; but being at last utterly weary of such a close confinement, he found fome means or other to get out, and to make his escape. His father Prince Rhys was not fo troubled at his being broke out, and that he had got his liberty, as to give over the conquest, which all this while he had gone fo furiously on with; but laying fiege to Lhanhayaden castle he took it without any great opposition, and brought all the country about to his subjection. And what favoured him more in his attempts against the English, King Richard having most bravely fignalized himself against the infidels, in his return home through Austria, was taken prisoner by Duke Leopold, who presented him to the Emperor Henry, who demanded 200,000 marks for his ransom; laying to his charge, that he had spoiled and plundered the island of Sicily in his voyage, to the Holy Land. And as Rhys took the advantage of King Richard's absence to subject South Wales; so Roderic brother to David Prince of North Wales, made use of Gothrike's the king of Man's help, to get the principality of North Wales to himself, and eject his brother. And therefore entering into Angle-fey, he quickly reduced the whole island to his subjection. But he did not enjoy it long; for before the year was over, the sons of his brother Conan came with an army against him, and forcing him together with the king of Man to fly the island, they took present possession of it themselves. And while these things were done in North Wales, Maelgon, Prince Rhys of South Wales his son, who was lately escaped from prison, besieged Ystratmeyric castle, and after some small

opposition got into his own hands upon Christmas night; which encouraged him to farther attempts. And at the same time, his brother Howel, surnamed Says, or the Englishman, by reason that he had served for fome time under the king of England, another fon of Prince Rhys, got by furprise the castle of Gwys, and having fecured Philip de Gwys the owner, with his wife and two fons, he made them all prisoners of war. Then the two brothers Howel and Maelgon joined their forces; but fearing that they had more castles than what they were able to defend, they thought it convenient to rafe Lhanhayaden castle; which the Flemings having notice of, they gathered all their power together, and coming to Lhanhayaden at the day appointed, they unexpectedly fet upon the Welch, and flew a great number of them. But notwithstanding this sudden and unhappy accident, they thought it necessary to destroy the castle; and so coming to Lhanhayaden the second time, they rafed it to the ground, without any molestation from, or appearance of any enemy to disturb them. But when Anarawd, another fon of Prince Rhys, faw how prosperously his brothers succeeded, he thought to make himself as rich as they, and by a fhorter and an easier method; and therefore having under a smooth pretence of friendship and love got his brothers Howel and Madawc in private, being moved with ambition and covetoufness to enjoy their estates, he first made them prisoners, and then very unnaturally pulled out their eyes. But Maelgon escaped this snare, and hearing what a foul action was committed, he promised his brother Anarawd the castle of Ystratmeyric, for the liberty and releasement of his two brothers, which Anarawd granted. But it is no wonder that A. D. 1194. those brothers could be unnatural and cruel to one another, who could join and agree to rebel against their father; and now Prince Rhys having rebuilt the castle of Rhayadr Gwy, was laid wait for, and taken prifoner by his own fons, who were afraid, that in cafe their father had them once in his power, he would feverely revenge their cruel and unnatural deeds. But Howel proved more kind and dutiful than the rest;

who, though blind, found a way to let his father escape out of Maelgon's prison, and so Prince Rhys being set at liberty, he took and destroyed the castle of Dynefowr, which belonged to his son Maelgon. But tho he succeeded in this attempt, yet he lost another castle elsewhere; for the sons of Cadwalhon ap Madawc of Melyenydh being informed that Prince Rhys was detained prisoner by his son Maelgon, they besieged Rhayadr Gwy castle, which being surrendered up to them, they fortissed for their own use.

But whilst these unhappy differences, and unnatural clashings betwixt Prince Rhys and his fons, continue and rage in South Wales, a new revolution of affairs happened in North Wales, Prince David had now enjoyed the sceptre of North Wales for above twenty-four years; and one would think, that fo long a possession would secure him in his throne, that it could not be very easy to pull him down. But posfession is not always the furest card, which proved very true in Prince David's case at this time; for Lhewelyn the fon of Iorwerth Drwyndwn, who was the eldest fon of Owen Gwynedh prince of North Wales, being now arrived to years of maturity, and having fense enough to understand what a just title and claim he had to the principality of North Wales, of which his uncle David had so unjustly kept him out; he thought it high time to endeavour to recover what was lawfully his own, which however he was well perfuaded his uncle David would never easily part with. And therefore being well affured that the justness of his title would never mount him up to the throne, without he had an army at his heels to help him on; he called together all his friends and relations by his mother's fide, who was Marred the daughter of Madawc ap Meredith prince of Powys, and having drawn to his fide his cousins the fons of Conon ap Owen Gwynedh, and Rhodri ap Owen, he came into North Wales, proclaiming how against all justice his uncle David had first disinherited his father Iorwerth, and then had kept the government from him who was the right heir. And though his father Iorwerth had been incapable of taking upon him the government by reason of fome infirmity; yet there was no reason that his father's weakness should exclude and turn him out; and therefore, being now fensible of what he was not capable to understand in his youth, he laid claim to the principality, which was justly his own. But there was no great need of conjuring to understand his claim, nor of much rhetorick to perfuade the people to own him for their prince; whose affection was cooled, and almost worn off from David, ever since he had dealt so unnaturally with his brothers, whom after he had deprived of their estates, he banished out of the country. And therefore before Lhewelyn could expect to have any fure footing, the whole country of North Wales was at his devotion, excepting only three caftles, which David by the help of the English, in whom, by reason of his affinity with the late King Henry, he depends much upon, kept to himself. And thus David being deprived of almost all that he formerly poffessed, we shall reckon him no more among the princes of North Wales, but restore the principality to the true heir Lhewelyn ap Iorwerth.

LHEWELYN AP IORWERTH.

LHEWELYN ap Iorwerth the fon of Owen Gwynedh, having thus successfully carried on his just claim to the dominion of North Wales, and being quietly settled in the government of it, Roger Mortimer marches with a strong body to Melyenith, and built the castle of Cymaron, whereby he reduced that country to his subjection, and forced thence the two sons of Cadwalhon ap Madawc that were governors thereof. About this time Rhys and Meredith, two valiant, but undutiful sons of Prince Rhys, having got together a body of hot-headed, daring soldiers, came before Dynefawr, and took the castle that was garrisoned by their father's men: hence they proceeded to Cantre-Fychan, where the country civily P 2 received them, and furrendered up the castle to them. At this their father was justly incensed, and therefore to put a stop to their farther proceedings, he endeavoured by all means to take them, which not long after happened; for their adherents now began to be touched with the sense as well of their treason against, as of their allegiance due to their lawful lord Prince Rhys; and therefore to atone for their past faults, and to procure his suture favour, they betrayed their rebellious leaders to their offended father, who immediately

The enfuing year Prince Rhys levies a great army. A.D. 1106, whose first attempt was upon the town and castle of Caermadthyn, both which he took in a short time and destroyed, and then returned with confiderable booty. Not long after he led the faid army to the marches, and invested the castle of Clun, which was not so easily taken as the former; for this cost him a long fiege, and many a fierce affault; and therefore to be revenged of it, when he took it he laid it in ashes; thence he proceeded to the castle of Radnor, which he likewise won; but immediately after it cost him a bloody battle; for he was no fooner mafter of the castle, but Roger Mortimer and Hugh de Say came with a numerous and well-disciplined army, confifting of Normans and English, to the relief of it. Whereupon Prince Rhys thinking it not his best course to confine his men within the walls, led them up into a champaign ground hard by, and there, like a valiant prince, refolved to give his enemies battle, though they had much the advantage of him; for his men were neither fo well armed, nor fo much accustomed to battle as the others were; however, their courage made amends for their arms; and their leader's prudence and conduct supplied the defects of their discipline; for they chose rather to die honourably in the defence of their country, than shamefully to survive the loss of it: and therefore they attacked their enemies fo valiantly, that they were not long able to withftand their force, but quitted the field in great diforder, leaving a great number of their men behind them flain upon the spot; and Prince Rhys pursued them so warmly, that they were glad of the shelter of the night to protect them from his fury. After this victory, he besieged the castle of Payne in Elsel, which he easily took, and kept in his own hands, till William de Bruce, the owner thereof, came to him, and humbly defired peace of him, which he granted him, and withal delivered him up his castle again. Not long after, the archbishop of Canterbury (whom King Richard had fubstituted his lieutenant in England) marches with a powerful army towards Wales, and besieges the castle of Gwenwynwyn, at the pool; but the garrison made such a vigorous defence, that he lost a great many of his men, and all his attempts proved ineffectual; therefore he fent for some pioneers, whom he ordered to undermine the walls; which when the befieged understood, they bethought of fecuring themselves on the most honourable terms they could; they were not willing to put themselves to the hazard of a battle, for their enemies were thrice their number; therefore they proposed to surrender up the caftle, on condition they should carry off all their arms along with them: which offer the archbishop accepted of, and fo permitted the garrison to march out quietly. Then fortifying the castle for the king's use, and putting a strong garrison in it for its defence, he returned again to England. But Gwenwynwyn was not fo willing to part from his castle, as never to attempt the recovery of it; therefore as foon as he understood that the archbishop was gone back, he immediately belieged it, and shortly after received it on the same terms that his men had delivered it up, and afterwords kept it for his own use.

The following year there broke out a terrible plague, which spread over all Britain and France, and carried off a great number of the nobility, besides common people. This year likewise died the valiant Rhys, Prince of South Wales; the only stay and defence of that part of Wales; for he it was that got them their liberty, and secured it to them. He often very readily exposed his own life for the defence of

A.D. 1197. theirs and their country; generally he got the better of his enemies, and at last either brought them entirely under his subjection, or forced them to quit their country. He was no less illustrious for his virtuous endowments, than for his valour and extraction; so that it was with good reason that the British bards and others wrote so honourably of him, and so mightily deplored his death.

To this prince were born many fons and daughters, whereof his eldest fon Gruffydh succeeded him: the others were Cadwalhon, Maelgon, Meredith, and Rhys. Of his daughters, one called Gwenlhian was married to Ednyfed Fychan, ancestor to Owen Tudor that married Katharine queen-dowager to King Henry the Fifth: and the rest were very well matched with some of the nobility of the country. Prince Gruffydh being fettled in the government of his country, did not long enjoy it peaceably; for his troublesome brother Maelgon thought it now a fit time to endeavour the recovery of the inheritance his father had deprived him of. To this purpose he makes a league with Gwenwynwyn, the fon of Owen Cyfeilioc, lord of Powys, and by their joint interest got together a considerable body of men, wherewith they furprifed Prince Gruffydh at Aberystwyth, whom, after they had slain a great many of his men, they took prisoner. Thus Maelgon effectually accomplished his design in the recovery of the castle, and the whole country of Cardigan. His unfortunate brother he committed to the custody of his spiteful confederate Gwenwynwyn, who immediately out of malice delivered him up to the mercy of his inveterate enemies the English. After this Gwenwynwyn having got together an army entered Arustly, and brought it to his subjection.

David ap Owen, whom Prince Lhewelyn had forced to quit his usurpation of the principality of North Wales, had hitherto lived quietly and peaceably, not fo much out of kindness to his nephew, as because he knew not how to redress himself; but now having got a great army of English and Welch, he used his utmost efforts to recover his principality. Whereupon Prince Lhewelyn

Lhewelyn who was the right heir, and in possession of it, came on boldly to meet him, and gave him battle, wherein he shamefully routed his army, and took his uncle David prisoner, whom he delivered into safe custody, whereby he secured to himself and his country peace and quietness. Towards the close of this year Owen Cyfeilioc lord of the Higher Powys departed this life, and left his estate to Gwenwynwyn his fon; after whom that part of Powys was called Powys-Wenwynwyn, to distingnish it from the other called Powys-Fadoc, the inheritance of the lords of Bromfield. Much about this time Trahaern Fychan, a man of great power and authority in the county of Brecknock, was fuddenly feized upon as he was going to Llancors to confer about some business with William de Bruce lord thereof, and by an order of the lords, tied to an horse's tail and dragged through the ftreets of Brecknock to the gallows, where he was beheaded, and his body hung up by the feet for three days. Which barbarity inflicted on him for no known just cause, so frightened his brother's wife and children, that they fled their country for fear of the same usage. The year following Maelgon, who had before routed A. D. 1198. his brother Prince Gruffydh's army, and taken him prisoner, begins now to enlarge his territories, and takes in his brother's castles of Aberteisi and Ystratmeyric. Also the youngest son of Prince Rhys about this time recovered the castle of Dynesowr from the

The fame fummer, Gwenwynwyn took up a refolution of attempting to extend Wales to its antient limits; and for this purpose he raises a powerful army, with which he first designs to be avenged of William de Bruce for the inhuman death of his cousin Trahaern Fychan, and therefore he besiegeth his castle of Payn in Elsel, where he makes a protestation, that as soon as he had taken it, for a farther satisfaction to his revenge, he would unmercifully ravage the whole country as far as Severn. But these mighty menaces were soon blown over; for he had neither battering engines nor pioneers, so that he was forced to lay before the castle for three weeks without effecting any thing; whereby the murderers had time enough to apply themselves to England for succours, which they obtained. For upon this Geoffrey Fitz-Peter, Lord Chief Justice of England levies a confiderable army, to which he joins all the Lords Marchers, and comes in all haste to the relief of the place, where he meets Gwenwynwyn; with whom before he would hazard a battle, he was defirous to have a treaty of peace, to which Gwenwynwyn and his adherents would in nowise hearken or condescend, but returned in answer, that their business there was to be revenged of old iniuries done them. Hereupon the English lords resolved to enlarge Prince Gruffydh of South Wales, whom they knew to be an inveterate enemy of Gwenwynwyn, as he that delivered him up to their hands; and likewise to be a man of great authority in his country, therefore they rightly concluded he might be more ferviceable to them when at liberty than under confinement, wherein they were not disappointed; for he immediately got together a ftrong body of his countrymen, and joining with the English advanced towards the castle, where they furiously attacked Gwenwynwyn, who made no less vigorous defence; hereupon there enfued a bloody battle, with a great flaughter on both fides, but at length the English got the victory, and Gwenwynwyn lost a great number of common foldiers (if we believe Matthew Paris, 3700 men) besides a great many of his best commanders, among whom were Anarawd, fon of Eineon, Owen ap Cadwalhon, Richard ap Iestyn, and Robert ap Howel. Meredith ap Conan was likewise taken prisoner, with many more. After this the English returned home triumphantly, and requited Prince Gruffydh's service with a perfect liberty, who immediately, partly by his own force, partly by the affection of his people, repossessed himself of all his dominions, fave the caftles of Aberteifi and Ystratmeyric, which his usurping brother Maelgon, by the affiftance of Gwenwynwyn, had, during his confinement by the English, taken from him, and still unjustly detained. Hereupon, fome some of Prince Gruffydh's prime nobility and clergy came to him, and offered him their endeavours of reconciling him to his brother, and made him fo apprehensive of his just displeasure at him, that he took a folemn oath before them, that in case his brother would give him hoftages for the fecurity of his own person, he would deliver him up his castle of Aberreisi by a day appointed; which proposals Prince Gruffydh accepted of, and accordingly fent him his demands: but it was the least of Maelgon's intention to make good his part, or elfe he was very inconstant in his resolution; for he had no sooner received the hostages, but instead of delivering up the castle, he fortifies it, and puts in a garrison for his own use, and commits the hostages to the custody of Gwenwynwyn, Prince Gruffydh's mortal enemy; but not long after, their innocency procured them an opportunity of an escape.

In the year 1199, Maelgon still pursuing his hatred A. D. 1199. of his brother Prince Gruffydh, gets an army, where-with he befiegeth his caftle of Dynerth, which he was mafter of in a short time, and then put all the garrison to the fword. But about the same time Prince Gruffydh in lieu of this, won the castle of Cilgerran, and strongly fortified it. This year Richard the First of England, as he was belieging the castle of Chalons in France, was shot from the walls with an arrow, whereof he not long after died, and left his kingdom to his brother John, who thereupon was with great folemnity crowned at Westminster. But he could not expect to enjoy this kingdom peaceably; for his elder brother Geoffrey Plantagenet had left a fon behind him named Arthur, whose right to the crown of England was by lineal descent; which now therefore he justly lays claim to, and by the affistance of King Philip of France (who espoused his quarrel) endeavours to recover. But before Prince Arthur had made fufficient preparations to carry on his design, he was unexpectedly fet upon by his uncle, his army routed, and he himself taken prisoner, and committed to fafe custody; not long after which, he died, and so

King John was rid of his competitor.

The following year Gruffydh ap Conan ap Owen Gwynedh died, and was buried in a monk's cawl in the abbey of Conway, which way of burying was very much practifed (especially by the better fort) in those days; for the monks and friars had deluded the people into a strong conceit of the merits of it, and had firmly perfuaded them it was highly conducive to their future happiness to be thus interred. But this superstition, together with the propagators of it, they had lately received from England: for the first abbey or monastery we read of in Wales, since the destruction of that famous house of Bangor, which favoured of Romish dregs, was the Ty-Gwyn built in the year 1146, after which they mightily increased and fpread over all the country; and now the fountain head began to be corrupted; for the clergy maintained a doctrine which their ancestors abhorred, as may eafily be gathered from the writings of that worthy divine Ambrosius Telesinus, who flourished in the year 540, when the christian faith (which we suppose to be delivered at the isle of Afalon by Joseph of Arimathea) flowed in this land in a pure and uncorrupted stream, before it was infected and polluted by that proud and blood-thirsty monk Augustine. I say, he then wrote and left behind him as his own opinion, and the opinion of those days, these following verses:

Gwae'r offeiriad byd Nys angreifftia gwyd Ac ny phregetha: Gwae ny cheidw ei gail Ac ef yn figail Ac nys areilia; Gwae ni cheidw ei dhefaid Rhae bleidhie Rhufeniaid A'i ffon gnwppa.

i. e. Woe be to the bishop who does not rebuke vice, and give good example; and who does not preach.

preach. Woe be to him, if he does not keep well his fold: and he a shepherd. And does not keep together and guard his sheep from popish wolves, with his pastoral staff.

From whence it is apparent, that the Church of Rome was then corrupt, and that the British churches persevered in the primitive and truly apostolical profession of christianity, as it was at first planted in the island; and that no Roman innovations had crept in among them, which afterwards mightily increased, when they were once introduced by Augustine the monk.

This year likewise we find the spireful and turbulent Maelgon, choosing rather to persist still in his rebellion, than to return to his allegiance, and to prefer a small lucre to the love and safety of his country. For now finding that the castle of Aberteis was not tenable by his own power and force, yet rather than deliver it up to his brother Prince Gruffydh, and thereby procure his favour, he chose to sell it to his bitter enemies the English, for an inconsiderable sum of money, whereby he opened them a free passage into all Wales; this being reckoned one of its chief defences and bulwarks. About this time Madawc son of Gruffydh Maylor lord of Bromsield built the abbey of Lanegwest, commonly known by the English by the name of Vale Crucii.

In the year 1201, the valiant Lhewelyn ap Ior-A.D. 1201, werth, prince of North Wales banished out of his territories his cousin Meredith the son of Conan ap Owen Gwynedh, whom he suspected of treasonable practices, and therefore consisted his lands which were the Cantres of Lhyn and Esyonyth. Much about the same time Meredith the son of Prince Rhys was slain at Carnwilhion by treason, whereupon his elder brother Gruffydh possessed himself of his castle in Lhanymdhyfri and all his lands. This Gruffydh was a valiant and discreet prince, and one that was like to bring all South Wales to good order and obedience; for in all things he trod in his father's steps, and made it his business to fucceed him as well in his valour and virtuous endowments, as in his government. But the vast hopes

A.D. P202. conceived of him foon proved abortive; for in the enfuing year, on St. James's day, he died, to the great grief and loss of his country, and shortly after was buried at Ystratsfur with great pomp and solemnity. He left behind him for a fuccessor a son called Rhys. which Maud the daughter of William de Bruce had bore him. The following year some of the Welch nobility marched with an army towards the castle of Gwerthrynion, which belonged to Roger Mortimer, and after a short siege, they took it and levelled it

This year Lhewelyn ap Iorwerth calling to mind his estate and title, and how all the Welch princes were obliged both by the laws of Roderic the Great, and those of Howel Dha to acknowledge the king or prince of North Wales for their fovereign lord, and to do homage to him for their dominions: yet notwithstanding that they knew this to be their duty, and that they formerly had readily performed it; yet because of late years his predecessors, had neglected to call them to their duty, they now began to imagine themselves exempted from it; and some thought themfelves accountable to no fuperior prince; others denied fubjection to Prince Lhewelyn, and held their dominions of the king of England. To put a stop therefore to the further growth of this contempt, and to affert his own right, Prince Lhewelyn fummons all the Welch lords, who for the most part appeared and fwore allegiance to him. But Gwenwynwyn lord of Powys, neither came to this meeting, nor would own the prince's supremacy; which stubborness and disobedience the prince acquainted his lords with, whereupon they delivered their opinion, that it was but reasonable, that Gwenwynwyn should be compelled to his duty, or else forfeit his estate: this all the lords consented to, but Elis ap Madawc, who was an intimate friend of Gwenwynwyn, and therefore would not confent to the enacting any thing that might be prejudicial to him, but broke off from the meeting much diffatisfied with their proceedings. Notwithstanding which, Prince Lhewelyn, pursuant to the advice of the rest of his lords, raises an army, and marches towards Powys; but before he made any use of it, he was by the mediation of some learned and able men reconciled to Gwenwynwyn, and fo Gwenwynwyn became his dutiful fubject; which he confirmed both by oath and writing: and indeed it was not without good reason, that Prince Lhewelyn used all the caution imaginable to bind this man; for he had fworn allegiance before to the king of England. Lhewelyn having thus fubjected Gwenwynwyn he thought it now convenient to fhew likewife fome marks of his refentments against his adherent Elis ap Madawe, and therefore he stript him of all his lands; whereupon Elis fled the country, but not long after, yielding himself to the prince's mercy, he received of him the castle of Crogen, and seven townfhips belides. And now having mentioned Crogen, it will not be improper to step a little out of the way, and here take notice of the reason why the English formerly, when they had a mind to reproach the Welch, called them Crogens. The first occasion of it was this, King Henry the Second in his expedition against the Welch to the mountains of Berwin, lay a while at Ofwestre, during which time he detached a number of his men to try the passages into Wales, who as they would have passed Offa's ditch at the castle of Crogen, at which place there was a narrow way through the same ditch, which appears now very deep through all that country, and bears its old name; these men, I fay, as they would have paffed this streight, were met by a party of Welch, and a great many of them flain and buried in that ditch, as appears by their graves there to be feen; and the name of the streight imports as much, being called in Welch Adwy'r bedhaw. English therefore hearing in mind this slaughter, whenever they got any of the Welch into their clutches, upbraided them with the name of Crogen, intimating thereby thereby that they should expect no more favour or mercy at their hands, than they shewed them in the skirmish. But this word, which at first was rather a badge of reputation than disgrace to the Welch, came afterwards to be used in a bad sense, and only then applied when they designed to reproach and abuse them. But to return to Prince Lhewelyn, whom we find returning home after he had successfully afferted his sovereignty over all Wales, and set all things in good order: And by the way he fortistes the castle of Bala in Penlhyn. About this time Rhys the son of Gruffydh ap Rhys the right prince of South-Wales took the castle of Lhanymdhyfry upon Michaelmasday. This year Lhewelyn Prince of Wales took to wife Joan the daughter of king John, which Agatha daughter of Robert Ferrers Earl of Derby bore him, with whom he gave the Prince for a dowry the lord-

A.D.1203. Prince Rhys whom we mentioned the year before to have taken the castle of Lhanymdhyfri, wins likewife the castle of Llangadoc, and puts a garrison therein; but he enjoyed neither of them long; for shortly after, his uncle Maelgon, with his friend Gwenwynwyn, levied a powerful army, and with it befreged and took the castle of Lhanymdhyfri; thence they removed to Llangadoc, and wan the castle likewife, upon this condition, that the garrison be permitted to march out quietly. When they had taken these two castles, they went to Dinerth, where Maelgon finished the castle he had formerly begun there. This year likewise Prince Lhewelyn set at liberty his uncle David ap Owen Gwynedh, who made but a forry return to his kindness; for instead of living peaceably at home, and enjoying that liberty that was granted him, he flees to England, and there gets an army, wherewith he attempts to restore himself to his antient estate of North-Wales; but he missed his mark; for his prudent nephew immediately met him on his march, and gave him a shameful overthrow, wherewith David was so mightily disheartened, that he-presently returned for England, and shortly after died for meer forrow. The next year Howel, a blind A. D. 1204, son of Prince Rhys was slain at Camaes by his brother Maelgon's men, and buried just by his brother Gruffydh at Ystratsfur. But notwithstanding that, Maelgon in those days usurped all the rule and government of South Wales; yet his brother Gruffydh's sons, Rhys and his brethren, won from him the chief defence of all that country, to wit, the castles of Dynefowr and Lhanymdhyfri. About this time William Marshal Earl of Pembrock, besieged the castle of Cilgerran, and took it; and not long after, Mael- 12051 gon hired an Irishman to kill Gadifor ap Griffri; after which horrid fact, Maelgon feized upon his four fons, and put them to death; these were forward promising young gentlemen, and descended from a noble stock; for their mother Susanna was a daughter of the said Howel ap Rhys, by a daughter of Madawc ap Meredith Prince of Powis. In the year 1206, Maelgon 1206, built a castle at Abereneon. At which time there was fuch abundance of fish feen at Aberystwyth, that the like number was never known to have come there in the memory of man before.

This year the king of England banished the realm 1207; William de Bruce and his wife, on the account of a grudge that he bore his fon, and then feized upon all his lands; whereupon, William with his wife and fon fled to Ireland, and there continued for fome time. And this hardship he now underwent was the less pitied, becaused he exercised the great power he had in the marches of Wales with extreme cruelty and injustice. The same year Gwenwynwyn came to Shrewfbury to speak with the king's council, where he was detained prisoner: Whereupon Prince Lhewelyn conquered all his country, took all his towns and caftles, and garrifoned them for his own use. This expedition of Prince Lhewelyn mightily alarmed the usurping Maelgon, and the more, because he had intelligence that Lhewelyn was on his march towards South Wales; therefore he now puts himself in the best posture he could to receive him; but finding felf not able to abide the Prince's coming, and to withstand his forces, he demolisheth his castles of Aberystwyth, Ystratmeyric, and Dinerth, which before he had fortified. Notwithstanding which, the Prince comes to Aberystwyth, and rebuildeth the castle and puts a garrison therein; after this he seized upon the Cantref of Penwedic and the land betwixt Dyfi and Aeron which he gave to Maelgon's nephews the fons of Gruffydh ap Rhys, and then returned home with great joy and triumph. Not long after Rhys Fychan, fon to Prince Rhys, befieged the caftle Lhangadoc, and took it, contrary to the promife and league he had made with his nephews, forgetting likewise how freely and readily they had administered to him in his necessity; therefore to be revenged of this ingratitude and breach of promife, Rhys and Owen no fooner heard of it, but they furiously attacked the castle, and took it by affault, and put to the fword, or took prifoners all the garrison, and then burnt the castle to the ground.

This year King John levied a powerful army with A. D. 1209. which he made a voyage to Ireland; but as he was on the borders of Wales on his journey thitherwards, there was a criminal brought before him who had murdered a priest. The officer desired to know the king's pleafure, how he would have the delinquent punished; but the king, instead of ordering any punishment to be inflicted upon him suitable to the heinousness of his crime discharged him with a Well done thou good fervant, thou hast slain mine enemy; for fuch he reckoned the clergy of those days, who were very ill-affected to his usurped, arbitrary government, and therefore he flightly regarded any injuries that were done them, nay, thought those did him good fervice who did them wrong, He had not been long in Ireland, but he got into his clutches the unfortunate William de Bruce the younger, and his mother Mawd de Saint Valerike, whom we have mentioned before to have quitted England for fear of him, and to have fled here for shelter. Upon his return to England he brought these in triumph along with him, and commirred mitted them to Windfor castle, where, by his orders, not long after they were inhumanly famished. The reason of King John's displeasure against William de Bruce Lord of Brecknock, Matthew Paris delivers, to Page [303]

When the Pope had excommunicated the realm of England, the king, to prevent any inconveniencies that might enfue thereupon, took pledges of fuch of his nobles as he thought were difaffected to him, and would be like, if occasion offered, to countenance and promote a rebellion. Amongst others, he sends messengers to William de Bruce to demand his sons for pledges, to whom Mawd, de Bruce's wife, being the readier speaker, answered, (though what she said was no less her husband's sentiment than her own) That the king, who had proved fo base a guardian to his nephew Prince Arthur, whom instead of setting in, he deprived of his right, should have none of her children. This answer the messengers delivered to the king. whereat he was fo highly displeased, that he ordered fome foldiers should be fent to seize this lord; but he having timely intelligence of this order, fled into Ireland with his wife and children, where now his wife Mawd, with her fon, were unfortunately taken by King John, but he himself escaped, and fled into France, where not long after he died.

This year the Earl of Chester rebuilt the castle of Dyganwy, situate on the sea-shore, east of the river Conway, which Prince Lhewelyn had before demolished. He likewise fortisies the castle of Tressynon or St. Wenefrid. Upon this Lhewelyn enters into the Earl's land, which when he had ravaged sufficiently, he returns home with considerable booty. About this time, Rhys Fychan son to Prince Rhys, fearing lest Prince Lhewelyn should fall upon him for the wrong he had done to his nephews, whom he, Prince Lhewelyn, stiffly defended in their right; made his application to the king of England, who readily granted him what succours he desired; and with these he besieged the castle of Lhanymdhyfri; the garrison for some time made a vigorous desence, but having no hopes of any relief, they thought it their wifeft course to capitulate, and so they defired they might march out with their arms, bag and baggage, and all that belonged to them, which was granted them. About this time likewise Gwenwynwyn was set at liberty, whom the king had hitherto detained prisoner, and withal lends him some forces to attempt the recovery of his country which Prince Lhewelyn had feized upon during his imprisonment; and though by his own ftrength he was not able to cope with the Prince, yet by this affiftance granted him by the king, he foon re-possessed himself of his dominions. This fuccess of Gwenwynwyn encouraged Maelgon likewise to endeavour the recovery of that part of his country which the Prince had taken from him in the fame expedition. Now he makes his application to the king of England, and fwears allegiance to him. Hereupon the king grants him a confiderable army as well English as Normans; to these he joins what forces he could raise in Wales, and then contrary to the oath and agreement he had made with his nephews Rhys and Owen, he in an hostile manner enters their country; when he was come to Cantred Penwedic, he encamped at Cilcenny where he staid some time to take measures for the better accomplishment of his defigns; by this time his nephews had got together about 300 chosen well disciplined men, but with fo small a number durst not oppose their uncle's numerous army in open field; therefore they were to endeavour to overthrow those by a stratagem which they could not do by main force. Herein they proved very fuccessful, for coming as near their enemies as they could without being discovered, they fent out their spies that night for intelligence, who brought back the good news, that all was quiet in Maelgon's camp, and that they kept no strict watch, being not aware of an approaching enemy. This intelligence mightily encouraged the brothers to profecute their defigns, and now they march as filently as they can towards their enemies camp, where they met with no opposition, being not discovered because all were fast afleep.

afleep. When they were advanced as they thought as far as Maelgon's tent, they furiously fell on, and flew a great number of his men before they awaked: the rest being frightened with the noise and shouts of their enemies, and withal thinking their numbers to be far greater than it was, were glad to make use of the darkness of the night to quit the field, only Maelgon's guard valiantly kept their post, and defended their lord till he had time and opportunity to escape. But Maelgon's army fuffered very much in this action, his nephew Conan ap Howel with his chief counfellor Gruffydh ap Cadwgan were both taken prifoners, and Eineon ap Caradoc with a great number more were flain upon the fpot. About the fame time Gilbert Earl of Glocester fortified the castle of Buelht, where a little before he had loft a confiderable number of his men, by reason that the place was not very strong and tenable. And towards the conclusion of this year, Mallt or Mayd de Bruce, the wife of Gruffydh ap Rhys departed this life, and was interred by her hufband in a monk's coul in Ystratflur.

But the following year a great storm threatened North Wales, by reason that the Marchers made frequent and grievous complaints to King John how that Prince Lhewelyn perpetually molested their country, flew their men, and committed all the waste and destruction possible as he passed along. The king hearing of fuch intolerable depredations continually exercised by the North Wales men, thought it high time to redress his subjects, and therefore he raised a mighty army throughout all England, and called to him all the lords and princes of Wales as held their lands and patents from him, as Howel ap Gruffydh ap Conan ap Owen Gwynedh, whom Prince Lhewelyn had banished out of North Wales: Madoc ap Gruffydh Maylor lord of Bromfield, Chirke and Yale, Meredith ap Rotpert Lord of Cydewen, Gwenwynwyn Lord of Powis, Maelgon and Rhys the fons of Prince Rhys and governors of South Wales. With this formidable army he came to Chefter, intending to enter into North Wales by that way, and being fully refolved to execute the feverest vengeance upon the inhabitants, and not to let one living foul remain alive throughout the whole country. But matters of this nature are easier resolved upon, than accomplished; Prince Lhewelyn was no fooner informed of these mighty preparations against him, comprehending the whole strength of the English nation, and what was worst of all, being affished by his own countrymen, but he iffued forth his orders, commanding all his fubjects of the inland counties of Denbigh and Flint, together with them of the island of Anglesey, to remove for a time all their cattle and other effects to Snowden-hills, where they were fure to remain fecurest from their enemies. But King John marched his army along the fea-coast to Ruthlan, and there passing the river Clwyd, he came to the castle of Teganwy, where he encamped for some time to refresh and recreate his army, which by reason of the long marches they made, was in a great measure weary and fatigued. But what the more augmented their mifery, Lhewelvn getting behind them, cut off all their hopes of provision from England, and the Welch by the advantage of being acquainted with the straits and narrow passages, cut off all that straggled from the English camp, so that in time, they were glad to take up with horfe-flesh, and any thing were it never so mean, which might fill up their greedy and empty flomachs. At last King John finding no other remedy, and perceiving it impossible to continue longer there so hungry and faintly, thought it his wifest way to march for England, and leave the Welch to themselves, and fo he decamped in a great fury, leaving Lhewelyn to bury that great number of dead, which had ftarved in this fuccefsless expedition. But to recover the honour he had now loft, he was refolved to try another touch with the Welch, but possibly not with the same confidence and affurance of victory. And therefore returning to Wales in the next August, he entered with fuch another terrible army of English, and was affifted fifted by the same Welch lords, at Blanch monastery, now Ofwestry, being in the lordship of John the son of William Fitzalan. In this expedition, King John paffing the river Conwey, and encamping at the other fide towards Snowden hills, fent part of his army conducted by guides who were acquainted with the country, to burn Bangor, which they effectually did; and taking Rotpert bishop of that see out of church, they carried him prisoner to the English camp, where he continued for some time, till he obtained his ranfom for a present of two hundred hawks. But Prince Lhewelyn finding the whole strength of England and almost Wales to fight against him, and judging it impossible for himself alone, to withstand so great a inultitude, thought it his best way to endeavour to find out some method or other, to reconcile himself to the king. And no better measures could possibly be thought of, than to fend Joan his wife, King John's daughter, to intreat with her father about a peace, and a ceffation of all hostilities; who being a prudent, Ry woman, fo prevailed upon the king, that he granted Prince Lhewelyn her hufband, a fafe conduct to come to him, and to renew the former peace and amity that was betwixt them. And fo Lhewelyn having done homage, promifed the king towards his expences in this expadition, 20,000 head of cattle and 40 horses, and what was more than all, he granted all the inland countries of Wales, with the appurtenances, to him and his heirs for ever. And then King John having received better fuccess in this, than the former expedition, returned to England in great triumph, having subdued all Wales, excepting that part which Rhys and Owen the fons of Gruffydh ap Rhys, still kept and maintained against the English. But having no leifure to march against them himself at his departure out of the country, he gave strict charge to Foulke Viscount of Caerdyff, warden of the marches, a cruel tyrant, though well beloved and favoured by the king, to take an army with him, and fo joining with Maelgon and Rhys Fychan, to compel the fons of Gruffydh ap Rhys to acknowledge him for their fovereign, and to do him homage. Foulke having received so positive a command, presently raised his forces, and calling Maelgon and Rhys, came to the Cantref of Penwedic; which when the young lords Rhys and Owen heard of, and being affured that this blow was levelled against them, which they knew they were not able to bear, before the stroke was struck, they fent to Foulke to fue for peace, and a safe conduct for them to pass to the court of England. This being granted, they came to London, and making their fubmission to the king, and requesting his pardon for all former misdemeanors, they gave up all pretence to their lands betwixt Aeron and Dyfi; and fo paying their homage, they were difmiffed very graciously. But Foulke before his departure out of the country, fortified the castle of Aberystwyth, and placing a ftrong garrison therein, kept it for the king's use. But Maelgon and Rhys Fychan, a couple of headftrong, inconstant people, quickly repented them of the peace they had made with the king of England, and thereupon, without the least reason or provocation, they laid fiege to Aberystwyth castle, and with much ado having made themselves masters of it, they destroyed those fortifications, which Foulke had lately erected, and defaced the castle to the ground. But they paid fauce for this another way, for as foon as Rhys and Owen had heard that their uncles had broken and violated the king's peace, they made inroads into Isaeron, which was Maelgon's country, and having flain a confiderable number of his men. among whom was one brave and lufty youth called Bachglas, they returned with very rich booty.

Bachglas, they returned with very rich booty.

Maelgon and Rhys Fychan were quickly followed by the North Wales men in their revolt from the king of England, for Prince Lhewelyn being not able to endure any longer the tyranny and oppression which the king's garrisons exercised in his country; called together Gwenwynwyn from Powis, Maelgon ap Rhys from South Wales, Madoc ap Gruffydh Maylor from Bromfield, and Meredith ap Rotpert from Cydewen, and plainly declared before them the pride and infolency of the English, and how that they who were always used to have a prince of their own nation, were now by their own wilfulness and neglect become subject to strangers. However, it was not too late to recover their antient liberty, and if they did but unanimously agree among themselves, they might easily cast off that yoke which was fo intolerably burdenfome to them. Then the lords being fensible of the truth and reasonableness of what Prince Lhewelyn delivered, and being confcious to themselves that their present slavery and fubjection to the English, was wholly owing to their own fear and cowardice, swore fealty to Prince Lhewelyn, and fwore to be true and faithful to him. and to stick by each other to the utmost of their lives and fortunes. And fo joining their forces together, they took all the castles in North Wales which were in the hands of the English, excepting Ruthlan and Dyganwy; and then going to Powis, they laid fiege to the castle which Robert Uspont had built at Mathrafal. But King John being informed how the Welch had conspired against him, and that they had taken and feized upon almost all his castles in North Wales, and how that they were now in actual beliegement of Mathrafal, presently drew up his army, and coming to Mathrafal, quickly raifed the fiege, and to prevent the Welch from coming any more against it, he burnt it to the ground and fo returned to England, having no time to flay any longer in Wales, by reason of the differences that happened betwixt him and his nobility. But being afterwards at Nottingham, and hearing how that Prince Lhewelyn cruelly harraffed and destroyed the marches, he caused all the Welch pledges which he had received the last year to be hanged, among whom were Howel the fon of Cadwalhon, and Madoc the fon of Maelgon, with many others of the nobility's fons; to the number of twenty-eight. And about the fame time Robert Vepont caused Rhys the son of Maelgon to be hanged at Shrewsbury, being a youth of about seventeen years of

of age, and fo cruelly murdered the innocent child to revenge the crimes and offences committed by his fa-

and favourable to him, for whilft he staid at Nottingham, the fent him an express, declaring how that the barons had entered into a conspiracy with the French king against him, and that the latter was preparing and raising an army to come over to England, upon pretence that the king was a rebel, and bid open defiance to the Holy Church, in as much as he would not condescend nor yield to the Bishop of Rome's request. And in confirmation of all this, she told him that Robert Fitzwalter, Eustace de Vescy and Stephen Redell, were fecretly fled into France, to promote and carry on this intrigue. And that this defign against King John was no feigned surmise, the next A.D. 1212. year Pope Innocent the Third detached one of his nuncios to Wales, who absolved Prince Lhewelyn, Gwenwynwyn and Maelgon from their oaths of allegiance to King John, and withal gave them a strict command under the penalty of excommunication, to molest and annoy him with all their endeavours, as an open enemy to the church of God. Prince Lhewelyn, you may be fure, was not in the least troubled at this, for now he gained the fittest opportunity imaginable, to restore such lands as he had formerly much against his mind delivered up to the king, being in the inland country of Denbigh and Flint, which Lhewelyn at this time repossessed himself of. And well it was he midably roared against him.

South Wales had now been quiet for a considerable time, and they that used to be commonly very turbulent and contentious, were now pretty easy and was so quick, for within a little while after, King John by the persuasions of Pandulph the Pope's legate, granted his Holiness all his request, and so obtained absolution at Pandulph's hands, and upon performance of his promises, an affurance of a releasement from that Ecclesiastical Bull, which had so foramicable. But it was impossible that such a peaceable course of life should hold long, where injustice and oppression had so much liberty, and where people were wrongfully kept out of their just and rightful inheritance. And this was the occasion of the breach of that quietness, which for the two or three years last past they had fo fatisfactorily enjoyed. For Rhys the fon of Gruffydh ap Rhys, who was right heir to Prince Rhys, finding he could have no share of his father's estate, but that his uncles forcibly kept all from him, thought it his best way to make his case known to the king of England, and to defire a remedy and redrefs from him. King John in compassion of the young man's hard condition, fent to his deputy Foulke Vifcount of Caerdyff warden of the marches, and to the Steward of Hereford, commanding them to take away all Ystratywy from Rhys Fychan, by some called Rhys Gryg, unless he would permit his nephews to enjoy Lhanymchyfry caftle, with all the lands and priviledges thereunto belonging. Foulke having received fuch orders from his mafter the king of England, fent to acquaint Rhys of the proposals, and so demand of him whether or no he would deliver up Lhanymdhyfry to his nephews, according to the king's command; who returned answer, that he did not know of any fuch obligation due from him to the king of England as to part with his lands at his command, and therefore assured him peremptorily and in plain terms, that he would not willingly part with one foot of what he was in present possession of. Foulke therefore having received this resolute answer, was likewise as refolute to get that by force which he could not obtain by fair means; and so having raised a great army, he marched to Talhwynelgain to meet with young Rhys, who was to come thither with all the forces he could raife in Brecknock; and from thence they marched in three battles towards Dynefawr, the first being commanded by young Rhys, the fecond by Foulke and Owen brother to Rhys led the third, Rhys Fychan was not in the least dismayed at their number, but thinking thinking it more adviseable to meet them in the field. rather than fuffer them to block him up at Dynefawr. came out very boldly, and gave them battle, but after a warm engagement on both fides, Rhys Fychan in the end got the worfe, and after a loss of a great number of his men, he was glad at last to make his escape by flight. And so retiring to Dynefawr, he doubled the garrison of that place, but thinking the town of Lhandeilo-fawr not to be tenable, he burnt it to the ground, and then kept himself private in the woods and other defart places. But young Rhys and Foulke laid fiege to Dynefawr, and in the first affault came on so fiercely, that they forced the garrison to retire to the castle, which for some time they defended very manfully. But the befiegers began to play fo violently with their battering engines, and to undermine the wall in fuch a manner, that the governor after a short defence began to capitulate, giving three pledges for fecurity, that if they received no relief by the morrow at noon, the caftle should be furrendered up, conditionally that the garrison should march out with all the tokens of honour, and carry their arms and all other implements of war along with them. No relief being arrived, the castle the next day was accordingly furrendered, and all the articles of the capitulation observed; and so young Rhys being posfeffed of Dynefawr, in a little time afterward, brought all Cantreffawr to his subjection. When Rhys Fychan was fensible how the stream run violently against him, he thought it his wifest way to remove his wife and children, and all his other effects, to his brother Maelgon's country, and fo leaving Lhanymdhyfry caftle well manned and fortified, he departed towards Aberystwyth. But as soon as Foulke was returned to the marches, young Rhys came with an army confifting of Welch and Normans before Lhanymdhyfry, intending to beliege that place, but before they were encamped before the town, the governor thought it his best way to surrender, upon condition only, that the garrifon should depart away with their lives. And shortly afterwards, Rhys Fychan was taken at Caermardhyn, and committed to the king's prison, and so all the diffurbances and troubles of South Wales came to a peaceable issue. But it was not so in North Wales, for Prince Lhewelyn being defirous to rid his country from the insupportable tyranny and oppression of the English garrisons, laid siege to the castles of Dyganwy and Ruthlan, the only places now remaining in the hands of the English, which he took without any great opposition, and so freed his country from any title or pretence the king of England might claim in North Wales. King John indeed was engaged another way, and confequently in no good condition to help himself, for having repented of all the indignities and stubbornness he expressed against Pope Innocent; at this time he received penance at the hands of the Archbishop of Canterbury, to atone for all the severities he had practifed against the church. And to restore himself the more to his Holines's favour he made the kingdom of England tributary to the church of Rome, to be holden of the Pope, in paying him the fum of 1000 marks yearly for ever; and withal recalled and restored to their former preferments and places all fuch as had been banished, or had voluntarily fled the kingdom upon the account of their strict adherence and submission to the Pope of Rome.

Nor was this all, for the next year King John with A. D. 1215, two of his nobility, the Earls of Chefter and Derby, was refolved upon a voyage to the Holy Land, but was unfortunately prevented of his journey, by the rebellion of his barons, which now broke forth violently by reason that the king would not grant them some antient laws and privileges, such as their fore-stathers always enjoyed. Therefore the barons entered into a confederacy with Prince Lhewelyn of North Wales, desiring him to make what diversion he could on his part, which they were resolved to do on theirs; and so having raised an army, they appointed Robert Fitzwalter their general. Coming to Bedford

Bedford, they were honourably received into the caftle by William Beauchamp, and from thence marching to London, they were entertained with all the expressions and tokens of joy. King John perceiving how powerful they were like to prove, and how that the country did in a great measure favour their cause, thought it his wifest way to nip them in the bud, and to fall upon them before they grew too ftrong: and therefore having levied his forces, he marched together with William Marshal Earl of Pembroke, towards the castle of Rochester. Being arrived there, he laid close siege to the castle, but the governor William de Abbineto fo bravely defended it, that it could hardly be taken after three months fiege, but at length the king's men bore on fo violently, that they took it by ftorm, where besides William de Abbineto, the king took feveral of the barons prisoners. This was an ill beginning to the defign of the confederates, and what did not add a little to their misfortune, the Pope prefently iffues out his Bull of Excommunication against Lhewelyn Prince of Wales, and all the English barons as made war against King John, who was under the protection of the Church of Rome. But Prince Lhewelyn did not regard his threatening anathemas, and therefore having raifed an army, he came to Shrewsbury, which was delivered up to him without any refiftance. And whilft Lhewelyn remained there, Giles de Bruce bishop of Hereford, one of the chief of this conspiracy, sent his brother Reynold to Brecknock, whom all the people readily owned for their lord; and fo without the least grumbling or opposition he received the castles of Abergefenny and Pencelhy, the Castelh Gwyn, or the White Castle, together with Grosmont castle and the island of Cynuric. But when the bishop came thither in person, he had the castles of Aberhondhy, Hay, Buelht, and Blaenlhyfny, delivered up to him; but thinking he had enough himfelf, and being rather defirous to fecure his interest, and to strengthen his party in the country, then to heap more upon his own shoulders than he was well able to support, he bestowed bestowed Payn castle, Clune and all Eluci upon Walter Fychan, the fon of Eineon Clyd.

In the mean time, young Rhys the fon of Gruffydh ap Rhys, and his uncle Maelgon were reconciled and made friends, and so coming both to Dyfed, they destroyed Arberth and Maenclochoc castles, and recovered all fuch lands as formerly belonged to them. excepting Cemais. But Rhys's brothers Maelgon and Owen went to North Wales, and did homage and fealty to Prince Lhewelyn, whilst their brother Prince Rhys marched forward to Cydwely, and having rafed the caftles of Carnwylheon and Lhychwr, brought all the country about under his subjection. But this was not enough to fatisfy the ambitious humour of that young prince, for having once tasted the pleafure of victory, and the taking and demolishing of towns, he was refolved to profecute his conquest whilft Fortune feemed to favour his undertakings; and therefore he led his army against Talybont castle, which belonged to Hugh de Miles, and forcing his entrance into the fame, he put a great number of the garrison to the sword. The next day he marched to Sengennyth caftle, but the garrison which kept it, thinking it fruitless and to no purpose to oppose him, burnt the place and departed to Ystymihwynarth. But he followed them at the heels, and the next day took it, and rased it to the ground, and over-ran the country in fuch a violent manner, that in three days time, he became mafter of all the caftles and fortreffes in all Gowerland and Morgannwc, and fo returned home with great victory and triumph. At the fame time Rhys Fychan, otherwise Rhys Gryg, young Prince Rhys's uncle obtained his liberty from the king of England, leaving his fon with two more for pledges for his modest and peaceable behaviour towards his fubjects, whom at other times he was wont to moleft and oppress. About this time the abbots of Tal y Llecheu and Tuy Gwyn, were confecrated bishops, the former of St. David's, and the other of Bangor. But the bishop of Hereford who feemed to be the most violently inclined against against King John, and was otherwise unwilling to part with what he had got in Wales, could not for all that refuse the injunction of the Pope, by whose express command he was constrained to make peace with the king, which being concluded, in his return homeward, he died at Glocester, leaving his estate to his brother Reginald, who had married the daughter of Prince Lhewelyn.

But for all that, Giles de Bruce bishop of Hereford was fallen off, and reconciled to King John, yet Prince Lhewelyn did not think it convenient to follow his example, and therefore with his whole army he marched against Carmardhyn, and took the castle in five days, having rafed it to the ground, he fucceffively laid fiege to the castles of Lhanstephan, St. Cleare, and Talacharn, which he used after the same manner. From thence he went to Cardigan, and winning Emlyn castle, he subdued Cemaes, and then laying flege to Trefdaeth caftle, in English called Newport, he quickly took it, and afterwards rased it to the ground. His next design was upon Aberteifi and Cilgerran castles, but the garrisons which defended them, finding it to no purpose to wait his coming, and fo to withstand all his attempts against those places voluntarily furrendered, and by that means prevented all the mischief, which in opposing him, would in all probability unavoidably attend them. And fo Prince Lhewelyn having fuccessfully over-run and fubdued all Carmardhyn and Cardigan, triumphantly returned to North Wales, being attended by several of the Welch nobility, fuch as Howel ap Gruffydh ap Conan, Lhewelyn ap Meredith, Gwenwynwyn Lord of Powis, Meredith ap Rotpert, Maelgon and Rhys Fychan the fons of Prince Rhys of South Wales, Rhys and Owen the fons of Gruffydh ap Rhys, together with all the power of Madoc ap Gruffydh Maylor Lord of Bromfield.

A.D.1216. But the next year Prince Lhewelyn returned to Aberteisi to compose a difference, which since his departure, had happened betwixt Maelgon and Rhys Fychan, Prince Rhys's sons on the one side, and Rhys and Owen, Gruffydh ap Rhys's sons on the other.

There-

Therefore to make up this quarrel, and to reduce all matters to a quiet and amicable iffue, Prince Lhewelvn made an equal distribution of South Wales betwixt them, alloting to Maelgon, three Cantrefs in Dyfed, viz. Gwarthaf, Penlhwynoc, Cemaes, and Emlyn with Cilgerran castle; to young Rhys, two caftles in Ystratywy, Hiruryn and Maelhaen, Maenor Bydfey, with the castle of Lhanymdhyfry, and two in Cardigan Gwynionyth and Mahwyneon. His brother Owen had to his share the castles of Aberteisi and Nant yr Arian, with three Cantrefs in Cardigan; and Rhys Fychan, otherwise called Rhys Gryc, had Dynefawr castle, the Cantres Mawr, the Cantres Bychan, excepting Hiruryn and Midhfey, together with the Comotes of Cydwely and Carnwylhion. This divifion being accomplished to every one's satisfaction, and all the lords of South Wales being amicably reconciled, Prince Lhewelyn took his journey for North Wales; but he had not advanced very far, when news was brought him that Gwenwynwyn lord of Powis was revolted, and was become again the king of England's fubject. This unwelcome news struck very deep in the prince's mind, by reason that Gwenwynwyn was a man of great power and strength in the country, and went a great way to repel the incursions of the English upon the marches, which now he being gone off, could not, he feared, be so well effected. But however, to make the best of a bad market, he endeavoured to take him off from the English, and to restore him to his former allegiance due to himself as his natural prince; and to that end, he fent to him fome bishops and abbots to put him in mind of his oath and promife, how that he with the rest of the lords of Wales, had obliged himself to oppose the English to the utmost of his power, and had delivered pledges for the fure performance of what he had then by oath engaged in; and left he should have forgot what he had then promised, he was desired to read his own hand writing, whereby it was apparent that he had very unjustly violated both his oath and promise. But all the rhetorick the bishops could make use of, was not R of force enough to work Gwenwynwyn to a reconciliation with the Prince, and an aversion to the king of England; and therefore seeing nothing would do, Prince Lhewelyn was resolved to make him incapable of serving the English, and so entering Powis with a strong army, he subdued the whole country to himself, Gwenwynwyn being forced to sly for succour to the Earl of Chester.

Whilft these things passed in Wales, Lewis the Dauphin of France being invited by the English barons against King John, landed in the island of Thanet, and marching forward to London, he there received homage of all the barons, that were in actual war against the king. And then setting forward to Winchester, where King John then lay, he took in his way the castles of Rygat, Guildford and Farnham, and coming to Winchester, had the town prefently furrendered to him. King John did not think fit to abide his coming, but removing to Hereford, in the marches of Wales, he fent to Prince Lhewelvn and Reynald Bruce, desiring their friendship, and imploring their aid and affiftance against the French. But they refusing to hearken to his proposals, he destroyed Radnor and Hay castles, and marching forward to Ofwestry, which belonged to John Fitzalan, he burnt it to the ground, and then departed towards the North. But after that he had settled his affairs there. and appointed governors in all the towns and places of strength; whilft he was making all necessary preparations at Newark to confront the barons, he fell fick, and in a short time died, and was buried at Worcester.

After his death his fon Henry was by several of the English nobility proclaimed king, and in a little while, most of the barons, who upon their hatred to King John, had maintained an open war against him, came in, and owned their allegiance to his son Henry, though contrary to their oath to Lewis the Dauphin.

A.P. 1217. But what was most pernicious to the Welch, Reynald de Bruce who had all this while maintained a confe-

King

King John, underhand made his peace with King Henry. But he suffered severely for his treachery; for young Rhys, and Owen his nephew by his fifter, feeing that he in whom they put their greatest confidence, had deceitfully forfaken them, came upon him with all their power, and took from him all Buelht, excepting only the castle. Prince Lhewelvn was presently made acquainted with Bruce's revolt. but as foon as he was informed that his fon-in-law was gone over to the king of England, he went in great fury to Brecknoc, and laying siege to the town of Aberhondhy, he was with much ado prevailed upon by young Rhys to raise the siege for the sum of a hundred marks; and then croffing the mountainous part of Glamorgan, called the Black Mountains, where his carriages fuffered very much, he came to Gwyr, and encamping at Lhangruc, Reynald Bruce with fix knights in his company, came to meet him, desiring his pardon for his past offence, assuring him that for the future, he would be true and faithful to him, and would do his endeayour to affift him against the King of England. Prince Lhewelyn was too good natured to reject his fubmission, and so did not only receive him to his favour, but bestowed upon him alfo the castle of Senghennyth, which Reynald committed to the custody of Rhys Fychan.

Prince Lhewelyn having fettled all things in good order in Gwyr, marched to Dyfed and being at Cefn Cynwarchon, the Flemings fent their agents to him to desire peace, which the Prince, by reason that they always adhered to the English interest, would not grant them. And fo young Rhys, being the first man, passed the river Cledeu to storm the town, Iorwerth bishop of St. David's, with the rest of his clergy came to the prince to intreat for a peace for the Flemings, which after a long debate, was granted, and concluded upon these terms; first, That all the inhabitants of Rhos, and the country of Pembroke should from thence forward swear allegiance to Prince Lhewelyn, and ever after acknowledge his fovereignty; fecondly, That towards the defraying of his R 2 charges in this expedition, they should pay one thoufand marks to be delivered to him before the ensuing feast of St. Michael; thirdly, That for the sure performance of these articles they should deliver up twenty hostages, who were to be some of the most principal persons in their country. Then Prince Lhewelyn having now brought all Wales subject to himfelf, and put matters in a settled posture in South Wales, returned to North Wales, having purchased very considerable honour and esteem for his martial

And now all matters of differences being adjusted, and the Welch in good hopes of a durable freedom from all troubles and hostilities; another accident unhappily fell out to cross their expectation. Lewis the Dauphin perceiving the English barons to slight and forfake him, concluded a peace with King Henry, and returned to France; and then the barons, the king promising to answer all their requests, and to redress their grievances, made their submission, without including the Welch in their articles. They had all this while gladly embraced the friendship and aid of the Prince of Wales; but now upon their reconciliation to the king, thinking they had no farther need of him, they very basely forsook him, who had been the principal support and succour of their cause. And not only fo, but they conspired together to convert their arms against Wales, thinking they could without any breach of equity or conscience, take away the lands of the Welch, to make addition to what some of them had already unjustly possessed themselves of. William Marshal Earl of Pembroke opened the scene, and coming unexpectedly upon the Welch, took the town of Caerlheon. But he got nothing by this, for Rhys Fychan perceiving what he would fain be at, rafed Senghennyth castle, and all the rest in his custody in that country, and banishing the English with their wives and children, divided the country betwixt the A. D. 1218. Welch, who kept fure possession of it. Prince Lhewelyn also finding those to become his foes, who had

but lately courted his friendship, and fearing lest that the English being now in arms should make any attempt upon his castles, augmented the garrisons of Carmardhyn and Aberteifi, to make them capable of withftanding the English, in case they should come against them. But though the Welch and English were at open variance and in actual hostility one against another, yet young Rhys with Prince Lhewelyn's approbation and confent, thought it adviseable to go and do homage to the king of England, for his lands in Wales. This might be thought a matter of supererogation, to make courtship to one who was declared enemy to all the Welch, and one that would not in all probability, fuffer him to enjoy a quiet possession of his estate, in case he had ability and opportunity to eject him. But the Welch inte-A, D, 1219. rest was in a great measure augmented by a new alliance with some of the most powerful among the English; Rhys Gryc, Prince Rhys's son, being married to the Earl of Clare's daughter; and Marret,

Prince Lhewelyn's daughter, to John Bruce,

The Prince of Wales had quickly an occasion to 1220. experience his power, for the Flemings in Dyfed, who had lately fworn allegiance to him, began now to repent of what they had but a little time ago gladly fubmitted to, and contrary to their oaths, and the league they had fworn to observe, they fell upon Aberteifi castle, which they took. Prince Lhewelyn being highly displeased with the treacherous practices of these perjured Flemings, marched with all fpeed to Aberteifi, and having recovered the castle, which he afterwards rased, he put all the garrison to the fword. Gwys was ferved in the fame manner, and the town of Haverford was burnt to the ground, and overrunning Rhos and Daugledhau, he committed a lamentable destruction throughout the whole country. This the Flemings received as the due reward of their finistrous dealing, which made them quickly apprehensive of their folly, and their imprudeut behaviour towards the Prince of Wales; and therefore being forrowfully sensible how unable they were to put a stop to his farther progress by force of arms, they made overtures for cessation of all hostilities till the May following, which being granted them upon strict conditions, Prince Lhewelyn returned to North Wales. In the mean time some Welch lords besieged Buelht castle, which was in the possession of Reynald Bruce, but before they could take it, King Henry brought an army to the marches and raised the sleep, and then marching forward to Montgomery, built a new castle in that town built a new castle in that town. A.D. 1221. The next year an unhappy diffention fell out betwixt Prince Lhewelyn and his fon Gruffydh this latter having kept himself in possession of the Cantref of Merionyth, contrary to the confent and well-liking of his father. The Prince therefore having now no great matter of moment abroad, was refolved to curb the insolency of his son, and therefore sent to him to command his appearance, and to wish him to deliver up the Cantref quietly, left he should be forced to take it violently out of his hands. Gruffydh was not in the least dismayed at his threatenings, but being refolved to keep what at present he enjoyed, would neither go to his father, nor deliver up the Cantref to him. The Prince being enraged that he should be so slighted by his son, made a vehement protestation, that he would be feverely revenged both of him and all his accomplices; and therefore coming to Merionyth with a great army, was refolved to drive his fon out of the country. But Gruffydh made all possible preparations to oppose his father, and drew up his forces to give him battle, but when both armies were ready to join, the differences be-twixt them was happily composed, and Gruffydh prevailed upon to make his fubmission to his father. But the Prince, though he forgave his fon his offence, and received him to favour, would not however, permit him to enjoy Merionyth and Ardydwy; but taking them away from him, and building a castle in the latter, returned home. But he had not contirued long at his palace at Aberffraw, when another occasion called him abroad; for young Rhys being disappointed of Aberteisi, which in the division of South Wales was allotted to his share, for fook the prince, and put himself under the protection of William Marshal Earl of Pembroke. Prince Lhewelyn hearing this, marched in great hafte to Aberystwyth, and being defirous to punish Rhys for his defertion from his allegiance due to him, feized to his own use that castle, together with all the domain and lands belonging to it. When Rhys understood what the prince had done, he presently made his complaint to the king of England, who coming to Shrewfbury, and fending for Prince Lhewelyn, adjusted matters so betwixt them, that the Prince promifed to treat with Rhys for Aberteifi, after the fame manner as he had done with Maelgon for Caermardhyn. And towards the close of the year, John Bruce, Prince Lhewelyn's sonin-law, obtained leave to fortify Senghennyth castle, which in right to the prince's grant to Reynald Bruce, belonged to him. But young Rhys did not long furvive the agreement betwixt him and Prince Lhewelyn; for he died the following year, and was buried at Ystratflur; after whose death, the prince divided his estate betwixt his brother Owen and his uncle Maelgon.

William Marshal Earl of Pembroke was now in A.D. 12224 Ireland, and very bufy in profecuting the war against the king of England's enemies in that kingdom; the opportunity of whose absence Prince Lhewelyn taking advantage of, won the castles of Aberteisi and Caermardhyn, belonging to the Earl; and putting both the garrifons to the fword, placed in their room a strong party of his own men. But when the Earl was informed of what the Prince of Wales had done, he presently left Ireland, and landed at St. David's with, a great army, and having recovered his castles, he treated the Welch after the same manner, as Prince Lhewelyn had used his garrisons, and passing forward into the prince's country, destroyed all before him as he went along. The Prince understanding how violently he came forward, fent his fon Gruffydh with a confiderable R4 confiderable body of men to check his fury; who coming to Cydwely, and receiving intelligence that the magistrates of that place, had a private defign to betray him to the enemy, he put the whole town in flames, and burnt it to the ground, without sparing either churches, or other religious houses. The Earl of Pembroke had passed the river Tywy at Caermardhyn, where Gruffydh met him, and gave him battle; but the victory proved to uncertain, that the night was forced to part them; and so the English retired over the river. Matthew Paris writes, that the Earl obtained a very fignal victory, and that of the Welch there were nine thousand slain and taken; though the Welch account, which in this case is in all likelihood the best, makes the whole army of the Welch to confift but of that number. But both armies having lain for certain days in that posture, and the river Tywy being betwixt them; Gruffydh, by reason that provision began to grow scarce in his camp, returned back; and then the Earl decamped, and marched to Cilgerran, where he began to build a very strong castle. But before he could have time to finish it, he received an express from the king, with orders to come to him; and so he went by sea to London, leaving his army at Cilgerran, to continue the work which he had begun. Shortly after, the king, together with the Archbishop of Canterbury, came to Ludlow, and fending for Prince Lhewelyn thither, they had good hopes to adjust all differences, and to make an amicable composition betwixt him and the Earl. But when this could not be effected, both parties sticking close to their private interest; the Earl being assisted by the Earl of Derby and Henry Pyggot Lord of Ewyas, defigned to pass by land to Pembroke; but his purpose being discovered to the prince, he detached his fon to fecure the passage of Carnwylhion, and came in person to Mahedryd; which when the Earl understood, finding it dangerous to profecute his defign any further, he returned to England; and then the prince marched to North Wales. The next action that passed in Wales, was somewhat rare, and A. D. 1227. not redounding much to the credit and esteem of the Welch; for Rhys Fychan, having by some sinistrous means or other, taken his father Rhys Gryc, contrary to all filial affection and duty, detained him prisoner, and would not set him at liberty, till he had delivered up Lhanymdhyfri castle to him. About the same time, Meredith Archdeacon of Cardigan, Prince Rhys's son, departed this life, and was honourably interred at St. David's, by his father.

But a while after, a great from threatened the 1228. Welch; King Henry having raifed a great army, was resolved to make a violent prosecution of the Earl of Pembroke's quarrel against the Prince of Wales, and if possible, to make all that country, for ever subject to the crown of England; and so being advanced into the marches, he encamped at Ceri. Prince Lhewelyn on the other hand, being informed of these mighty preparations in England, and understanding that they were intended against him, did use all the endeavours possible, to make a vigorous resistance; and having drawn together all the forces he was able to levy, thought it his wifest way to meet the English upon the marches, and not to permit the enemy to enter his country. Both armies being come in fight of each other, frequent skirmishes happened betwixt them; but one day, almost the whole armies engaged, and after a vigorous attack of both sides, the English at last got the worst, and were forced to retire, having a great number of men slain and taken prisoners. Among the latter, was William Bruce, Reynald's fon, who offered for his ranfom all Buelht, together with a considerable sum of money, which the prince would not accept of. But King Henry finding that his army was worsted in this rencounter, thought it best to make peace with the prince of Wales, which being concluded, Lhewelyn came to the king, and having paid him all other respects, besides that of submission and allegiance, he returned in great honour to North Wales. But this action is somewhat otherwife wife laid down by Matthew Paris, who writes, that this skirmish betwixt the English and Welch happened upon another account; for the garrison of Montgomery issuing out of the castle, to enlarge a certain passage leading through a wood, where the Welch were wont to rob and kill all paffengers; began to fell the timber, and cut down all the bushes which lessened the road, thereby to make the passage more clear and secure. The Welch receiving intelligence of this, came presently upon him in great numbers, and furprising the enemies, being busy at their labour, forced as many as could escape, to betake themselves for refuge into the castle, which afterwards, having first cast a deep trench about it, they smartly invested. Hubert de Burgh, Lord Chief Justice of England, and owner of the castle, having notice of this, fent prefently to King Henry, defiring his speedy help against the Welch, who thereupon came in perfon with part of his army, and raised the siege. Then, the rest of his forces being arrived, he marched into the wood, which was five miles in length, and by reafon of the thickness of the growth, impassable; and for an easy passage through it, caused it to be burnt down. After that, he led his army farther into the country, and coming to an abbey called Cridia, which the Welch were wont to take for refuge, he caused it to be burnt down; but finding it a very convenient place for a fortress, he granted leave to Hubert de Burgh to build a castle there. But whilst the work was going on, the Welchmen gauled the English, and skirmished with them frequently, so that many were slain on both sides; but at last William de Bruce with many others that went abroad to fetch provision, was intercepted by the Welch, and taken prisoner, and most of his company were slain, among whom, one who was knighted a few days before, feeing fome of his fellows in great danger, rushed boldly into the midst of his enemies, and after a manful defence, bravely lost his life. Several of King Henry's men were corrupted by Prince Lhewelyn, and upon that account took no great pains to repulse the enemy; which which when the king perceived, and finding withal that provision was grown very scarce in his camp, he was forced to conclude a dishonourable peace with the Welch, confenting to demolish that castle. which with fo great an expence both of men and money was now almost finished, upon his own charges, Prince Lhewelyn paying only three thou-fand pounds towards it. Then both armies feparated, Prince Lhewelyn marching to North Wales, and the king leaving William Bruce prisoner with the Welch, returned to England, having purchased no

William Bruce was brought to Wales, and therea. D. 1230. had an honourable confinement in the prince's palace; but he had not continued there very long, when he began to be suspected of being too familiar with the princess, King Henry's fifter; and as the report went, was taken in the very act of adultery; for which the prince caused him to be hanged forthwith. About the fame time, Lhewelyn, Maelgon's fon died in North Wales, and was buried at Conwey: and Maelgon, Prince Rhys's fon in South Wales, and was buried at Ystratflur; whose estate descended to his son Maelgon. And a little after, William Marshal Earl of Pembroke 1231. died, one that ever entertained an inveterate enmity to the Welch, and upon whose account King Henry had chiefly brought his army into Wales. He was fucceeded both in his title and estate by his brother Richard, who was much more favourably inclined towards the Welch, and never attempted any thing against them. But the king of England was resolved to retrieve the honour he had lost in the late expedition against the Welch; and therefore being returned from France, whither he had made a descent, to recover what his father had loft in that kingdom, he came to Wales; and having remained fome time in the marches, he returned again to England, leaving his army under the command of Hubert Burgh Earl of Kent, to defend the marches against any in-road which the Welch might attempt. And he had not remained there long when he received intelligence, that a party of Welch had entered the marches near Montgomery, whom he forthwith purfued, and fetting upon them surprisedly, he put a great number of them to the fword. Prince Lhewelyn hearing this, came in person with a great army to the marches, and fitting before Montgomery castle, he forced Hubert to withdraw, and then making himself master of the place, he burnt it to the ground, and put the garrison to the sword; the like fate attended the castles of Radnor, Aberhondhy, Rhavadr Gwy, Caerlheon, Neth, and Cydwely; though Caerlheon held out very stubbornly, and the prince had several of his men destroyed before the place. King Henry being informed of what miserable desolation the Prince of Wales so successfully committed upon his subjects in these countries, had him presently excommunicated; and then coming to Hereford with a mighty army, he detached the greatest part of it, with a great number of his nobility to Wales. These by the direction of a friar of Cymer, unexpectedly as they thought, fell upon a party of Welch; who at the first encounter seemed to fly, till they had allured the English to pursue them to a place where a greater party of Welch lay in ambuscade; who rushing of a sudden upon the English, put them in fuch a confusion, that the greatest part of them was cut off. The king being sensible, that this was a treacherous infinuation of the friar, was refolved to be revenged, by burning the abbey of Cymer; but the prior, for three hundred marks, prevented it; and fo the king returned to England, having effected nothing in this expedition, besides the building of Mawd caftle. In the mean time, Maelgon, fon of Maelgon ap Rhys, laid fiege to Aberteifi, and having by force got entry into the town, he put all the inhabitants to the fword, then destroyed all before him to the castle gates, which were so strongly fortified, that it seemed almost impracticable to take it in any short time. But Maelgon, being joined by his cousin Owen, Gruffydh ap Rhys's fon, was refolved to try the utmost that could be effected; and therefore taking with him fome of Prince Lhewelyn's most experienced officers, he broke down the bridge upon the river Teifi, and then investing the castle more closely, he so battered and undermined it, that he became in a little time master of it.

The year following, Prince Lhewelyn made a de-A.D. 1232. scent upon England, and having committed very confiderable waste and destruction upon the borders, he returned to North Wales with a rich booty both of men and cattle. King Henry, to correct the Welch for these grievous devastations, and to prevent their further incursions into England, demanded a very great fubfidy of his fubjects to carry on the war against the Welch; which being granted him, he made all possible preparations for his expedition to Wales. In the mean time, Randulph Earl of Chester died, and was fucceeded in that honour by John his fifter's fon, who was afterwards married to Prince Lhewelyn's daughter. But the English in Wales being in expectation of King Henry's coming thither, began to repair and fortify their castles; and particularly, Ri- 1233. chard Earl of Cornwal rebuilt Radnor castle, which the prince had lately destroyed. Prince Lhewelyn was fufficiently fensible, that the king of England intended an invalion, and therefore to be before hand with him, he came with an army to Brecknock, destroyed all the towns and castles throughout the country, excepting Brecknock castle, which held out so manfully, that after a month's fitting before it, he was at last constrained to raise the siege. In his return to North Wales, he burnt the town of Clun, recovered all that country called Dyffryn Tefeidiat, in the poffession of John Fitzalan, destroyed Red castle in Powis, and burnt Ofwestry. But what happened very fortunately to the Welch, Richard Marshal Earl of Pembroke being fallen at variance with King Henry, took part with Prince Lhewelyn; with whom joined Hubert de Burgh, who had lately made his escape out of the caftle of Devizes, where the king, upon some articles of information brought against him, had committed him to prison. But the Earl of Pembroke, attended by Owen ap Gruffydh ap Rhys, came to St. David's; and and being very glad of an opportunity to revenge himself upon the king, slew every one that owned any dependance upon the crown of England. Maelgon and Rhys Gryc, with all the forces of Prince Lhewelyn, quickly joined the Earl; who in their march through the country, took the castles of Cardyff, Abergevenny, Pencelhy, Blaenlhefyni, and Bwlch y Ddinas, which all, excepting Cardyff, they burnt to the ground. The king receiving intelligence, that the Earl of Pembroke had entered into a confederacy with the Prince of Wales, and that he was now in open hostility against his subjects in that country, gathered a very formidable army, confisting, besides English, of Flemings, Normans, and Gascoigns; and coming to Wales, he encamped at Grosmont, where the Earl, with the Welch army met him. But when the English would have endeavoured to advance further into the country, the Welch opposed them, and fo a battle enfued, wherein the English lost five hundred horse, besides a far greater number of their infantry. The Welch having gained a confiderable victory in this action, the king was advised to withdraw his forces, for fear left that the Welch should again fet upon them, and so sustain a greater loss, which counsel the king willingly hearkened unto, and fo he returned for England. The English being withdrawn, the Earl likewise decamped, and marched to Caermardhyn, which he besieged; but after three months vain affault, the garrison most bravely defending the place; and the English fleet, having thrown in new provisions, he thought it most adviseable to raife the fiege. Shortly after, Rhys Gryc, fon to Prince Rhys died at Lhandeilo Fawr, and was honourably interred by his father at St. David's. About the fame time, Maelgon Fychan, Maelgon ap Rhys's fon, finished Trefilean castle, which was begun in his father's time.

A.D. 1234. King Henry was not willing to hazard any more campaigns in Wales, and therefore he appointed John of Monmouth, a great foldier and general of the En glish forces, warden of the marches of Wales; who thinking to get to himself an eternal name in con-quering the Welch, raised all the power he could; and imagining that the Welch could not be privy to his purpose, he apprehended he could fall upon the Earl Marshal unexpected. But in this, he was to his forrow most widely mistaken; for the Earl having received private intimation of his defign, hid himself in a certain wood, by which the English were to march; and when they were come fo far, the Welch of a fudden gave a great shout, and leaping out of the place they had absconded themselves in, they fell upon the English, being unprovided; and putting their whole army to flight, they flew an infinite number both of the English and their auxiliaries. John of Monmouth himself made his escape by slight; but the Earl Marshal entering his country, destroyed it with fire and fword. And what added to the mifery of the English, Prince Lhewelyn in the week after Epiphany, joining the Earl Marshal, made an incursion into the king's territories, destroying all before them, from the confines of Wales to Shrewibury; a great part of which they laid in ashes. King Henry was all this while with the bishop of Winchester at Glocester, and for want of fufficient power or courage to confront the enemy, durst not take the field; of which being at length perfectly ashamed, he removed to Winchester, leaving the marches naked to the mercy of the enemy. And now, there being no apprehension of fear from the English, the Earl of Pembroke, by the counsel of Geoffrey de Marisco, transported his army into Ireland, thinking to obtain a conquest in that kingdom; but in the first encounter with the Irish, he was unfortunately flain through the treachery of his own men: and so his estate and title descended to his brother Gilbert.

But King Henry finding it impracticable to force the Welch to a submission, and being in a great meafure weary of continual wars and inceffant hostilities, thought it his best prudence to make some honourable agreement with the Prince of Wales; and therefore he deputed Edmund Archbishop of Canterbury, the bishops of Rochester, Coventry, Litchfield and Chester, to treat with Prince Lhewelyn about a peace. When the king came to meet with them in their return from this negociation, being at Woodstock, he was certified of the death of the Earl of Pembroke, which he took fo much to heart, that he prefently melted into tears, being afflicted for the death of fo great a person, whom he openly declared had not left his fecond in all his kingdom. Going from thence to Glocester, he met with the archbishop and bishops, * See the who delivered to him the * form of the treaty of peace with Prince Lhewelyn, which he would not conclude, unless upon this condition; That all the English nobility who were confederated with him, and by evil counsel were exiled, should be recalled, and restored to the king's favour. The Archbishop further acquainted his Majesty with what difficulty he had brought the matter to this conclusion, being fometimes forced to add threatenings on the king's behalf, with his clergy; to which menaces the prince is faid to have answered. That he bore more regard to the king's charity and piety, than he did fear his arms, or dread his clergy. But the king, who was very defirous of a peace, readily consented to what the prince required; and therefore he issued out his letters, recalling all the nobles who were outlawed, or otherwife exiled, requiring them to appear at Glocester, upon Sunday next before Ascension-day, where they should receive their pardons, and be restored to their estates, which the king had taken into his own hands.

The peace being thus concluded betwixt the English and Welch, Prince Lhewelyn set his son Gruffydh at liberty, whom for his disobedient and restless humour he had detained in close prison for the space of fix years. About the fame time, Cadwalhon ap Maelgon of Melienydh, departed this life, who was quickly followed by Owen, Gruffydh ap Rhys's fon, a person of great worth, and exceedingly beloved, and A.D. 1235, was buried at Ystratflur, by his brother Rhys. And the year following died Owen ap Meredith ap Rotpert of Cydewen; and not long after him, Madawe thea. D.1236. fon of Gruffydh Mayelor, Lord of Bromfield, Chirk, and Yale, who was buried at the abbey of Lhan Egwest, of Vale Grucis, which he had built; leaving iffue behind him one fon, called Gruffych, who fucceeded into the possession of all these lordships. A little after, Gilbert Earl of Pembroke, got by treachery Marchen castle, which belonged to Morgan ap Howel, and fortified the fame very strongly, for fear of Prince Lhewelyn. The next fpring Joan, King John's daugh- 1237. ter, and Princess of Wales, departed this life, and was buried, according to her own defire, upon the feashore, at a place called Lhanfaes; in the isle of Anglefey; where the Prince, in memory of her, afterwards founded a religious house, for the order of mendicant friars. About the same time also died John Scot, Earl of Chester, without any issue, upon which account the king feized that earldom into his own hands. Hugh Lupus was the first that enjoyed this honour, who coming over to England with the Conqueror, was by him created Earl of Chefter, and fword-bearer of England; Habendum & tenendum dic-. tum comitatum Cestriæ, sibi & bæredibus suis, ita libere ad gladium, ficut iffe rex totam tenebat Angliam ad coronam: To have and to hold the faid county of Chefter, to him and his heirs by right of the fword, fo freely and securely as the king held the realm of England in the right of the crown. After five descents, Randulph Bohun came to be Earl of Chester, who was uncle to this John, the last Earl. This Randulph had feveral encounters with Prince Lhewelyn, and was in continual agitation against him; but once more particularly, meeting with the Prince, and being fenfible of his inability to withftand him, he was obliged to retire for refuge to the castle of Ruthlan, which the prince prefently belieged. Randulph perceiving himfelf to be in danger, fent to Roger Lacy, constable of Chester, requesting him to raise what strength he could possible, and come to succour him in this extremity. Wherefore Lacy having received this express, called to him prefently all his friends, defiring them to make all S

all the endeavours imaginable to refcue the Earl from that imminent danger which fo feverely threatened him: at whose request, Ralph Dutton, his son-in-law, a valourous youth, assembled together all the players and musicians, and such as then, being fair-time, had met to make merry; and presenting them to the constable, he forthwith marched to Ruthlan, raised the siege, and delivered the Earl from all his fear. In recompense of this service, the Earl granted the constable several freedoms and privileges; and to Dutton the ruling and ordering all players and musicians within the said country, to be enjoyed by his heirs for ever.

A. D. 1238. In the year 1238, Prince Lhewelyn being discomposed in body, called unto him all the lords and barons of Wales to Ystratsfur, where each of them swore to remain true and faithful subjects, and did homage to David, Lhewelyn's fon, whom he had named to fucceed him. Matthew Paris writes, That Prince Lhewelvn being impotent by reason of a palsy, and fore difquieted by his fon Gruffydh, fent ambaffadors to the king of England, fignifying to him, that for as much as he could not expect to live long, by reason of his age, he was defirous to lead the remainder of his days in peace and tranquility: and therefore now purposed to submit himself to the government and protection of the king, and would hold his lands of him; promising withal, that whenever the king should stand in need of his help, he would ferve him both with men and money, to the utmost of his power. The bishops of Hereford and Chester were sent mediators in this behalf, though some of the nobility of Wales openly and peremptorily withstood it, and upon no condition whatfoever would accept of fuch a peace, But David being declared fuccessor to the principality, began to plague his brother Gruffydh, who though elder, was yet base-born; and took from him Arustly, Ceri, Cyfeilioc, Mowchwy, Mochnant, and Careneon; and let him only enjoy the Cantref of Lhyn. But a little afterwards he dispossessed him of all, and contrary to his oath to the bishop of Bangor, in whose protection Gruffydh then remained, took him prisoner;

having upon promise of no violence, obtained to speak with him, and fent him to Cricieth caftle. But whilft these A.D. 1240. two brothers continued to entertain an irreconcileable odium one to another, their father Prince Lhewelyn ap Iorwerth, to the great grief and diffatisfaction of all the Welch, departed this life, and was very honourably interred in the abbey of Conwey, after he had reigned fix and fifty years. He was a prince of great courage and audacity, and had no lefs prudence in contriving, than boldness in executing any martial adventure; he was a great support to the Welch, and no less a plague to the English; he made very considerable conquests upon the borders, and extended the frontiers of Wales, much beyond their former limits. He had iffue by his only wife Joan, daughter to King John of England, one fon called David, who afterwards fucceeded in the principality of Wales; and a daughter named Gladys, who was married to Sir Ralph Mortimer. He had also a base son, named Gruffydh, whom his brother David kept a close prisoner to his dying day.

DAVID AP LHEWELYN.

PRINCE Lhewelyn ap Iorwerth being deceased, his only legitimate son David, whom all the barons of Wales had, as is said, in his father's life-time sworn to obey, legally succeeded in the government; wherein being actually confirmed, he went to the king of England to Glocester, and there did him homage * for his principality. Then all the barons, both English and readix. Welch who held any lands in Wales in like manner did homage and fealty for the same. But the English could not long refrain from their wonted hostilites towards the Welch; and thereupon Gilbert Marshal, taking advantage of this revolution, before matters were thoroughly fettled, brought an army before the castle of Aberteis, which being delivered up to him, he fortified with a strong garrison. Prince David was as yet too weak to appear in the field; and indeed the more, by reason that several of his nobility and others; could not affectionately love him, for that unnatural folcen he shewed to his brother Gruffydh, whom, for no visible reason, he detained in close custody. But above the rest, Richard bishop of Bangor, stormed at the Prince, and finding that he violated his promise, in fetting his brother at liberty, whom under pretence of an amicable confultation he had fraudulently feized upon in the bishop's presence, without more ado excommunicated him; and then retiring to England, made a very querimonious relation of the whole matter to the king, defiring to release Gruffydh out of prison, before the rumour of so heinous a fact should reach the court of Rome, and so reflect upon his Majesty's reputation. King Henry thereupon sent to his nephew Prince David, blaming him highly for fuch a treacherous action, and dealing fo feverely with his brother; and then earnestly requested him to deliver Gruffydh out of custody, both to save himself from perpetual defamation, and to deferve an absolution from the fevere sentence pronounced against him. But David absolutely refused to comply to the king's defire, affuring him, that Wales could never enjoy a peaceable time, as long as his brother Gruffydh had his liberty.

Gruffydh being acquainted with his brother's refolution, and thinking that thereby he had unavoidably displeased the king of England, privately sent to King Henry, assuring him, that if by force he would deliver him out of prison, he would not only hold his lands for ever from him, but also pay him the yea ly acknowledgment of three hundred marks; offering both to give his corporal oath, and deliver up sufficient pledges for the performance of it; and withat to affish the king with all his power in bringing in the rest of the Welch to his subjection. Moreover, Gruffydh ap Madawc, Lord of Bromfield, politively affured the king, that in case he would lead an army into Wales, to revenge the falfity and injurious practices of David, he would give him all possible aid and affiftance. Indeed, King Henry, besides this solemin invitation, had no weak pretence to come to Wales; for Richard, bishop of Bangor, a fiery man, had profecuted the matter fo warmly at Rome, that he obtained of the Pope also to excommunicate David. which excommunication being denounced against him, his lands were pretendedly forfeited. But the king being chiefly allured with the promises of the Welch in the behalf of Gruffydh, levied a very formidable army to lead to Wales; strictly commanding by proclamation, all the English, who owed him any martial fervice, to repair armed to Glocester, by the beginning of Autumn. This rendezvous being accordingly performed, the king came thither in person at the time appointed, and having regulated his troops, and put all matters in convenient order, he marched to Shrewfbury, where he remained fifteen days to refresh his army. During his flay there feveral of the nobility became fuitors unto him on behalf of Gruffydh, whose condition they defired he would commiserate; among whom were, Ralph Lord Mortimer of Wigmore, Walter Clifford, Roger de Monte Alto, Steward of Chester, Maelgon ap Maelgon, Meredith ap Rotpert Lord of Cydewen, Gruffydh ap Madawc of Bromfield, Howel and Meredith the fons of Conan ap Owen Gwynedh, and Gruffydh ap Gwenwynwyn Lord of Powis. Thefe noblemen prevailed fo far with King Henry, that a league was concluded between him and Senena the wife of Gruffydh. For the performance of these ar- see Apticles, the aforesaid noblemen offered to be securities, rendix. and bound themselves by their several writings. as if all things had conspired together against Prince Da-pendix. vid, feveral persons that had been at continual variance and enmity among themselves to this time, were now, by reason that they equally favoured Gruffydh's cause, made friends among one another: Morgan ap Howel Lord of Cery, made his reconciliation to Sir Ralph Mortimer, and his fubmission to King Henry, in a see An-very folemn manner: in the fame form feveral others of the nobility, fubmitted to the king; as, Owen ap Howel, Maelgon ap Maelgon, Meredith ap Meredith, Howel ap Cadwalhon, and Cadwalhon ap Howel. David finding himself thus relinquished by the greatest part of his nobility, and particularly by Gruffydh an Madawc, Lord of Bromfield, whom he chiefly feared, by reason of his great wisdom and power, and that he was much esteemed by the king of England, could not eafily conclude how to carry himself in this perplexity of affairs. But in fine, confidering with himself what a puissant army King Henry brought against him, and how himself was considerably weakened by the defection of his subjects, he thought it most adviseable to truckle to the king; and therefore with all speed sent him his submission.

See Ar- Prince David having given a plenary submission ndix to the king, defired, that being his nephew, and the lawful heir and fuccessor of his father Prince Lhewelve, he should enjoy the principality of Wales, rather than Gruffydh, who was illegitimate, and in no wife related to the king; affuring him further, that the war would never be at an end, if he was fet at liberty. King Henry knowing well the truth of all this, and withal being affured that Gruffydh was not only valiant himself, but had likewise very powerful abettors and promoters of his cause, was very inclinable to affent to David's request, and to prevent any farther troubles, willingly granted it. fore David in a while after sent his brother Gruffydh to the king, together with the pledges promised for the performance of the articles lately agreed upon; who were all fent to the tower of London to be kept in fafe cuftody; Gruffydh being allowed a noble aday to provide himself with necessaries. Shortly after, David came himself to London, and after he had done his homage, and fworn fealty to the king of England, returned to Wales, being honourably and peaceably peaceably dismissed. But as soon as Gruffydh found out King Henry's mind, and that it was the least part of his defign to fet him at liberty, having flatly denied the bishop of Bangor his request therein; he began to fet his brains a-working, and to devife means whereby he might make his escape out of the tower. Whereupon, having one night deceived his keepers, he let himself down from the top of the building, by a line which he had composed out of the sheets and hangings of the room; which being too weak to bear his weight, being a heavy corpulent person, let him down headlong to the ground; by the greatness of which fall he was crushed to pieces, and so presently expired. King Henry being informed of this unhappy accident, severely punished the officers for their inexcufable carelessness; and ordered that his son, who was kept prisoner with him in the tower, should be

After this King Henry fortified the castle of Dyferth in Flintshire; and for their past service, or rather to oblige them to the like after, granted to Gruffydh ap Gwenwynwyn all his estate in Powis, and to the fons of Conan ap Owen Gwynedh their lands in Merioneth. And the next year Maelgon Fychan forti-A. D. 12424 fied the castle of Garthgrugyn, John de Mynoc the castle of Buelht, and Roger Mortimer that of Mely- 1243. enyth. But all these preparations were to no purpose; for the following year early, King Henry came with an army into Wales, and began very unreasonably to molest the Welch, and without any just pretence forcibly to feize upon their lands and estates. Indeed, after the death of Gruffydh, he had a mind no longer to keep his promise to David, and therefore entitled his eldest son Edward to the principality of Wales, whom he thought to oblige the Welch to obey. But Prince David understanding his design, levied all his power for the defence of his just right; yet finding himself unable to withstand the army of the English, purposed to effect that by policy which he could not attain by force. He fent therefore to S 4

the Pope, complaining how that King Henry of England compelled him unjuftly to hold his lands of him, and that upon no legal pretence he seized the estates of the Welch at his pleasure; telling him moreover, that Prince Lhewelyn his father had left him and the principality of Wales to the protection of the fee of Rome, to which he was willing to pay the yearly fum of five hundred marks, obliging himself and his succeffors by oath, for the due performance of this payment, The Pope (you may be fure) gladly accepted of the offer, and thereupon gave commission to the two abbots of Aberconwey and Cymer, to absolve David from his oath of allegiance to the king of England, and having enquired into the whole state of the quarrel, to transmit an account of it to him. The see Ap-abbots according to their commission, directed a very positive mandate to the king of England. King Henry admiring the strange prefumption and confidence of these abbots, or more the unsatiable avarice and greediness of the Pope, sent also to Rome; and with a greater fum of money, eafily adjusted all matters: his Holiness being very desirous to make the best advantage of both parties.

But Prince David finding that the Pope minded his own gain, more than to juttify his complaints againft the king of England, thought it to no purpose to rely upon his faith, but judged it more adviseable to vindicate himself by force of arms. Having therefore gathered his forces together, (being now reconciled to, and followed by all the nobility of Wales, excepting Gruffydh ap Gwenwynwyn and Morgan ap Howel, who also shortly after submitted to him,) he drew up his army to the marches, intending to be revenged upon the Earls of Clare and Hereford, John de Monmouth, Roger de Monte Alto, and others, who injured and oppressed his people; with whom he A.D. 1245 fought divers times, and with various success. But in the Lent-time next year, the Marchers and the Welch met near Montgomery, between whom was fought a very severe battle; the governor of that castle being general of the English, and having cunningly placed an ambuscade of men, pretended, after some short engagement, to flee, whom the Welch daringly purfued, not thinking of any treachery. But as foon as they were past the ambushment, up rises an unexpected party of men, who falling upon the backs of the Welch, put them to a very great diforder, and killed about three hundred men, not without a confiderable loss of their own fide, among whom was flain a valiant knight called Hubert Fitz-Matthew. But King Henry being weary of these perpetual skirmishes and daily clashings between the English and Welch, thought to put an end to the whole with one stroke; and therefore raised a very great army of English and Gascoigns, and entered into North Wales, purposing to waste and destroy the country. But before he could advance very far, Prince David intercepted him in a narrow pass, and fo violently fet upon him, that a great number of his nobility and bravest foldiers, and in a manner all the Gascoigns were slain. The king finding he could effect nothing against the Welch, invited over the Irish, who landing in Anglesey, began to pillage and waste the country; but the inhabitants gathering themselves together in a body, quickly forced them to their ships: after which, King Henry having victualled and manned all his castles, returnest distatisfied to England.

But concerning this expedition to Wales, and the continuance of the English army therein, a certain person in the camp, wrote to this effect to his friends Mat. Paris, in England: 'The king with his army is encamped at Gannock, and is busy in fortifying that place, sufficiently strong already, about which we lay in our tents, in watching, fasting, praying, and freezing. We watch for sear of the Welch, who were used to come suddenly upon us in the night-time: we fast for want of provision, the halfpenny loas being now risen and advanced to sive pence: we pray that we may speedily return safe and scot-free home: and we freeze for want of winter-garments, having but a thin linen shirt to keep us from the wind. There is a small arm of the sea under the castle where we lye, which the tide reached, by the conveniency of which, many ships bring us provision and victuals from Ireland and Chester: this arm lies betwixt us and Snowden, where the Welch are encamped, and is in breadth, when the tide is in, about a bow-shot. Now it happened, that upon the Monday before Michaelmas-day, an Irish vessel came up to the mouth of the haven, with provision to be fold to our camp, which being negligently looked to by the mariners, was upon the low ebb stranded on the other side of the castle, near the Welch. The enemy per-ceiving this, descended from the mountains, and laid fiege to the ship, which was fast upon the dry fands; whereupon we detached in boats three hundred Welch of the borders of Cheshire and Shropthire, with fome archers and armed men, to rescue the ship: but the Welch, upon the approach of our men, withdrew themselves to their usual retirements in the rocks and woods, and were purfued for about two miles by our men afoot, who flew a great number of them. But in their return back, our foldiers being too covetous and greedy of plunder, among other facrilegious and profane actions; spoiled the abbey of Aberconwey, and burnt all the books and other choice utenfils belonging to it. The Welch being distracted at these irreligious practices, got together in great number, and in a desperate manner setting upon the English, killing a great number of them, and following the rest to the water-side, forced as many as could not make their escape into the boats, to commit themselves to the mercy of the waves. Those they took prisoners they thought to reserve for exchange; but hearing how we put some of their captive nobility to death, they altered their minds, and in a revengeful manner scattered their dilacerated carcasses along the furface of the water. In this conflict, we loft a confiderable number of our men, and chiefly those under the command of Richard Earl of Cornwal; as Sir Alan Bufcell, Sir Adam de Maio, Sir

Geoffry Estuemy, and one Raimond a Gascoign, with about an hundred common foldiers. In the mean time, Sir Walter Bisset stoutly defended the ship till midnight, when the tide returned; whereupon the Welch, who affailed us of all fides were forced to withdraw, being much concerned that we had so happily escaped their hands. The cargo of this ship, was three hundred hogsheads of wine, with a plenty of other provision for the army, which at that time it flood in very great need of. But the next morning. when the fea was returned, the Welch came merrily down again to the ship, thinking to surprise our men; but as luck would have it, they had at full fea the night before relinquished the ship, and returned fafe to the camp. The enemy miffing of our men, fet upon the cargo of the ship, carried away all the wine and other provisions; and then when the sea began to flow, they put fire to the vessel, and returned to the rest of the army. And thus we lay encamped in great mifery and diffress for want of necessaries, exposed to great and frequent dangers, and in great fear of the private affaults and fudden incursions of our enemies. Oftentimes we fet upon and affailed the Welch, and in one conflict we carried away an hundred head of cattle, which very triumphantly we conveyed to our camp. For the fcarcity of provision was then fo great, that there remained but one hogshead of wine in the whole army; a bushel of corn being fold for twenty shillings; a fed ox for three or four marks; and an hen for eight pence; fo that there happened a very lamentable mortality both of man and horse, for want of necessary sustenance of life.'

The English army having undergone such miseries as are here described, and King Henry, as is said, perceiving it was in vain for him to continue any longer in Wales, where he was sure to gain no great credit, he returned with his army into England, being not very desirous to make another expedition into Wales. Then all the nobility and barons of Wales, and those that had savoured and maintained

Gruffydh's

Prince David, to whom they vowed true and perpetual allegiance. But the Prince did not long furvive this amity and agreement between him and his fubjects: for falling fick toward the beginning of this year, he died in March, at his palace in Aber, and was buried at Conwey, leaving no iffue to fucceed. A.D. 1246. The only thing unpardonable in this prince, was his over jealoufy and feverity against his brother Gruffydh, a person so well beloved of the Welch, that upon his account their affection was much cooled, and in some entirely alienated from their prince. Indeed thus much may be faid for David, that Gruffydh was a valourous and an aspiring man, and if set at liberty, would bid fair to eject him out of his principality; which King Henry of England too (who thought he might bring over David, a milder man, to what terms he pleased,) was sensible of, when he would by no persuasion dismiss him from custody in the tower of London. But this occasioned all the disturbances that happened in his time, the Welch themselves, for the love they bore to Gruffydh, inviting the king of England to come to invade their country, and to correct the unnatural enmity their Prince expressed to his brother. But when all differences were over, the king of England returned with his army shamefully back, and the Prince and his nobility reconciled; the Welch might have expected a very happy time of it, had not death taken the Prince fo unnaturally away, before he had well known what a peaceful reign was.

LHEWELYN AP GRUFFYDH.

PRINCE David being dead, the principality of North Wales legally descended to Sir Ralph Mortimer, in right of his wife Gladys, daughter to Lhewelyn ap Iorwerth. But the Welch nobility being affembled together for the electing and nominating a fuccessor, thought it by no means adviseable to admit a stranger to the crown, though his title was never fo lawful; and especially an Englishman, by whose obligations to the crown of England, they must of necessity expect to become subjects, or rather flaves to the English government. Wherefore they unanimously agreed to set up Lhewelyn and Owen Goch, the fons of Gruffydh, a base son of Lhewelvn ap Iorwerth, and brother to Prince David; who being fent for, and appearing before the affembly, all the nobles and barons then present, did them homage, and received them for their fovereigns. But as foon as the king of England understood of the death of the Prince of Wales; he thought the country being in an unsettled and wavering condition, he might effect great matters there; and therefore he fent one Nicholas de Miles to South Wales, with the title of Juffice of that country, with whom he joined in commission Meredith ap Rhys Gryc, and Meredith ap Owen ap Gruffydh; to eject and difinherit Maelgon Fychan of all his lands and estate in South Wales. The like injurious practices were committed against Howel ap Meredith, who was forcibly robbed of all his estate in Glamorgan by the Earl of Clare. These unreasonable extortions being insupportable; Maelgon and Howel made known their grievances to the Princes of North Wales, defiring their fuccour and affiftance for the recovery of their lawful inheritance from the encroachments ments of the English. But the king of England understanding their design, led his army into Wales; upon whose arrival, the Welch withdrew themselves to Snowden hills, where they fo tired the English army, that the king finding he could do no good, after some stay there returned back to England. Within a while after, Ralph Mortimer, the husband of Gladys Dhu died; leaving his whole estate, and with it a lawful title to the principality of North Wales, to his fon Sir Roger Mortimer.

A. D. 1247. The next year nothing memorable passed between the English and the Welch, only the dismal effects of the last year's expedition, were not worn off; the ground being uncapable of cultivation, and the cattle being in great measure destroyed by the English, occasioned great poverty and want in the country. But the greatest calamity befel the bishops; St. Asaph and Bangor being destroyed and burnt by the English, the bishops thereof were reduced to that utmost extremity, as to get their subsistence by other mens charity; the bishop also of St. David's deceased, and he of Landaff had the misfortune to fall blind. In the bishoprick of St. David's succeeded Thomas, surnamed Wallensis, by reason that he was born in Wales; who thinking himself obliged to benefit his own country what lay in his power, defired to be advanced from the archdeaconry of Lincoln to that see: which the king eafily granted, and confirmed him in it. The next summer proved somewhat more favourable to the Welch; Rhys Fychan fon to Rhys Mechyl, won from the English the castle of Carrec Cynnen, which his unkind mother, out of malice, or fome ill opinion entertained of him, had some time before privately delivered up to them. And about the same time the body of Gruffydh ap Lhewelyn base son to Lhewelyn ap Iorwerth, was recovered from the king of England, by the earnest follicitations of the abbots of Conwey and Ystratsfur; who conveying it to Conwey, bestowed upon it a very pompous and honourable interment.

After this, the affairs of the Welch proceeded A.D. 1255. peaceably for a long while, and the country had fufficient opportunity to recover its former plenty; but at last, to make good the proverb, that Plenty begets War; they began, for want of a foreign enemy, to quarrel and fall out among themselves. Owen was too high and ambitious to be fatisfied with half the principality, and therefore must needs have a fling at the whole; wherein fortune so far deceived him, that he lost his own stake, as will afterwards appear. But the better to encompass his design, by sly infinuations he perfuaded David his younger brother to fecond his cause; and they with joint interest levied their power, with intention to dethrone their elder brother Lhewelyn, But that was no eafy matter; for Lhewelyn was prepared to receive them, and with a puissant army met them in the field, and fo was refolved to venture all upon the fortune of a battle. It was strange and grievous to behold this unnatural civil war; and the more grievous now, by reason that it so manifestly weakened the strength of the Welch to withstand the incursions of the English, who were extremely pleased with fo fair an opportunity to fall upon them. But, they were too far engaged, to confider of future inconveniencies; and a trial of war they must have, though the English were ready to fall upon both armies. The battle being joined, the day proved bloody on both fides, and which was like to conquer was not prefently discovered; till at length Owen began to give ground, and in fine was overthrown, himself and his brother David being taken prisoners. Lhewelyn, though he had fufficient reason, would not put his brothers to death; but committing them into close prison, seized all their estates into his own hands, and so enjoyed the whole principality of Wales.

The English seeing the Welch at this rate oppress and destroy one another, thought they had full liberty to deal with them as they pleased; and thereupon began to exercise all manner of wrong and injustice against them; infomuch that the next year, all 1256. the welyn, and declared their grievances, how unmorcifully Prince Edward (whom his father had fent to Wales) and others of the nobility of England dealt with them, how without any colour of justice they

feized upon their estates, without any room for appeal; whereas, if themselves offended in the least, they were punished to the utmost extremity. In fine. they folemnly declared, that they preferred to die honourably in the field, before to be so unmercifully enflaved to the will and pleasure of strangers. Prince Lhewelyn was not a stranger to all this; and now having happily discovered the bent and inclination of his subjects, was resolved to prosecute, if possible, the expulsion of the English, and to be revenged upon them for their most cruel, and almost inhuman practices towards the Welch. Having therefore drawn all his power together, being accompanied by Meredith ap Rhys Gryc, in the space of one week he recovered out of the hands of the English all the inland country of North Wales, and then all Merionyth with fuch lands as Prince Edward had usurped in Cardigan, which he bestowed upon Meredish the fon of Owen an Gruffydh. Having also forced Rhys Fychan out of Buelht, he conferred it upon Meredith ap Rhys; and in like manner bestowed all the lands which he recovered, between his nobles; referving nothing to his own use, besides Gwerthryneon, A.D.1257 the estate of Sir Roger Mortimer. The next summer, he entered into Powis, and made war against Gruffydh ap Gwenwynwyn, who always had taken part with, and owned subjection to the king of England, which he totally overcame, excepting the castle of Poole, some small part of Caerneon, and the country lying upon the banks of the Severn.

But Rhys Fychan was not fatisfied with the lofs of Buelht, and therefore was refolved to try to recover it; to which end, he went to the king of England, of whom he obtained a very strong army, commanded by one Stephen Bacon, which being sent by sea, landed at Caermardhyn in the Whitsun-week.

From

From thence the English marched to Dynefawr, and laid fiege to the castle, which valiantly held out, until Lhewelyn's army came to its relief. Upon the arrival of the Welch, the English decamped from before the castle, and put themselves in posture of bat-tle, which the Welch perceiving, they made all haste to answer and oppose them. Whereupon there ensued a very terrible engagement which lasted a very long while; this being for number of men the greatest battle that had been fought between the English and the Welch. But the victory favoured the Welch, the Englishmen being at length forced to fly, having lost above two thousand men, besides several barons and knights who were taken prisoners. After this the prince's army passed to Dyfed, where having burnt all the country, and destroyed the castles of Abereorran, Lhanstephan, Maenclochoc and Arberth, with all the towns thereunto belonging, returned to North Wales with much spoil. But as soon as he was arrived, great complaints were exhibited to Prince Lhewelyn against Jeffrey Langley lieutenant to Edward Earl of Chefter, who without any regard to equity and conscience, most wrongfully oppressed the inhabitants of Wales under his jurisdiction. Whereupon the prince to punish the master for the servant's fault, entered with some part of his army into the Earl's estate, burnt and destroyed all his country on both fides the river Dee, to the gates of Chester. Edward had no power at prefent to oppose him, but being refolved to be revenged upon the Welch with the first opportunity, he defired aid of his uncle, then chose king of the Romans, who fent him a ftrong detachment, with which he purposed to give Prince Lhewelyn battle. But finding him too ftrong, he thought it more adviseable to defift from hostility, the prince's army confisting of ten thouland experienced men, who were obliged by oath, rather all to die in the field, than fuffer the English to gain any advantage over the Welch. But Gruffydh ap Madoc Maelor, Lord of Dinas Bran, a person of notorious reputation for injuffice and oppression, busely forfook

forces went over to the Earl of Chester. A.D. 1258. The next year Prince Lhewelvn passed to South Wales, and feized into his hands the land of Cemaes, and having reconciled the difference betwixt Rhys Gryg and Rhys Fychan, he won the castle of Trefdraeth, with the whole country of Rhos, excepting Haverford. There he marched in an hostile manner toward Glamorgan, and rafed to the ground the caftle of Lhangymwch, and then returning to North Wales, he met by the way with Edward Earl of Chefter, whom he forced precipitously to return back. But before he would put an end to this expedition, he must needs be revenged upon that ungrateful fugitive Gruffydh ap Madoc Maelor, and thereupon passing through Bromfield, he miferably laid waste the whole country. Upon this the kings of England and Scotland fent to Lhewelyn requiring him to cease from hostility, and after that unmerciful manner to devour, and forcibly to take away other mens estates. The prince was not over follicitous to hearken to their request, but finding the time of the year very seafonable for action against the English, he divided his army into two battles, each of these confisting of 1500 foot and 500 horse, with which he purposed to enlarge his conquest. Edward Earl of Chester, to prevent the blow which fo desperately hung over his head, fent over for fuccours from Ireland, of whose coming Prince Lhewelyn being certified, manned out a fleet to intercept them, which meeting with the Irish at sea, after a sharp dispute, forced them to return back with loss. King Henry being acquainted with the miscarriage of the Irish, resolved to come in person against the Welch, and having drawn together the whole strength of England, even from St. Michael's mount in Cornwal to the river Tweed, marched with his fon Edward in a great rage to North Wales, and without any opposition advanced as far as Teganwy. But the Prince had stopped his farther progress and prevented any long stay he could make in Wales, having before hand caused all manner of provision and forage to be carried over the river, and then securing the strait and narrow passages whereby the English might get farther into the country; the army was in a short time so mortally satigued, that the king for want of necessary subsistence was forced to retire in haste to England with considerable loss.

The prince after that fending for all the forces in South Wales, came to the marches, where Gruffydh Lord of Bromfield finding that the king of England was not able to defend his estate yielded himself up, and then passing to Powis, he banished Gruffydh ap Gwenwynwyn, and took all the lands in the country into his hands. Proceeding farther, he was encountered with by Gilbert de Clare Earl of Glocester, who with a choice party of English gave him battle. But Lhewelyn's army exceeding both in number and courage, easily vanquished and overcame the English, and so the victory being quickly obtained, the prince pre-fently reduced to his power all the castles belonging to the Earl of Glocester. King Henry hearing of the Earl's overthrow, was much concerned at the loss of fo many brave foldiers, in whose valour and experience he always put a very great confidence, and therefore to revenge their deaths, he was again refolved to march against the Welch. Having called his forces together, and received supply from Gascoign and Ireland he came to Wales, but not daring to venture far into the country, for fear of being forced to make another shameful retreat, he only destroyed the corn near the borders, it being harvest time, and so returned to England. But Lord James Audley, whose daughter was married to Gruffydh, Lord of Bromfield, did more mischief and hurt to the Welch, who having brought over a great number of horsemen from Germany to serve against the Welch, so terrified them with the unufual largeness of the horses, and the unaccustomed manner of fighting, that in the first encounter the Welch were easily overcome. But minding to revenge this difgrace, and withal being better acquainted with their method of arms, T 2

the Welch in a little time after made in-roads into the Lord Audley's lands, where the Germans prefently fet upon them, and purfued them to certain straits, which the Welch discovered for a politick retreat. The Germans thinking they had entirely drove the Welch away, returned carelessly back, but being set upon of the sudden, without any thought of an enemy behind, they were all in a manner slain by the rallying Welch. This year a very great searcity of bees and horses happened in England, whereof several thousands yearly were supplied out of Wales, by reason of which, the marches were perfectly robbed of all their breed, and not so much as a beast to be seen in all the borders.

The next fpring all the nobility of Wales convened A. D. 1259 together and took their mutual oaths to defend their country to death, against the oppressing invasions of the English, and not to relinquish and forsake one another upon pain of perjury; though notwithstanding, Meredith ap Rhys of South Wales violated this agreement, and put himself in the service of the king of England. King Henry was ready to fall upon the Welch, to which purpose he summoned a parliament, wherein he proposed to raise a subsidy to-wards the conquest of Wales, being not able of himfelf to bear the expences of this war, by reason of feveral losses he had already received, the country of Pembroke being lately destroyed and taken by the Welch, where they found plenty of falt, which before they were in great necessity of. But William de Valentia accusing the Earls of Leicester and Glocester as the authors of all this mischief quite broke all their measures, so the king was forced to prorogue the parliament for a time without any grant of a fubfidy. But within a while after, it fat at Oxford, where King Henry and Edward his fon took a folemn oath to observe the laws and statutes of the realm, and the fame being tendered to Guy and William the king's brothers, and to Henry fon to the king of Almain, and to Earl Warren, they refused to take it, and so departed. In this parliament the lords of Wales fairly proffered to be tri-ed by the laws for any offence they had unjustly committed against the king, which was mainly opposed by Edward, who caused one Patrick de Canton (to whom the lordship of Cydwely was given, in case he could win and keep the same) to be fent to Caermardhyn as lieutenant for the king with whom Meredith ap Rhys was joined in commission. Being arrived at Carmardhyn, Patrick fent to the Prince, to defire him to appoint commissioners to treat with him concerning a peace, which he confented to, and without any suspicion of treachery, sent Meredith ap Owen, and Rhys ap Rhys to Emlyn, if possible, to conclude the fame. But Patrick meaning no fuch thing, laid an ambuscade for the Welch, who coming honeftly forward, were by the way villainously fet upon by the English, and a great many slain; but those that happily escaped, calling up the country, presently gave chase to Patrick and his accomplices, who being at length overtaken, were almost all put to the fword. But Prince Lhewelyn was now altogether bent upon a peace, and did not only defire it, but was willing to purchase it for a sum of money, to which purpose he offered to give the king 4000 marks, to his fon 300, and 200 to the queen, which the king utterly refused, replying, That it was not a sufficient recompence for all the damages he had suffered by the Welch. Matthew of Westminster reporteth, that about Michaelmas this year, the bishop of Bangor was commissioned by the prince and nobility of Wales to treat with the king of England about a peace, and to offer him 16,000 pounds for the fame, upon these conditions, that according to their antient custom, the Welch should have all causes tried and determined at Chefter, and that they should freely enjoy the laws and customs of their own country; but what was the refult of this treaty, my author does not

There being no hopes of a peace, Prince Lhewelyn A.D. 1266. early next year appeared in the field, and passed to South Wales, and first fell foul upon Sir Roger Mortimer, who contrary to his oath, maintained the king of England's quarrel. Having forcibly disposses him of all Buelht, and without any opposition taken the castle, where was found a plentiful magazine, he marched through all South Wales, confirming his con-

A.D. 1261-quest, and afterwards returned to his palace at Aber, 1262. betwixt Bangor and Conwey. The year following, Owen ap Meredith Lord of Cydewen died. But the next fummer was fomewhat more noted for action, a party of Prince Lhewelyn's men took by furprise the castle of Melienyth, belonging to Sir Roger Mortimer, and having put the rest of the garrison to the fword, they took Howel ap Meyric the governor with his wife and children prisoners; and after that, the castle was demolished by the prince's order. Sir Roger Mortimer hearing of this, with a great body of lords and knights came to Melienyth, where Prince Lhewelyn met him, but Sir Roger not daring to hazard a battle, planted himself within the ruins. and finding he could do no good, defired leave of the prince to retire peaceably. The Prince upon the account of relation and near confanguinity betwixt them, and withal because he would not be so mean spirited as to fall upon an enemy, who had no power to refift him, let him safely depart with his forces, and then passing on himself to Brecknock at the request of the people of that country, who swore fidelity unto him; fo passed on and returned to North Wales. And now being confederate with the barons against King Henry, he was refolved to practife fomething in the prejudice of the English, and so set upon the earldom of Chester, destroyed the castles of Tygannmy and Diserth belonging to Edward, who coming thither, was yet not able to prevent the mischief done to him by the Welch.

The next year John Strange junior, constable of Montgomery with a great number of marchers, came a little before Easter by night, through Ceri to Cydewen, intending to surprise the castle, which when the people of the country understood, they gathered together, and setting upon them, slew two hundred of h.s men, but Strange with a few got fafely back.

Within

Within a while after, the marchers and the Welch met again near a place called Clun, where a hot engagement happened between them, in which the Welch were worsted, and had a great number of their men flain. After this, nothing remarkable fell out for a confiderable time, unless it were, that David being released out of prison by Prince Lhewelyn his brother, most ungratefully forfook him, and with all his might. fided with his enemies the English; also Gruffydh ap Gwenwynwyn having taken the castle of Mold, demolished it to the ground. During this quiet and unactive interval in Wales, Meredith ap Owen, the main support and defender of South Wales died, to the great disadvantage of the affairs of that country. And A. D. 1268; now indeed, the Welch were like to be made fensible of the loss of so considerable a person, for King Henry was refolved once more to lead an army into Wales, and to fee if he could have better fuccess than he had hitherto against the Welch. But when he was prepared to undertake this expedition, Ottobonus, Pope Clement's legate in England, interposed and meditated a peace, which was concluded upon at the castle of Montgomery, wherein it was articled, that Prince Lhewelyn should give the king thirty thousand marks, and the king was to grant the prince a charter, from thenceforth to receive homage and fealty of all the nobility and barons of Wales, besides one, so that they could hold their lands of no other but himself, and from thence forward he was to be lawfully stiled Prince of Wales. This charter being ratified and confirmed as well by the authority of the pope, as the king's feal; Prince Lhewelyn defifted from any farther acts of hostility, and punctually observed all the articles of the agreement betwixt him and King Henry, fo that nothing more was outrageously transacted between the English and Welch, during the remainder of this king's reign. Within that space, died Grono ap Ednysed Fychan one of the chief lords of the prince's council, and shortly after him Gruffydh Lord of Bromfield, who lies buried at Vale Crucis. T 4

A. D. 1272. But the death of King Henry put an end to the obfervations of the peace betwixt the English and Welch. who dying on the fixteenth day of November this year, I ft this kingdom to his fon Edward. Prince Edward was then in the Holy Land, and very active against those enemies of christianity, the Turks, where he had already continued above an year; but understanding of his father's death, and that in his absence he was proclaimed king of England, he made all hafte to return to receive the folemnity of coronation. But what by the tediousness of the journey, and what by being honourably detained at princes' courts in his way, it was two years before he could get into England, then upon the fifteenth of August, and in the year 1274, he was crowned at Westminster. Prince Lhewelyn was fummoned to attend at his coronation, but he flatly refused to appear, unless upon sure terms of safe conduct, for having offended feveral of the English nobility, he could not in fafety pass through their country without the danger of exposing his person to the inveterate malice and acceptable revenge of some of them. And therefore without the king's brother, the Earl of Glocester, and Robert Burnell Lord Chief Justice of England, were delivered up as pledges for his fafe conduct, he would not come to do his homage and fealty at his coronation, according to the writ directed to him. And indeed, feeing King Edward had broke the peace lately concluded upon before the Pope's legate, and did receive, and honourably entertain fuch noblemen of Wales, as for their difloyalty were banished by Prince Lhewelyn, by whom he feared some treachery; there was no reason that the prince should pay him any subjection, but by the breach of peace was exempted from all homage. However, Prince Lhewelyn to shew that it was not out of any stubbornness or difrespect to the king of England, that he refused to come, fent up his reasons by the abbots of Ystratflur and Conwey to Robert Kilwarby archbishop of Canterbury, and the rest of the bishops then sitting in convocation in the New Temple at London, which were to this effect. To

To the most Reverend Fathers in God, Robert, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Metropolitan of all England, the Archbishop of York, and the rest of the Bishops in Convocation; Lhewelyn Prince of Wales and Lord of Snowden, sendeth greeting.

W E would have your Lordships to understand, that whereas formerly most terrible and inceffant wars were continually managed betwixt Henry king of England and Ourself; the same were at last composed, and all matters of differences were adjusted by the means of his Excellency Cardinal Ottobonus, the Pope's legate, who having drawn the articles and conditions of the peace agreed upon, they were figned and fwore to, not only by the king, but also the prince his son, now king of England. Among these articles were comprehended, that We and our fucceffors should hold of the king and his successor, the principality of Wales, fo that all the Welch lords, one baron excepted, should hold their baronies and estates in capite of Us, and should pay their homage and fealty for the same to Us; We in like manner doing homage to the king of England and his fuccesfors. And befides, that the king and his fucceffors should never offer to receive and entertain any of Our enemies, nor any such of Our own subjects as were lawfully banished and excluded our dominions of Wales, nor by any means defend and uphold fuch against Us. Contrary to which articles, King Edward has forcibly feized upon the estates of certain barons of Wales, of which they and their ancestors have been immemorably poffeffed of and detains a barony, which by the form of peace should have been delivered to us; and moreover, has hitherto entertained David ap Gruffydh our brother, and Gruffydh ap Gwenwynwyn, with feveral other of Our enemies who are outlaws and fugitives of Our country, and though We have often exhibited Our grievances and complaints against them, for destroying and pillaging our country, yet We could never obtain of the king any relief or redress for the feveral wrongs and injuries we received at their hands; but on the contrary they still persist to commit wastes and other outrages in Our dominions. And for all this, he fummons Us to do him homage at a place which is altogether dangerous to Our person, where Our inveterate enemies, and which is worfe, Our own unnatural subjects, bear the greatest sway and respect with the king. And though we have alledged feveral reasons to the king and his council, why the place by him affigned, is not fafe and indifferent for Us to come, and defire him to appoint another, whereto we might with more fafety refort, or elfe that he would fend commissioners to receive Our oath and homage, till he could more opportunely receive them in person; yet he would not affent to Our just and reasonable request, nor be satisfied with the reasons We exhibited for Our non-appearance. Therefore We defire your lordships earnestly to weigh the dismal effects that will happen to the fubjects both of England and Wales upon the breach of the articles of peace, and that you would be pleafed to inform the king of the sad consequence of another war, which can no way be prevented, but by using Us according to the conditions of the former peace, which for Our part, We will in no measure transgress. But if the king will not hearken to your counsel, We hope that you will hold Us excused, if the nation be disquieted and troubled thereupon, which as much as in Us lieth We endeavour to prevent.

King Edward would admit of no excuse, nor hearken to any manner of reason in the case, but was unmercifully enraged, and conceived an unpardonable displeasure against Prince Lhewelyn, which yet he thought convenient to conceal and diffemble for a time. Indeed, he could never abide Lhewelyn, fince the time that he was vanquished and put to flight by him at the marches, so that the chief cause of King Edward's anger, originally proceeded from a point of honour, which this refusal of homage served fufficiently to increase. But to prosecute his revenge, which upon this fcore is in princes very fierce and unforgetful, in a short time he came to Chester, meaning to recover by force what he could not obtain by fair means. From hence he fent to the Prince of Wales. requiring him to come over and do him homage. which Lhewelyn either absolutely refusing or willingly detracting to do, King Edward made ready his army to force him to it. But there happened an accident A. D. 1277. which took off a great part of Prince Lhewelyn's stubbornness; for at this time the counters of Leicester the widow of Simon Montfort who lived at Montargis a nunnery in France fent over for Wales her daughter. the Lady Eleanor, (whom Lhewelyn extremely loved) with her brother Aemerike, to be married to the prince, according to the agreement made in her father, Earl Montfort's time. But Aemerike fearing to touch upon the coast of England, steered his course towards the islands of Scilly, where by the way they were all taken by four Bristol ships, and brought to King Edward, who received the lady very honourably, but committed her brother prisoner to the castle of Coff, whence he was afterward removed to the castle of Shirburne. The king having obtained this unexpected advantage over Lhewelyn, began boldly to fall upon him, and fo dividing his army into two battalions, led one himself into North Wales, and advanced as far as Ruthlan, where he strongly fortified the caftle. The other he committed to Paganus de Camutiis, a great foldier, who entering into West Wales, burned and destroyed a great part of the country. But the people of South Wales, fearing that his next expedition was levelled against them voluntarily submitted themselves to the king, and did him homage, and then delivered up the castle of Ystratywy to Paganus.

Prince Lhewelyn hearing of this and finding his own subjects to forsake him, but more especially being defirous to recover his espouse the Lady Eleanor, thought it likewise adviseable to submit, and therefore fued to King Edward for a peace, who granted it, but upon very fevere conditions upon Lhewelyn's fide. The agreement confifted of ten articles, which were, I. That the prince should fet at liberty all manner of prisoners, that upon the king's account were detained in custody. II. That for the king's favour and good-will; he should pay 50,000 marks, to be received at the king's pleasure. III. That these sour cantreds or hundreds, viz. Cantref Ros, where the king's castle of Teganwy stands; Ryfonioc, where Denbigh; Tegengl, where Ruthlan; Dyffryn Clwyd, where Rhuthyn stands, should remain in the king's hands. IV. That the Lords Marchers should quietly enjoy all the lands they had conquered within Wales, excepting in the ifle of Anglesey, which was wholly granted to the Prince. V. That in confideration of this island, the prince should pay 5000 marks in hand, with the referve of a 1000 marks yearly to begin at Michaelmas; and in case the prince died without iffue, the whole island should return to the king. VI. That the prince should come every year to England to pay his homage to the king for all his lands. VII. That all the barons of Wales, excepting five in Snowden, should hold their lands and estates of the king, and no other. VIII. That the title of Prince should remain only for his life, and not descend to his fuccessors, and after his death, the five lords of Snowden should hold their lands only from the king. IX. That for the performance of these articles, the prince should deliver up for hostages ten persons of the best quality in the country, without imprison-ing, disinheriting, and any time of redemption determined. And farther, that the king should chuse twenty persons in North Wales, who besides the prince. should take their oaths for the due performance of these articles, and in case the prince should swerve and recede from them, and upon admonition thereof not repent, they they should for sake him, and become his enemies. X. The Prince was obliged to suffer his brethren quietly to enjoy their lands in Wales, whereof David for his service was dubbed knight by the king, and had the Earl of Derby's widow given in matrimony, and with her as a portion, the castle of Denbigh in North Wales, besides a 1000 pounds in lands. His other brother Roderic was lately escaped out of prison into England, and the younger called Owen, was upon

King Edward having imposed these severe and unmerciful conditions upon Prince Lhewelyn, and for a better fecurity for the performance of them, built a castle at Aberystwyth, returned very honourably into England; upon whose arrival, the people willingly granted him a subsidy of the twentieth part of their estates towards his charges in this war. But it feems very probable that Prince Lhewelyn fubmitted to these intolerable conditions, more upon the account of his amours, and to regain the Lady Eleanora out of the king of England's hand, than that he was apprehensive of any considerable danger he might receive by the English troops. For it is hardly conceiveable, that a prince of fuch notorious conduct and valour, would so easily accept of such hard terms, and in a measure deliver up his principality, when there was no necessity so to do, without resisting an enemy, whom he had frequently overcome, and forced to retire back with greater inequality than the English had at present over him. But the force of love worked wonders, and in this case proved most irrefiftible, which to obtain, Lhewelyn did not think hard to forfeit his proper right to his inveterate enemies, and for ever to exclude his posterity from succeeding in their lawful inheritance. The next year A.D.1273 therefore, he had his wish accomplished, and wa married to Eleanora at Worcester, the king and queen, with all the nobility and persons of quality in England, honouring the wedding with their pre-

But this specious amity, and the peace lately concluded betwixt them did not last long, the English governors in the marches and in-land countries of Wales, presuming upon the prince's submission to the king, grievously oppressed the inhabitants of the country, with new and unheard of exactions, and with intolerable partiality openly encouraged the English to defraud and oppress the Welch. These insupportable practices moved the Welch to go in a body to David Lord of Denbigh, to endeavour a reconciliation between him and his brother the prince, that they both being at unity, might easily deliver themselves and their country from the unmerciful attyranny of the English. David was not ignorant of

A. D. 1281. tyranny of the English. David was not ignorant of the miferies of his countrymen, and therefore gladly fubmitted to be reconciled to his brother, with promife never to side again with the king of England, but to become his utter enemy. This happy union being thus effected, David was chose general of the army, with which he presently marched to Hawarden, and furprifing the castle slew all that opposed him, and took Roger Clifford prisoner, who had been sent by King Edward, Justitiar into those parts. From thence, being joined by the prince, he passed to Ruthlan, and laid fiege to the castle; but upon notice given that the king was marching to raise the siege, he thought convenient to withdraw, and to retire back. At the fame time Rhys ap Maelgon and Gruffydh ap Meredith an Owen, with other lords of South Wales, took from the English the castle of Aberystwyth, with divers others in that country, and spoiled all the people thereabouts, who owned subjection to the crown of England. In the mean while, John Peckham archbishop of Canterbury, perceiving how matters were like to proceed between the king and the prince, and how the kingdom was effectually involved in a war, of his own proper motion came to Prince Lhewelvn, to endeavour a re-fubmission from him and his brother David to King Edward, and so to put a stop to any farther hostilities.

But

But he fent before-hand to the prince and people of Wales, intimating to them, 'That for the love he bore to the Welch nation, he undertook this arbitration, without the knowledge, and contrary to the king's liking; and therefore earnestly defired, that they would submit to a peace with the English. which himself would endeavour to bring to pass. And because he could make no long continuance in those parts, he wished them to consider, how that if he should be forced to depart before any thing was brought to a conclusion, they could hardly find another who would fo heartily espouse their cause; and farther threatened, that in case they contemned and derided his endeavours, he would not only instigate the English army, now greatly strengthened and increased, to fall upon them, but also signify their stubbornness to the court and bishop of Rome, who esteemed and honoured England, beyond any other kingdom in the world. Moreover, he much lamented to hear of the excessive cruelty of the Welch, even beyond that of the Saracens and other infidels, who never refused to permit slaves and captives to be ranfomed; which the Welch were fo far from practifing, that even fome time they flew those for whose redemption they received money. And whereas they were wont to esteem and reverence holy and ecclefiaftical persons, they are now so far degenerated from devotion and fanctity, that nothing is more acceptable to them than war and fedition, which they had now great need to forfake and repent of. Laftly, he proposed, that they would fignify to him, wherein, and what laws and constitutions of their's was violated by the English, and by what means a firm and a lafting peace might be established; which, if they rejected, they must expect to incur the decree and cenfure of the church, as well as endure the violent in-roads and depredations of a powerful army.'

To these, partly admonitions, and partly threatenings of the archbishop, Prince Lhewelyn returned an answer:

answer: 'That he humbly thanked his Grace for the pains and trouble he undertook in his, and his fubjec's' behalf; and more particularly, because he would venture to come to Wales, contrary to the pleasure and good liking of the king. And as for concluding a peace with him, he would not have his Grace be ignorant, that with all readiness he was willing to fubmit to it, upon condition that the king would duly and fincerely observe the same. And though he would A.D.1281. be glad of his longer continuance in Wales, yet he hoped that no obstructions would happen of his side, why a peace (which of all things he most defired) might not be forthwith concluded, and rather by his Grace's procuring than any others; so that there would be no farther need of acquainting the Pope with his obstinacy, nor moving the king of England to use any force against him. And though the kingdom of England be under the immediate protection of the see of Rome, yet when his Holiness comes to understand of the great and unsufferable wrongs done to him by the English; how the articles of peace were broken, churches and all other religious houses in Wales were burned down and destroyed, and religious persons unchristianly murdered, he hoped he would rather pity and lament his condition, than with addition of punishment encrease and augment his forrow. Neither shall the kingdom of England be anywife disquieted and molested by his means, in case the peace be religiously observed towards him and his fubjects. But who they are that delight themfelves with war and bloodshed, manifestly appears by their actions and behaviour; the Welch being glad to live quietly upon their own, if they might be permitted by the English, who coming to the country, utterly destroy whatever comes in their way, without regard either to fex, age, or religious places. But he was extreme forry that any one should be slain, having paid his ransom; the author of which unworthy action he did not pretend to maintain, but would inflict upon him his condign

punishment, in case he could be got out of the woods and defarts, where as an outlaw, he lives undiscovered. But as to commencing a war in a feafon inconvenient. he protested he knew nothing of that till now; yet those that did so, do solemnly attest that to be the only measure they had to fave themselves, and that they had no other fecurity for their lives and fortunes, than to keep themselves in arms. Concerning his fins and trespasses against God, with the affistance of his Grace, he would endeavour to repent of; neither should the war be willingly continued by him, in case he might save himself harmless; but before he would be unjustly dispossessed of his legal property, he thought it but reasonable, by all possible measures to defend himself. And he was very willing, upon due examination of the trespasses committed, to make fatisfaction and retribution of all wrongs committed by him and his fubjects; fo that the English would observe the same on their side; and likewise was ready to conclude a peace, which he thought was impossible to be established, as long as the English had no regard to articles, and still oppress his people with new and unwarrantable exactions. Therefore feeing his fubjects were unchriftianly abused by the king's officers, and all his country most tyrannically harraffed, he faw no reason why the English, upon any fault of his fide, should threaten to bring a formidable army to his country, nor the church pretend to cenfure him: feeing also, he was very willing upon the aforesaid conditions, to fubmit to a peace. And laftly, he defired his Grace, that he would not give the more credit to his enemies, because they were near his person, and could deliver their complaints frequently, and by word of mouth; for they who made no conscience of oppressing, would not in all probability, stick to defame, and make false accusations; and therefore his Grace would make a better estimation of the whole matter, by examining their actions, rather than believing their words.'

Prince Lhewelyn having to this purpose replied in general to the archbishop's articles, presented him with a copy of the feveral grievances, which himfelf and others of his subjects had wrongfully and unjustly received at the hands of the English, and these, though fomewhat tedious, arethought necessary to be particularly inserted in the appendix, by reason that they demonstrably vindicate the Welch nation, from the unreasonable aspersions which the English of these times cast upon it. For, the breach of peace, and the occasion of those difmal diffurbances in the kingdom, are, by the English writers of those times wholly attributed to the restless and rebellious humour and unconstant temper of the Welch: whereas, had they looked at home, they might have found the original of all these troubles, to have proceeded from the intolerable extortions and infupportable oppressions of their own nation. For whoever considers these unmerciful grievances, and the manifold wrongs the Welch endured, it cannot in reafon be expected, but that they would endeavour to vindicate themselves, and repel force by force, had the English the liberty of dispossessing them wrongfully of their proper inheritance and estates, and it was not lawful for the Welch to endeavour the defending and keeping of their own? and must they be reckoned disobedient, and promoters of sedition, upon the account that they would not be trampled under, and enflaved by the English? these measures were too hard and intolerable, and scarce allowable in an infidel nation; to oppress, (and what in them lay) eradicate a people, for no other reason, than because they were weaker and more helpless than themselves; and then, what is worse, to accuse them of being authors of sedition, because they would not suffer themselves to be peaceably enflaved, but endeavoured to vindicate their right by main force. But it is highly probable, that King Edward had no inclination to observe, what articles of agreement foever were concluded upon; and therefore encouraged his deputies in the marches and inland country of Wales, in all their oppressions and finistrous finistrous dealings towards the Welch. This was the best method, and the most expedient means to reduce the country of Wales to subjection to the crown of England, which the king had long ago intentionally effected; and to accuse the Welch of not observing the conditions of peace, was a specious pretence to bring that actually to pass, and to lead an army into the country. But whatever the English might pretend, it is evident the Welch had the greater occasion to complain, as appears from the grievances committed Appendix. as well against the prince himself, as others of his sub-

Zolinie,

The archbishop having read over these grievances, and finding the Welch to be upon good reason guiltless of that severe character, which by the malicious infinuations of the English, he had conceived of them, went to King Edward; requesting him to take into confideration the unjust wrongs and injuries done to the Welch; which if he would not redress, at least he might excuse them from any breach of obedience to him, feeing they had so just a reason for what they did. The king replied, That he willingly forgave them, and would make reasonable satisfaction for any wrong done; so that they had free access to declare their grievances before him; and then might safely depart, in case it would appear just and lawful they should. The archbishop upon this thought he had obtained his purpose, and therefore, without any stay, posted it to Snowden, where the prince and his brother David refided; and having acquainted them with the king's mind, earnestly defired that they, and the rest of the nobility of Wales, would fubmit themselves, and by him be introduced to the king's presence. Prince Lhewelyn, after some times conference and debate, declared that he was ready to fubmit to the king, with the referve only of two particulars; namely, his conscience, whereby he was obliged to regard the fafety and liberties of his people; and then the decency of his own state and quality. But the king understanding by the archbishop, how U 2 that that the prince flood upon terms, positively refused to consent to any more treaty of peace, than that he should simply submit without any farther conditions. The archbishop had experience enough, that the Welch would never agree to such proposals; and therefore desired of his Majesty, that he would give him leave, with the rest of the English nobility present, to confer and conclude upon the matter; which being granted, they unanimously resolved upon the following articles, and sent them to the prince by John Wallensis, bishop of St. David's,

I. The king will have no treaty of the four cantreds, and other lands which he has bestowed upon his nobles; nor of the isle of Anglesey.

II. In case the tenants of the four cantreds submit themselves, the king purposeth to deal kindly and honourably with them; which we are sufficiently satisfied of, and will, what in us lies, endeavour to further.

III. We will do the like touching Prince Lhewelyn, concerning whom we can return no other answer, than that he must barely submit himself to the king, without hopes of any other conditions.

These were the publick articles agreed upon by the English nobility, and sent to Prince Lhewelyn; besides which, they sent some private measures of agreement, relating both to him and his brother David; promising, that in case he would submit, and put the king in quiet possession of Snowden, his Majesty would bestow an English county upon him, with the yearly revenue of a thousand pound sterling. And moreover, his daughter should be provided for, suitable to her birth and quality, and all his subjects according to their estate and condition; and in case he should have male issue by a second wise, the aforesaid county and a thousand pound should remain to his posterity for ever. As for David, the prince's prince's brother, if he would confent to go to the Holy Land, upon condition not to return but upon the king's pleasure, all things should be honourably prepared for his journey with respect to his quality; and his child maintained and provided for by the king. To these the archbishop added his threats; That in case they did not comply, and submir themselves to the king's mercy, there were very severe and imminent dangers hanging over their heads; as formidable army was ready to make an in-road into their country, which would not only gaul and oppress them, but in all probability totally eradicate the whole nation: besides which, they were to expect the severest censure and punishment of the church.

But all this could not force fo unlimited a fubmission from the prince, but that he would stick upon fome certain conditions; and therefore by letter he acquainted the achbishop, 'That he was with all willingness desirous to submit himself to the king; but withal, that he could not do it but in such a manner as was fafe and honest for him. And because the form of submission contained in the articles sent to him, were by himself and his council thought pernicious and illegal for him to confent to, as tending rather to the destruction, than the security of himself and his fubjects, he could in no wife agree to it; and in case himself should be willing, the rest of his nobility and people would never admit of it, as knowing for certain the mischief and inconveniency that would enfue thereby. Therefore he defired his lordship, that for a confirmation of an honest and a durable peace, which he had all this while earnestly laboured for, he would manage matters circumspectly, and with due regard to the following articles. For it was much more honourable for the king, and far more confonant to reason, that he should hold his lands in the country where he was born and dwelt in, than that by dispossessing of him, his estate should be be-stowed upon strangers.' With this was sent the ge-U3 neral neral answer of the Welch to the archbishop's articles, viz.

I. Though the king would not consent to treat of the four cantreds, nor of the isle of Anglesey; yet unless these be comprehended in the treaty, the prince's council will not conclude a peace; by reason that these cantreds have ever, since the time of Camber the son of Brutus, properly and legally belonged to the Princes of Wales; besides the consentation which the present prince obtained by the consent of the king and his father, at the treaty before Cardinal Ottobonus, the Pope's legate, whose letters patent do still appear. And more, the justice of the thing itself is plainly evident, that it is more reasonable for our heirs to hold the said cantreds for money, and other services due to the king, than that strangers enjoy the same, who will forcibly abuse and oppress the people.

II. All the tenants of the cantreds of Wales do unanimously declare, that they dare not submit themfelves to the king's pleasure; by reason that he never from the beginning took care to observe either covenant, oath, or any other grant to the prince and his people; and because his subjects have no regard to religion, but most cruelly and unchristianly tyranize over churches and religious persons; and then, for that we do not understand ourselves any way obliged thereunto, seeing we be the prince's tenants, who is willing to pay the king all usual and accustomed

III. As to what is required, that the prince should simply commit himself to the king's will, we all declare, that for the aforesaid reasons, none of us dare come, neither will we permit our prince to come to him upon those conditions.

IV. That fome of the English nobility will endeavour to procure a provision of a thousand pounds a-year in England; we would let them know, that we can accept of no such pension; because it is procured for no other end, than that the prince being being difinherited, themselves may obtain his lands in Wales.

V. The prince cannot in honefly relign his paternal inheritance, which has for many ages been enjoyed by his predecessors, and accept of other lands among the English, of whose customs and language he is ignorant; and upon that score, may at length be fraudulently deprived of all, by his malicious and inveterate enemies.

VI. Seeing the king intends to deprive him of his antient inheritance in Wales, where the land is more barren and untilled; it is not very probable that he will bestow upon him, a more fruitful and an arable estate in England.

VII. As to the clause, that the prince should give the king a perpetual possession of Snowden; we only affirm, that seeing Snowden essentially belongs to the principality of Wales, which the prince and his predecessors have enjoyed since Brute, the prince's council will not permit him to renounce it, and accept another estate in England, to which he has not equal right.

VIII. The people of Snowden declare, That though the prince should give the king possession of it, they would never own, and pay submission to strangers; for in so doing, they would bring upon themselves the same misery, that the people of the sour cantreds have for a long time groaned under; being most rudely handled and unjustly oppressed by the king's officers; as woefully appears by their several grievances.

IX. As for David, the prince's brother, we fee no reason, why against his will he should be compelled to take a journey to the Holy Land; which if he happens to undertake hereafter upon the account of religion, it is no cause that his iffue should be difin-

Now feeing neither the prince nor any of his subjects upon any account whatsoever, have moved and U 4.

begun this war, but only defended themselves, their properties, laws, and liberties from the encroachments of other persons; and since the English, for either malice or covetousness to obtain our estates, have uniustly occasioned all these troubles and broils in the kingdom, we are assured that our defence is just and lawful, and therein depend upon the aid and affistance of heaven; which will be most cruelly revenged upon our facrilegious and inhuman enemies, who have left no manner of enormities, in relation to God and man, uncommitted. Therefore your Grace would more justly threaten your ecclefiastical censures, against the authors and abettors of such unparallelled villanies, than the innocent sufferers. And besides, we much admire, that you should advise us to part with our own estates, and to live among our enemies; as if, when we cannot peaceably enjoy what is our own unquestionable right, we might expect to have quiet possession of another man's: and though, as you fay, it be hard to live in war and perpetual danger; yet much harder it is, to be utterly destroyed and reduced to nothing; especially, when we seek but the defence of our own liberties from the infatiable ambition of our enemies. And feeing your Grace has promised to fulminate sentence against all them that either for malice or profit would hinder and obstruct the peace; it is evident who in this respect are transgresfors and delinquents; the fear and apprehension of imprisonment and ejection out of our estates, the sense of oppression and tyrannical government; having compelled us to take up arms for the fecurity of our lives and fortune. Therefore as the English are not dispossessed of their estates, for their offences against the king, fo we are willing to be punished, or make other fatisfaction for our crimes, without being difinherited; and as to the breach of the peace, it is notorious that they were the authors, who never regarded either promife or covenant, never made amends for trespalles, nor remedy for our complaints.

When the archbishop saw there was no likelihood of a mediation, and that a peace was impossible to be concluded as long as the Welch stuck upon conditions; he presently relinquished his pretended affection towards them, and denounced a fentence of excommunication against the prince and all his adherents. It was a subject of no little wonder, that a person of so reputed a sanctity, who esteemed the feveral grievances done to the Welch to be intolerable, should now condemn them for refusal of unlimited fubmission to the king of England; whereas he had already owned it to be unreasonable. But this ecclefiaffical censure was only a prologue to a more melancholy scene; King Edward immediately upon it, fending an army by fea to Anglesey, without any great opposition, conquered the island, and without any mercy, put all that withflood him to the fword. From thence designing to pass over to the continent, he caused a bridge of boats covered with planks to be built over the Menay (being an arm of the fea which parteth the isle from the main land) at a place called Moel y don, not far from Bangor, where the water is narrowest. The bridge being finished, which was fo broad as that threefcore men might pass in a breast, William Latimer, with a strong party of the best experienced foldiers, and Sir Lucas Thany, commander of the Gascoigns and Spaniards, whereof a great number ferved the king, paffed over, but could discover no fign, or any the least intimation of an enemy. But as foon as the tide began to appear, and the fea had overflown beside the bridge, down come the Welch fiercely out of the mountains, and fetting upon the disheartened English, killed or drowned their whole number, excepting Latimer, who by the fwimming of his horse got safe to the bridge. In this action, feveral worthy foldiers of the English side were lost; among whom were Sir Lucas Thany, Robert Clifford, Sir Walter Lyndsey, two brothers of Robert Burnel bishop of Bath, with many others; in all to the number of thirteen knights, feventeen young gentlemen, and two hundred common foldiers. A little after, or as some say before, another engagement passed between the English and the Welch, wherein the former lost fourteen colours, the Lords Audley and Clifford the younger being slain, and the king himself forced to retreat for safety to the castle of Hope.

And while these things passed in North Wales, the Earl of Glocester and Sir Edmund Mortimer acted vigorously with their forces in South Wales; and fighting the Welch at Lhandeilo Fawr, overthrew them with the loss of no considerable person, saving William de Valence the king's coufin-german, and four knights besides. Prince Lhewelyn was all this while in Cardigan, wafting and destroying all the country, and principally the lands of Rhys ap Meredith, who very unnaturally held with the king of England in all these wars. But being at length tired with action, with a few men privately separated himself from his army, and came to Buelht, thinking to ease and respite himself there undiscovered. But coming to the river Wye, he met with Edmund Mortimer and John Gifford, with a considerable party of the people of that country which Mortimer was lord of. But neither party venturing to affail the other, Prince Lhewelyn with one only fervant retired to a private grove in a neighbouring valley, there to confult with certain lords of the country, who had appointed to meet him. In the mean time Mortimer descends from the hill, with intention to fall upon Lhewelyn's men; which they perceiving, betook themselves to the bridge called Pont Orewyn, and manfully defended the paffage he was to cross. Mortimer could effect nothing against them, till he had gained the bridge, the river being impaffable; and to force them to quit it, feemed altogether impracticable. But at last, the river was discovered to be fordable a little below, and so Helias Walwyn was detached with a party through the river, who unexpectedly falling upon the backs of the defendants, eafily forced them to leave the bridge, and fave themfelves by flight. Prince Lhewelyn all this while in vain vain expected the lords of Buelht, and in fine continued to wait fo long, till Mortimer having passed over the bridge, furrounded the wood he was in with armed men. The prince perceiving himself to be betrayed, thought to make his escape to his men; but the English so closely pursued him, that before he could come in, one Adam Francton, not knowing who he was, run him through with his fword, being unarmed. The Welch still expected the arrival of their prince, and though but a few in number, fo gallantly maintained their ground, that in spite of the far greater number of the English, they were at length with much ado put to flight. The battle being over, Francton returned to plunder his dead; but perceiving him to be the prince of Wales, he thought himself to have obtained a fufficient prize, and thereupon prefently chopt off his head, and fent it to King Edward at Conwey, who very joyfully caused it to be placed upon the highest pinnacle of the tower of London. And thus fell this worthy prince, the greatest, though the last of the British blood, betrayed most basely by the lords of Buelht, and being dead, most unworthily dealt with by the king of England; who, contrary to all precedents, treated a lawful prince like a traitor, and exposed his crowned head to the derision of the multitude.

Not long after, David the prince's brother was delivered up by the Welch themselves, and in a parliament for that purpose assembled at Shrewsbury, was condemned to die; his head to be sent to accompany his brother's upon the tower of London, and his sour quarters to the sour cities of Bristol, Northampton, York, and Winchester. Then the king for the easier keeping the Welch in due subjection, built two strong castles in North Wales; the one at Conwey and the other at Caernarvon. There was none that now stood out besides Rhys Fychan of Ystratywy; and he finding David was gone, and himself like to do nothing to purpose, fairly yielded himself up to the Earl of Hereford, who by the king's orders committed him prisoner

fur greater number of the English, tary were at leafeth Paradel state of the ship of the date of the ship of t RINCE Lhewelyn and his brother David being so basely taken off, and leaving no body to lay any specious claim to the principality of Wales; King Edward by a statute made at Ruthlan, incorporated and annexed it to the crown of England; constituting feyeral new and wholesome laws; as concerning the division of Wales into several counties, the form and manner of writs and proceedings in trials, with many others not very unlike the laws and constitutions of the English nation. But all this could never win the affection of the Welch toward him; who by no means would own him as their fovereign, unless he would condescend and agree to live and reign among them. They had not forgot the cruel oppressions and intolerable infolencies of English officers; and therefore they flatly told him, they would never yield obedience to any other, than a prince of their own nation, of their own language, and whose life and conversation was spotless and unblameable. King Edward perceiving the Welch to be resolute and inflexible, and absolutely bent against any other prince, than one of their own country, happily thought of this politic, though dangerous expedient. Queen Eleanor was now quick with child, and ready to be delivered; and though the feafon was very fevere, it being the depth of winter, the king fent for her from England, and removed her to Caernarvon castle, the place designed for her to lye in. When the time time of her delivery was come, King Edward called to him all the barons and chief persons throughout all Wales to Ruthlan, there to confult about the publick good and fafety of their country. And being informed that his queen was delivered of a fon, he told the Welch nobility, that whereas they had oftentimes intreated him to appoint them a prince, he having at this time occafion to depart out of the country, with their request. upon condition they would allow of, would comply and obey him whom he should name. The Welch readily agreed to the motion only with the same reserve, that he should appoint them a prince of their own nation. King Edward affured them, he would name fuch an one as was born in Wales, could fpeak no English, and whose life and conversation no body could stain; whom the Welch agreeing to own and obey, he named his own fon Edward, but little before born in Caernarvon castle.

King Edward having by these means deluded the Welch, and reduced the whole country of Wales to his own devotion, began to reward his followers with other mens properties, and bestowed whole lordships and towns in the midst of the country upon English lords, among whom Henry Lacy Earl of Lincoln obtained the lordship of Denbigh; Reginald Grey, second fon to John Lord Grey of Wilton, the lordship of Ruthyn. This Henry Lacy was fon to Edmund Lacy, the fon of John Lacy, Lord of Halton Pomfret, and constable of Chester, who married Margaret the eldest daughter, and one of the heirs of Robert Quincy Earl of Lincoln. This Heary Lacy lord or Denbigh married the daughter and fole heir of William Longspear Earl of Salisbury, by whom he had iffue two fons, Edmund and John, who both died young, one by a fall into a very deep well within the castle of Denbigh; and a daughter named Alicia, who was married to Thomas Plantagenet Earl of Lancaster, who in right of his wife was Earl of Lincoln and Sarum, Lord of Denbigh, Halton Pomfret, and constable of Chester. After his death, King Edwar.l ward II. bestowed the said lordship of Denbigh upon Hugh Lord Spencer Earl of Winchester, upon whose decease, King Edward III. gave it, together with many other lordships in the marches, to Roger Mortimer Earl of March, in performance of a promise he had made, whilst he remained with his mother in France, that as foon as he should come to the posfession of the crown of England, he would bestow upon the faid Earl of March, to the value of a thoufand pound yearly in lands. But within few years after, Mortimer being attainted of high treason, King Edward bestowed the said lordship of Denbigh upon Montague Earl of Salifbury; but it was quickly reftored again to the Mortimers, in which house it continued, till the whole estate of the Earls of March, came with a daughter to the house of York, and so to the crown, Richard Duke of York, grandfather to Edward the fourth, having married the fole daughter and heir of the house of the Mortimers. And so it continued in the crown to Queen Elizabeth's time, who in the fixth year of her reign, bestowed the faid lordship upon her great favourite Robert Earl of Leicester, who was then created Baron of Denbigh. After him it returned again to the crown, where it has continued to this present year 1696, when his present Majesty granted a patent under the Great Seal to William Earl of Portland, for the lordships of Denbigh, Bromfield, and Yale. Some of the Welch representatives, perceiving how far such a grant encroached upon the properties and privileges of the fubject, disclosed their grievances to the honourable House of Commons, who after some consideration, resolved (nemine contradicente) that a petition should be presented to his Majesty by the body of the whole House, to request him ro recall his grant to the said Earl of Portland; which was accordingly done in the manner following:

May it please Your Most Excellent Majesty,

E Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the knights, citizens, and burgesses in parliament assembled; humbly lay before Your Majesty, That whereas there is a grant passing to William Earl of Portland, and his heirs, of the manors of Denbigh, Bromseld, and Yale, and divers other lands in the principality of Wales; together with several estates of inheritance, enjoyed by many of Your Majesty's subjects by virtue of antient grants from the crown:

That the faid manors, with the large and extensive royalties, powers, and jurisdictions to the same belonging, are of great concern to Your Majesty and the crown of this realm: and that the same have been usually annexed to the principality of Wales, and settled on the Princes of Wales for their support: and that a great number of Your Majesty's subjects, in those parts, hold their estates by royal tenure, under great and valuable compositions, rents, royal payments, and services to the crown and princes of Wales; and have by such tenure great dependance on Your Majesty and the crown of England; and have enjoyed great privileges and advantages with their estates, under such tenure.

We therefore most humbly befeech Your Majesty, to put a stop to the passing this grant to the Earl of Portland, of the said manors and lands; and that the same may not be disposed from the crown, but by consent of parliament: for that such grant, is in diminution of the honour and interest of the crown, by placing in a subject, such large and extensive royalties, powers, and jurisdictions, which ought only to be in the crown; and will sever that dependance, which so great a number of Your Majesty's subjects in those parts, have on Your Majesty and the crown, by reason of their tenure; and may be to their great oppression in those rights which they have purchased, and hitherto enjoyed with their estates: and also, on occafion of great vexation to many of Your Majesty's subjects, who have long had the absolute inheritance of several lands (comprehended in the said grant to the Earl of Portland) by antient grants from the crown.

His MAJESTY'S Answer.

Gentlemen,

Have a kindness for my Lord Portland; which he has deferved of Me, by long and faithful fervices; but I should not have given him these lands, if I had imagined the House of Commons could have been concerned; I will therefore recall the grant, and find some other way of shewing My favour to him.

The lordship of Ruthyn continued in the possession of the Greys, till the reign of Henry VII. when George Grey Earl of Kent, and Lord of Ruthyn, upon some bargain, passed the same over to the king, since which it has been in the possession of some of the Earls of Warwick, and afterwards came to the Middletons of Chirk castle in the county of Denbigh, where it still continues; being now enjoyed by the right worshipful Sir Richard Middleton, baronet.

But besides Henry Lacy and Reginald Grey, several other gentlemen of quality came at this time with King Edward to North Wales, who in some time became to be men of great possessions and sway in the country, whose posterity enjoy the same to this time. But he that expected to fare best in the distribution of these lordships and estates in Wales, was one Rhys ap Meredith a Welchman, and one that, contrary to the allegiance sworn to his prince, and his duty to his native country, had served the king of England, in all these wars, and done the greatest hurt of any man to the interest of Prince Lhewelyn. For these great services done to King Edward, Rhys expected no less than to be promoted to the highest preferments; whom the king after the Prince of Wales's overthrow first dubbed knight, and afterwards fed him with fair words and great

But when he, and all his neighbours and countrymen had fubmitted themselves to the government of the king of England; it happened that the Lord Pain Tiptoft, warden of the king's caftles which joined to Rhys's country, and the Lord Alan Plucknet, the king's steward in Wales, cited Sir Rhys ap Meredith, with all the rest of the country, to the king's court; which he refusing to do, alledging his antient privileges and liberties, together with the king's promifes to him, the aforesaid officers proceeded against him according to law. Whereupon Sir Rhys being greatly A.D. 1289. vexed to be thus ferved by those whose interest he had all this while fo warmly espoused, thought to be revenged of Pain Tiptoft, and the rest of the English. And to that end, having drawn together some of his tenants and countrymen, he fell upon the faid Pain Tiptoft; between whom feveral skirmishes afterwards happened, and feveral men were flain on both fides. King Edward was now at Arragon to compose the differences betwixt the kings of Arragon and Naples; but being informed of the disturbances which had happened in Wales, betwixt his ministers there, and Sir Rhys ap Meredith; he wrote to his latter, requiring him to keep the peace, till his return; at what time he would redress all grievances, and reduce matters to a good and reasonable order. But Sir Rhys having already waited fufficiently upon the king's promises, and being now in a good condition to offend his enemies by force of arms, would not give over the enterprize he faw fo promising, but marching with his forces to his enemies' lands, burnt and fpoiled feveral towns belonging to the English. Upon this, the king fent to the Earl of Cornwal, whom he had appointed his deputy during his abfence, to march with an army into Wales, to repress the infolencies, and to prevent any farther diforderly attempts of the Welch. The Earl accordingly pre-X pared an army and went against Sir Rhys's, whose army he quickly dispersed, and overthrew his castle of Dresolan, but not without the loss of some of his chief men. For as they besieged and undermined the said castle, the walls unexpectedly fell down, by which unlucky accident, several of the English were oppressed and bruised to death, among whom were the Lord Strassord, and the Lord William de Monchency. But within a while after, Robert Tiptost Lord Deputy of Wales, raised a very powerful army against Sir Rhys, and after a slaughter of 4000 of the Welch, took him prisoner, who the Michaelmas following, at the king's going to Scotland, was condemned and executed at York.

A.D. 1293. But the death of Sir Rhys did not put a final period to all the quarrels betwixt the English and Welch, for in a short time after, there happened a new occasion for the Welch to murmur against, and upbraid the government of the English over them. King Edward was now in actual enmity and war with the king of France; for the carrying on of which, he wanted a liberal subsidy and supply from his subjects. This tax was with a great deal of passion and reluctancy levied in divers places of the kingdom, but more especially in Wales, the Welch being never acquainted with such large contributions before, vio-acquainted with such large contributions before, vio-1204, lently stormed and exclaimed against it. But not being fatisfied with villifying the king's command, they took their own captain Roger de Pulesdon, who was appointed collector of the faid fublidy, and hanged him up, together with divers others who abettted the collecting of the tax. Then the West Wales men chose Maelgon Fychan for their captain, and so entering into Caermardhyn and Pembroke shires, they cruelly harraffed all the lands that belonged to the Enlish, and then returned laden with considerable booty. The Glamorganshire men, and they towards the fouth parts, chose one Morgan for their leader and set upon the Earl of Glocester, whom they forced to make his escape out of the country; and so Morgan was put in possession of those lands which the ancestors of the

Earl of Glocester had forcibly taken away from Morgan's forefathers. On the other fide, the North Wales men fet up one Madoc related to the last Lhewelyn flain at Buelht, who having drawn together a great number of men, came to Caernarvon, and fetting upon the English who in great multitudes had then resorted thither to a fair, flew a great many, and afterwards spoiled and ranfacked the whole town. King Edward being acquainted with these different infurrections and rebellions in Wales, and defirous to quell the pride and stubborness of the Welch, but most of all to revenge the death of his great favourite Roger de Pulesdon, recalled his brother Edmund Earl of Lancaster, and Henry Lacy Earl of Lincoln and lord of Denbigh. who with a confiderable army were ready to emback for Gascoign, and countermanded them into Wales. Being arrived there, they passed quietly forward, till they came to Denbigh, and as foon as they drew near unto the castle, upon St. Martin's day the Welch with great fury and courage faced them, and joining battle, forced them back with a very considerable loss. Polydore Virgil fays, (but upon what authority is not known) that the Welch obtained this victory rather upon the account that the English army was hired with fuch money as had been wrongfully taken out of the abbies and other religious places, so that it was a judgment from above, more than the force of the Welch, that overcame the English army. But be the cause of it what it will, it is certain the English were vanquished, upon which account King Edward came in person to Wales, and kept his Christmas at Aberconwey, where Robert Winchelfey archbishop of Canterbury being returned from Rome, came to him, and having done homage, returned honourably again to England: But as the king advanced farther into the country, having but one part of his army with him, the Welch fet upon and took most of his carriages, which contained a great quantity of victuals and provision, so that the king with all his followers were constrained to endure a great deal of hardships, in so much that at last water mixed with honey, and very X 2 coarfe coarse and ordinary bread with the saltest meat, were accounted the greatest delicacies for his Majesty's own table. But their mifery was like to be greater, had not the other part of the army come in time, because the Welch had encompassed the king round, in hopes to reduce him to the utmost distress, by reason that the water was fo risen, that the rest of the army could not get to him. But the water within some time after abating, the remainder of the army came in, whereupon the Welch prefently retired, and made their escape. One thing is very remarkable of King Edward during his diffress at Snowden, that when the army was reduced to very great extremity, a small quantity of wine was found, which they thought to referve for the king's own use. But he to prevent any discontent, which might thereupon be raised in his foldiers abfolutely refused to taste thereof, telling them, 'That in time of necessity all things should be common, and as he was the cause and author of their diffress, he would not be preferred before them in his diet.'

But whilft the king remained in Snowden, the Earl of Warwick being informed that a great number of Welch were affembled, and had lodged themselves in a certain valley betwixt two woods, chose out a troop of horse, together with some cross-bows and archers, and fet upon them in the night-time. The Welch being thus furprifed and unexpectedly encompassed about by their enemies, made the best haste they could to oppose them, and so pitching their spears in the ground, and directing the points towards their enemies, endeavoured by fuch means to keep off the horse. But the Earl of Warwick having ordered his battle fo, as that between every two horses there stood a cross-bow, so gauled the Welch with the shot of the quarrels, that the spear-men fell apace, and then the horse breaking easily in upon the rest, bare them down with fo great a flaughter, as the Welch had never received before. After this, King Edward to prevent any more rebellious attempts of the Welch, cut down all the woods in Wales, wherein, in any time of danger, they were wont to hide and fave themfelves. And for a farther fecurity, he repaired and fortified all the castles and places of strength in Wales. and built the castle of Bewmoris in the isle of Anglefey, and so having put all things in a fettled posture, and punished those that had been the occasion of the death of Roger de Pulesdon, he returned with his army into England. But as foon as the king had left the Welch, Madoc, who, as it is faid before, was chosen captain by the North Wales men gathered fome forces together, and came to Ofwestry, which presently yielded to him. And then meeting with the Lord Strange near Knookine, who with a detachment of the marchers came to oppose him, gave him battle, vanquished his forces, and miserably ravaged his country. The like fuccess he obtained a second time against the marchers, but at last they brought together a very great number of men, and met Madoc marching towards Shrewsbury, upon the hills of Cefn Digolh, not far from Camrs cafile, where after a bloody fight on both fides, Madoc was taken prisoner, and his army vanquished and put to flight. Then he was fent to London, and there fentenced to remain in perpetual imprisonment in the Tower, though others affirm, that Madoc was never taken, but that after feveral adventures and fevere conflicts, whereby the Welch were reduced to great extremities, he came in and submitted himself to the king, who received him upon condition he would not defift to pursue Morgan captain of the Glamorganshire men, till he brought him prisoner before him. Madoc having performed this, and the whole country being peaceable and undisturbed, several hostages from the chiefest nobility of Wales for their orderly and quiet behaviour were delivered to the king, who difposed of them into divers castles in England, where they continued in fafe custody till the end of the war, which was prefently commenced with Scotland.

In the 29th year of King Edward's reign, the prince A. D. 1301 of Wales came down to Chefter, and received homage of all the freeholders in Wales as follows, Henry

Earl of Lancaster for Monmouth; Reginald Gray for Ruthyn; Foulke Fitzwarren for his lands; the Lord William Martyn for his lands in Cemaes; Roger Mortimer for his lands in Wales; Henry Lacy Earl of Lincoln for Rhos and Rhyfoneioc; Robert Lord Montalt, for his lands, and Gruffydh Lord of Poole, for the lordship of Powys, at the same time paid their homage Tudor ap Grono of Anglesey, Madoc ap Tudor archdeacon of Anglesey, Eineon ap Howel of Caernarvon, Tudor ap Gruffydh, Lhewelyn ap Ednyfed, Gruffydh Fychan fon of Gruffydh ap Iorwerth, Madoc Fychan Denglfield, Lhewelyn bishop of St. Asaph, and Richard de Pulesdon. This last in the twelsth year of King Edward was constituted sheriff of Caernarvon for life, with the stipend of forty pounds sterling yearly. At the same place, Gruffydh ap Tudor, Ithel Fychan, Ithel ap Blethyn, with many more did their homage. Then the prince came to Ruthlan, where the Lord Richard de Sutton Baron of Malpas, paid homage and fealty for the said barony of Malpas. Thence the prince removed to Conwey, where Eineon bishop of Bangor, and David abbot of Maynan did their homage; as did Lewis de Felton son of Richard Felton, for the lands which his father held of the prince in Maelor Saefneg, or English Maelor. John Earl Warren fwore homage for the lordships of Bromfield and Yale, and his lands in Hope-Dale, at London in the chapel of the Lord John de Kirkby sometime bishop of Ely; as also a while after, Edmund Mortimer for his lands of Cery and Cydewen.

But besides all these, there paid homage to the prince of Wales at Chester, Sir Gruffydh Llwyd son of Rhys ap Gruffydh ap Ednysed Fychan, a stout and a valiant gentleman, though not very fortunate, and as Florus says of Sertorius, he was magnæ quidem, sed calamitesæ virtutis. He was knighted by King Edward the First, upon his bringing the first news of the queen's safe delivery of a son at Caernarvon castle, the king holding then a parliament at Ruthlan. This Sir Gruffydh continued for some time very gracious with the king of England, but observing at length the intolerable oppression and tyranny exercised by the English officers, especially by Sir Roger Mortimer Lord of Chirke and Justice of North Wales, rowards his countrymen the Welch, became so far concerned and discontented with such unwarrantable practices, that he presently brake out into open rebellion against the English. And the better to effect what he purposed, he treated with Sir Edward Bruce brother to Robert then king of Scotland, who had conquered Ireland, to bring or send over some forces to assist him in his design against the English, upon which account he fent him the following letter.

To this letter of Sir Gruffydh Llwyd's, Sir Edward Bruce returned the following answer.

MNIBUS defiderantibus a fervitute liberari falutem in eo. But for all that these letters passed betwixt them whether by reason that Bruce's terms were conceived unreasonable, nothing however was concluded upon, and the whole treaty came to nothing. But Sir Gruffydh, though without any hopes of assistance from the Scots, would not lay asside what he had once undertaken, and therefore having gathered all the forces he could, desperately set upon, and almost in an instant over-ran all North Wales and the Marches, seizing upon all the castles and strong holds through the country. But all to no purpose, for as the most violent stream is quickly over, so Sir Gruffydh's army was presently spent, and then being met with by a strong detachment of English, his party was easily discomfited, and himself taken prisoner.

The same year being the 15th of the reign of King A.D. 13224 Edward the Second, his eldest son Edward born at Windsor, in a parliament holden at York, was created Prince of Wales, Duke of Aquitaine, and Earl of Chester. This prince succeeded his father in the kingdom of England, by the name of Edward the Third, one of the greatest and most powerful mo-

Edward born at Woodstock, eldest son and heir to 1343-King Edward the Third, was created prince of Wales, upon the 12th day of May in the 17th year of his father's reign, being then about sourteen years of age.

He

He was a prince of incomparable qualifications, but fo fignally famous in martial affairs, that upon the account of the several actions he was engaged in, he received the name of Black Prince. He took John the French king prisoner at the battle of Poictiers, and shamefully vanquished the French army in the battle of Cressy. He did not live to enjoy the crown, but died one year before his father in the forty-sixth year of his age; no prince was in his lifetime better beloved, and after his death more lamented by the English nation, who had he lived to sit at the helm, no one doubted but that he would have exceeded as to all qualifications, the most glorious renown of the greatest of his ancestors.

In the time of Edward the Third, lived Sir Tudor Vaughan ap Grono, descended lineally from Ednyfed Vaughan, a person as to estate, power and interest, one of the chiefest in North Wales. Upon some motive, either of ambition or fancy, he affumed to himself the honour of knighthood, requiring all people to call and stile him Sir Tudor ap Grono, as if he did prognosticate and foresee, that out of his loins should arise those that should have power to confer that honour. King Edward being informed of fuch unparalleled prefumption, fent for Sir Tudor, and asked him, with what confidence he durst invade his prerogative, by affuming the degree of knighthood, without his authority, Sir Tudor replied, That by the laws and conflitution of King Arthur, he had the liberty of taking upon himself that title, in regard he had those three qualifications, which whofoever was endued with, could by those laws claim the honour of a knight. First, he was a gentleman. Second, he had a fufficient estate. And thirdly, he was valiant and adventurous; adding this withal, If my valour and hardiness be doubted of, lo, here I throw down my glove, and for due proof of my courage, I am ready to fight with any man, whatever he be. The king approving and liking well the man's forwardness and resolution, was easily persuaded toconfirm the honour of knighthood upon him. From this this Sir Tudor lineally descended Henry the Seventh, king of England, who was the son of Edmund Earl of Richmond, the son of Sir Owen Tudor, son to Meredith, the son of this Sir Tudor ap Grono.

After the death of the Black Prince, his fon Richard born at Bourdeaux in France, being but ten years of age, was created prince of Wales at Havering at Boure, on the twentieth day of November, A. D. 1377, and in the fiftieth year of Edward the Third, his grandfather's reign, whom he succeeded in the crown

Henry born at Monmouth, fon and heir to Henry the Fourth, king of England, upon the fifteenth of October, in the first year of his father's reign, was created prince of Wales at Westminster, who succeeded his father in the English crown by the name of Henry the Fifth.

Whilft Richard the Second reigned, one Owen ap Gruffydh Fychan, descended of a younger son of Gruffydh ap Madoc Lord of Bromfield, was not a little famous. This Owen had his education in one of the Inns of Court, where he became barrifter at law, and afterwards in very great favour and credit ferved King Richard, and continued with him at Flint Castle, till at length the king was taken by Henry Duke of Lancaster. Betwixt this Owen and Reginald Lord Gray of Rhuthyn, there happened no finall difference touching a common lying between the lordship of Rhuthyn, whereof Reginald was owner, and the lordship of Glendowrdwy in the posfession of Owen, whence he borrowed the name of Glyndwr. During the reign of Richard the Second, Owen as being a courtier, and in no mean esteem with the king, did overpower Reginald, who was neither so well befriended at court, nor beloved in the country as Owen was. But after King Richard's depofal, the scene was altered, and Reginald as then better befriended than Owen, entered upon the common, which occasioned Owen in the first year of Henry the Fourth to make his complaint in parliament against him, for thus divefting him of his right. No redrefs.

being found, the bishop of St. Asaph wished the lords to take care, that by thus flighting his complaint, they did not irritate and provoke the Welch to an infurrection, to which fome of the lords replied, That they did not fear those rascally barefooted people. Glyndwr therefore perceiving how his petition was flighted in parliament, and finding no other method to redrefs himself having several friends and followers, put himself in arms against Reginald, and meeting him in the field, overcame and took him prisoner, and spoiled his lordship of Rhuthyn. Upon this many reforted to him from all parts of Wales, some thinking him to be in as great favour now, as in King Richard's days, others putting in his head, that now the time was come when the Britains by his means might again recover the honour and liberties of their ancestors. But Reginald being thus kept prisoner, and very feverely handled by Owen, to terrify him into compliance with him in his rebellious actings, and not permitted to have his liberty, under ten thousand marks for his ranfom, whereof fix thousand to be paid upon the feast of St. Martyn, in the fourth year of Henry the Fourth, and to deliver up his eldest son with some other persons of quality as hostages for the remainder; the king at the humble fuit of Reginald, feeing no other way for his enlargement, gave way thereto, authorifing Sir William de Roos, Sir Richard de Grey, Sir William de Willoughby, Sir William le Zouche, Sir Hugh Huls, as also, John Harvey, William Vaus, John Lee, John Langford, Thomas Payne, and John Elnestow, to treat with Owen and his council, and to conclude in what they should conceive most expedient and necessary to be done for his redemption. Whereupon they confenting to give the fum demanded by Glyndwr for his deliverance, the king gave licence to Robert Braybroke bishop of London, as also to Sir Gerard Braybroke the father, and Sir Gerard the fon, then feoffees of divers lordships for this Reginald, to sell the manor of Hertelegh in the county of Kent, towards the raising of that money. And for the better enabling him to pay fo great a fine, the king was pleased to grant, that whereas it was enacted, that such persons who were owners of lands in Ireland, and did not there reside, should for such their neglect, forfeit two parts of the profits of them to the king; that notwithstanding this act, he should forfeit nothing for non-residence there, during

This good fuccess over the Lord Gray, together with the numerous refort of the Welch to him, and the favourable interpretation of the prophecies of Merdhyn, which some construed very advantageously, made the fwelling mind of Glyndwr overflow its banks, and gave him some hopes of restoring this island back to the Britains. Wherefore he fet upon the Earl of March, who met him with a numerous party of Herefordshire men, but when they came to close, the Welchmen proved too powerful, and having killed above a thousand men of the English, they took the Earl of March prisoner. King Henry upon this was frequently requested to ransom the Earl but to no purpose, for whether by reason that Mortimer had a juster title to the crown than himself he being the next heir in blood after King Richard who was as yet living, or because of some other private odium, the king would never hearken to his redemption, alledging that he wilfully threw himself into the hands of Glyndwr. But about the midst of August, to correct the presumptuous attempts of the Welch, the king went in person with a great army into Wales; but by reason of extraordinary excess of weather, which some attributed to the magic of Glyndwr, he was glad to return fafe.

But the Earl of March perceiving that he was not like to obtain his liberty by King Henry's means, whether out of compliance, by reason of his tedious captivity, or affection to the young lady, he agreed to take part with Owen against the king of England, and to marry his daughter; with them joined the Earl of Worcester, and his brother the Earl of Northumberland, with his son the valiant Lord Percy, who conspiring to depose the king of England, in the house of the archdeacon of Bangor, by their deputies divided

the realm amongst them, causing a tripartite indenture to be made, and to be fealed with every one's feal: hy which covenant all that country lying betwixt the Severn and the Trent, fouthward, was affigned to the Earl of March; all Wales, and the lands beyond the Severn, westward, were appointed to Glyndwr; and all from the Trent, northward to the Lord Percy. This was done (as fome faid) through a foolish credit they gave to a vain prophecy, as though King Henry was the execrable moldwarp, and they three the dragon, the lion, and the wolf which should pull him down, and distribute his kingdom among themfelves: After that they had exhibited articles of their grievances to King Henry, and divulged their reafons for taking up arms; at length they marched with all their power towards Shrewsbury to fight the king, depending mainly upon the arrival of Glyndwr and his Welchmen. But the matter was gone to far, that whether he came in or no, they must fight, and fo both armies being joined, the king's party prevailed, young Percy being slain upon the spot, and Douglas, besides most of the English of quality, who with a party of Scotch had come to the aid of the confederates, was taken prisoner, but afterwards honourably fet at liberty by the intercession of the prince of Wales. In the mean time the Earl of Northumberland was marching forward with a great party from the North, but the king having fettled matters about Shrewfbury, coming to York, and fending to him to lay down his arms, he voluntarily submitted and dismissed his forces. Then the king returning from Yorkshire, determined to pass over to North Wales, to chastise the presumptuous practices of the immorigerous Welch, who after his departure from Shrewfbury, had made in-roads into the marches, and done much hurt to his English subjects. But other business of greater confequence intervening, he detached his fon the prince of Wales, who took the castle of Aberystwyth, which was quickly again retaken by Owen Glyndwr, who thrust into it a strong garrison of Welch. But in the battle of Huske fought upon the fifteenth of March, the Welch received a very considerable blow from the prince's men, Glyndwr's son being taken prisoner, besides fifteen hundred more taken and slain. After this, we hear little of Glyndwr, excepting that he continued and persisted to vex and plague the English upon the marches, to the tenth year of King Henry's reign, when he miserably ended his life; being as Hol-Hollinsk. lingshed reporteth towards his latter days driven to that extremity, that despairing of all comfort, he fled and lurked in caves and other the most solitary places, fearing to shew his face to any creature, till at length being starved for hunger and lack of sustenance, he

But these rebellious practices of Glyndwr, highly exasperated King Henry against the Welch, insomuch that feveral rigorous and unmerciful laws were enacted, relating to Wales, which in effect destroyed all the liberties of the Welch subject. They were made incapable of purchasing any lands, or to be elected members of any county or borough, and to undertake any office, whether civil or military in any town incorporated. If any fuit at law happened betwixt an Englishman and a Welchman, the former could not be convicted, but by the sentence of an English judge, and the verdict of an English jury; besides that any Englishman who married a Welchwoman was thereby forthwith disfranchifed from all the liberties of an English subject. It was further enacted, that no Welchman should be in possession of any castle, or other place of strength, and that no victuals or armour should be brought into Wales, without a special warrant from the king or his council; and farther, that no Welchman was capable of undertaking the office of justice, chamberlain, sheriff or any other place of trust in any part of Wales, notwithstanding any patent or license heretofore given to the contrary. These, with many others most rigorous and unjust laws, particularly that forbidding any Welchman to bring up his children to learning, or to bind them apprentices to any trade or occupation, were enacted by the king against the Welch; so that nothing could cool his displeasure, but that a whole nation should be wrongfully oppressed, for the fault and miscarriage of one person. But one might think, that this was no politic method to secure a nation in its allegiance, which upon lighter affronts was used to defend its privileges; and therefore we may well attribute the quiet disposition of the Welch towards this time, to the moderation of Henry the Fifth, who within a little time succeeded his father in the crown of England.

Contemporary with Glyndwr was Sir David Gam. fo called by reason he had but one eye, the son of Lhewelyn ap Howel Vaughan of Brecknock, by Mawd the daughter of Iefan ap Rhys ap Ifor of Eluel. He was a great stickler for the Duke of Lancaster, and for that reason became a mortal enemy to Glyndwr, who having his education as is faid before, at one of the Inns of Court, got to be preferred to the fervice of King Richard the Second, who, as Walfingham, fays, made him his Scutifer, or shieldbearer. But being informed that his mafter Richard was deposed and murdered, and withal being provoked by feveral wrongs and affronts done him by his neighbour the Lord Gray of Rhuthyn, whom King Henry greatly countenanced, and looking upon Henry as an usurper, he caused himself to be proclaimed Prince of Wales. And for a better grace of the matter he feigned himself to be descended by a daughter from Lhewelyn ap Gruffydh the last prince; whereas in truth, he came paternally but from a younger brother of the house of Powys. But as ambition has no moderation, fo Glyndwr for a time acted the part of a prince, and summoned a parliament to meet at Machynlleth, whither the nobility and gentry of Wales appeared, and among the rest Sir David Gam, but not upon the fame defign with the rest, having an intention in this this meeting to murder Glyndyfwr. But the plot being discovered, and Sir David secured, he had liked to undergo present execution, had not Glyndyfwr's best friends, and the greatest upholders of his cause, pleaded in his behalf, by whose intercession he was prevailed with to grant Sir David both his life and liberty upon condition he would ever after continue true and loyal to him. Sir David promised very loudly, but with the reservation never to perform; for as soon as he came to his own country, where he was a person of very considerable sway and interest, he did exceedingly annoy and molest those that any way favoured or adhered to Glyndyfwr. While Sir David lay in prison at Machynlleth, for his attempt against Owen's life, this Englyn was made upon him.

i. e. David Gam thou wilt be a wanderer and an ill end will come to thee. Thou wilt be weak in battle, thou traitor to King Richard. So eagerly vexatious in thy flation that the devil wholly entered thy heart.

But Glyndyswr receiving information how that Sir David Gam contrary to the promise he had made at his releasement, endeavoured all he could to destroy his interest among the Welch, entered the marches, and among other tokens of his indignation, burned the house of Sir David, and as the report goes, calling to him one of Sir David's tenants, spake to him thus merrily in verse;

O Gweli di wr côch Cam
Yn ymofyn y Girnigwen
Dywed ei bôd hi Tan y Lan
A nôd y glo ar ei Phenn.

i. z. If thou feeft a red-haired, fquint-eyed * man looking for the loft sheep, tell him she is below the hill, and he may know her as she is marked with fire.

But Sir David had the luck to escape his reach, and was constrained to retire to England, where he lived for the most part at court, till the death of Glyndyfwr.

When King Henry the Fifth went with an army to France against the French king, Sir David Gam brought into his service a numerous party of stout and valourous Welchmen, who upon all occasions expressed their courage and resolution. In the battle of Agincourt, news being brought to the king that the French army was advancing towards him, and that they were exceeding numerous, he detached Captain Gam, to observe their motions, and to review their number. The Captain having narrowly eyed the French, found them twice to exceed the English, but not being in the least daunted at fuch a multitude, he returned to the king, who enquiring of him what the number of the French might be, he made answer, An't please you my liege, they are enough to be killed, enough to run away, and enough to be taken prisoners. King Henry was well pleased, and much encouraged with this resolute and undaunted answer of Sir David's, whose tongue did not express more valour than his hands performed. For in the heat of battle, the king's person being in danger, Sir David charged the enemy with that eagerness and masculine bravery, that they were glad to give ground, and fo fecured the king, though with the loss of much blood, and also his life, himself and his fon-in-law Roger Vaughan, and his kinfman Walter Llwyd of Brecknock, having received their mortal wounds in that encounter. When the king heard of their condition, how that they were past all hopes of recovery, he came to them, and in recompence of their good fervices, knighted them all three in the field, where they foon after died; and fo ended the life, but not the fame of the fignally valiant Sir David Gam.

Edward of Westminster, the sole issue of that unfortunate prince King Henry the Sixth, by Margaret the daughter of Rayner duke of Anjou, and titular king of Jerusalem, Sicily, and Arragon; was created Prince of Wales, in a parliament held at Westminster, on the fifteenth day of March, in the thirty-fecond year of his father's reign. When the day was lost at Tewkesbury, this young prince thought to make his escape by flight, but being unfortunately taken, and brought to the presence of King Edward the Fourth, who then fat upon the helm, made fuch refolute and unexpected replies, that he put the king into fuch a passion, that he smote him on the mouth with his gauntlet; and then his brother Richard the Crouchback, ran him into the heart with his dagger.

Edward, born in the Sanctuary at Westminster, the eldest son of King Edward the Fourth, was, after his father's expulsion out of England, in the forty-ninth year of King Henry the Sixth, created Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester, in the eleventh year of his father's reign. Upon the death of Edward the Fourth, this young prince being then at Ludlow in the marches of Wales, was presently sent for to London, and proclaimed king of England, but never lived to be crowned; for his uncle Richard duke of Glocester, who was appointed his protector, most villainously made him away, together with his brother the duke of York: and afterwards was himself proclaimed and

Edward the Fourth, in his wars against Henry the Sixth, was very much affifted by the Welch; in recompence of which fervice, he defigned to reform matters fo in Wales, as that intolerable oppression which they had hitherto endured, should be regulated and taken off. And to that end, he meant to eftablish a court within the faid principality, and constituted John bishop of Worcester president of the prince's council in the marches; who, together with Anthony Earl of Rivers, fat in the town-hall of Shrewsbury, and constituted certain ordinances for the public good and tranquility of that place. But the matter proceeded no farther; for the troubles and difquietness of his kingdom, coming heavy upon him, and the shortness of his reign after his establishment not permitting, he was forced to leave that to others, which himself thought once to bring about.

Edward, born at Middleham near Richmond in the county of York, the only fon of King Richard the Third, was at ten years of age created by his father

Arthur, the eldest son of King Henry the Seventh, born at Winchester, was in the seventh year of his father's reign created Prince of Wales. About the fifteenth year of his age, being then newly married to Katherine the Infanta of Spain, he was fent by his father into Wales, that by his presence he might keep that country in better awe. With him King Henry fent Dr. William Smith, afterwards made bishop of Lincoln, as president of his council; together with Sir Richard Pool, his chamberlain, Sir Henry Vernon, Sir Richard Crofts, Sir David Philip, Sir William Udal, Sir Thomas Englefield, Sir Peter Newton, and others, to be his counsellors and directors in his management of affairs. But the prince had not continued long there, but he fell fick at his castle at Ludlow, of which indisposition he shortly after died, and was buried with great folemnity in the cathedral church of Worcester. But the creating of his brother Henry duke of York Prince of Wales in his stead.

Wokins g. 789. flead, was deferred for about the space of a month, to discover whether the Lady Katherine was with child by Prince Arthur. But when it appeared for certain, she had not conceived; on the eighteenth day of February, in the nineteenth year of his father King Henry the Seventh's reign, Henry duke of York was created Prince of Wales.

King Henry the Seventh, being by his grandfather Owen Tudor descended out of Wales, and having fufficiently experienced the affection of the Welch towards him; first of those, who upon his first landing, opportunely joined him under Sir Rhys ap Thomas, and then of those, who under the command of Sir William Stanley, Lord of Bromfield, Yale, and Chirkland, aided him in Bosworth-field; could not in honour and equity, but bear some regard to the miserable state and condition of the Welch, under the English government. And therefore this prudent prince, finding the calamities of the Welch to be insupportable, and seeing what grievous and unmerciful laws were enacted against them by his predecessors, he took occasion to redress and reform the same, and granted to the Welch a charter of liberty and immunity, whereby they were released from the cruel oppression, which since their subjection to the English government, they had most cruelly sustained. And feeing the birth and quality of his grandfather Owen Tudor was called in question, and that he was by many upbraided of being of a mean and ignoble parentage; King Henry directed a commission to the abbot of Lhan Egwest, Dr. Owen Pool canon of Hereford, and John King herald at arms, to make inquisition concerning the pedigree of the said Owen; who coming to Wales, made a diligent enquiry into this matter; and by the affiftance of Sir John Leyaf, Guttyn Owen Bardh, Gruffydh ap Lhewelyn ap Efan Fychan, and others, in the confultation of the British books of pedigrees, they drew up an exact genealogy Vide Apof Owen Tudor, which upon their return they pre-pendix.

Edward, fon to Henry the Eighth, by the Lady Jane Seymour, his third wife; was born at Hampton Court, on the twelfth of October; and upon the eighteenth of the faid month, was created Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwal, and Earl of Chester.

King Henry the Seventh, had already abrogated those unreasonable and intolerable laws, which the former kings of England, particularly Henry the Fourth, had made against the Welch; and now, King Henry the Eighth, willing to make a plenary reformation of what his father had wifely begun, thought it necessary towards the good and tranquility of both nations, to make the Welch subject to the fame laws, and the fame government with the English. He understood that the usual hostilities and depredations were still continued and kept up by both fides upon the borders; and though his father had eased the yoke of the Welch, yet he perceived, that it did contribute but little towards the difannulling of that inveterate and implacable envy and animofity which raged in the marches. Therefore to remedy this, otherwife unavoidable, diftemper, he concluded that it was the only effectual method, to incorporate the Welch with the English, that they being fubject to the fame laws, might equally fear the vio-

A. D. 1536 lation of them. And accordingly, in the twenty-seventh year of his reign, an act of parliament passed to that purpose, which together with another act in the thirty-sifth year of his reign, made a plenary incorporation of the Welch with the English, which union has had that blessed effect, that it has dispelled all those unnatural differences which heretofore were so rife and irreconcilable.

When the Reformation was first established in Wales, it was a mighty inconveniency to the vulgar people, such as were unacquainted with the English tongue, that the bible was not translated into their native language. Queen Elizabeth was quickly apprehensive of the inconveniency which the Welch incurred, for the want of such a translation; and therefore in the eighth year of her reign, an act of parlia- 1569. ment was passed, whereby the bishops of Hereford, St. David's, St. Asaph, Bangor, and Landaff, were ordered to take care that the Bible containing the Old and New Testaments, with the Book of Common Praver, and Administration of the Sacraments, be truly and exactly translated into the British or Welch tongue, and that the same so translated, being by them perused and approved, be printed to such a number at least; as that every cathedral, collegiate and pachurch and chapel-of-ease within the said diocese where that tongue is vulgarly spoken, might be supplied before the first of March, anno 1566. And from that time forward, the Welch divine service should be used in the British tongue, in all places throughout those diocesses, where the Welch is commonly spoke, after the fame manner as it was used in the English tongue; and that the charge of procuring the faid Bible and Common Prayer, should equally depend betwixt the parson and the parish: the former being obliged to pay one half of the expence; and that the price of the book should be fet by the aforesaid bishops, or by three of them at the least. But this act of parliament was not punctually observed; for the Old Testament was wholly omitted, and only the New, with the Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments. then translated, which translation was chiefly owing to Richard bishop of St. David's, who was affisted by William Salusbury, a perfect critick in the Welch tongue, and one excellently conversant in all British antiquities. But in the year 1588, Dr. William Morgan, first bishop of Landass, and then of St. Asaph, undertook the translation of the whole Bible; and by the help of the bishops of St. Asaph and Bangor, Gabriel Goodman, dean of Westminster, David Powel, D. D. Edmund Price archdeacon of Merionyth, and Richard Vaughan, he effectually finished it. This was of fingular profit and advantage to the Welch, to have the whole Scripture read and perufed in their own native tongue; by which means they received a clearer Y 4 demondemonstration of the corruptions of the church of Rome, when they faw many of their principles apparently contradicting, and others not very firmly founded upon the Holy Scriptures. And on the other hand they perceived the necessity and advantage of the Reformation, they eafily discovered that the whole doctrine of the church of England was found and orthodox, and that they were now happily delivered from that popish slavery which their forefathers ignorantly adored; and therefore being convinced of the truth of their religion, they became, and continued generally, very strict adherents and firm observers of the doctrine and dis-

And here by the bye, I cannot but observe what a reverend writer has lately infinuated, relating to the christian religion planted in Wales. For that learned person in his funeral sermon upon Mr. Gouge, would fain induce the world to believe, that christianity was very corrupt and imperfect among the Welch, before it was purified by that, whom he terms apostolical man. Whereas it is notoriously evident, that since the Reformation was fettled in that country, and the Bible, with the Book of Common Prayer, translated into the Welch tongue, no place has been more exact, in keeping to the strict rubrick and constitution of the Church of England, both as to the substance and form of worship. But what may more truly be attributed to Mr. Gouge, is that fince his travels into Wales, and the propagating of his doctrine among the ignorant of that country, presbytery, which before had scarce taken root, has daily increased, and grown to a head.

Henry, eldeft fon of King James the First, being arrived to the age of seventeen years, was created prince of Wales, on the 30th of May, anno 1610, but he dying of a malignant fever, about two years after; his brother Charles being fifteen years of age, was created prince of Wales in his room, anno 1615. For joy of this new creation the town of Ludlow, and city of London, performed very great triumphs; and the more to honour this folemnity, the king made twentyfive knights of the Bath, all lords' or barons' fons; and the Inns of Court, to express their joy, elected out of their body forty choice gentlemen, to perform folemn justs and barriers.

Charles, eldeft fon of King Charles the First, by Henrietta Maria, daughter to King Henry the Fourth of France, was born May 29, 1630, and afterwards created prince of Wales.

Since the happy incorporation of the Welch with the English, the history of both nations, as well as the people is united; and therefore I shall not repeat that which is so copiously and frequently delivered by the English historians; but shall conclude with Dr. Heylyn, 'That since the Welch have been incorporated with the English, they have shewed themselves most loyal, hearty and affectionate subjects of the state; cordially devoted to their king, and zealous in defence of their laws, liberties and religion, as well as any of the best of their fellow-subjects.'

APPENDIX.

The return of a Commission sent into Wales by King Henry the Seventh, to search out the Pedigrees of Owen Tudor.

ENRY the Seventh, king of England, &c. fon of Edmund Earl of Richmond, son of Owen ap Meredith, and of Queen Catherine his wife, daughter to Charles the Sixth, king of France. Owen was fon of Meredith ap Tudor ap Gronw ap Tudor, ap Gronw, ap Ednyfed Fychan, baron of Brinfeingle in Denbigh-land, Lord of Kriceth, Chief Tuffice and chief of council to Lhewelyn ap Iorwerth Drwyndwn prince of all Wales. And in the time of Prince Llewelyn grew a variance between King John of England and the faid prince; whereupon Ednyfed came with the prince's host, and men of war, and also a number of his own people, and met these English lords in a morning, at what time these English lords were hostied and slain; and immediately brought their heads, being yet bloody, to the faid Prince Llewelyn. The prince, feeing the same, caused Ednysed Fychan, from thenceforth to bear in his arms or shield, three bloody heads in token of his victory, where he had born in his arms before a Saracen's head; and fo ever after this Ednyfed bore the faid arms, his fonand his fon's fon, unto the time of Tudor ap Gronw. ap Tudor ap Gronw, ap Ednyfed Fychan. And after this Ednyfed wedded one Gwenllian daughter to Rhys prince of South Wales, and had iffue by her Gronw: which Ednyfed Fychan had in Wales divers goodly houses, royally adorned with turrets and garrets; some in Anglesey, some other Caernaryonshire, and fome in Denbigh-land; but his chiefest manorhouse was in the commot of Crythin in Caernaryonshire, which was a royal palace, now decayed for want of reparations. Also he builded there a chapel in the worship of our lady, and had license of the pope for evermore to fing divine fervice therein for his foul, and his ancestors' and progenitors' souls always; and had authority to give his tythes and offerings to his * vide an chaplain there * starving; which Ednyfed Fychan was fon to Kyner ap Iers ap Gwgan, ap Marchudd, which was one of the fifteen tribes of North Wales, and fon to Kynan ap Elfyn, ap Mor, ap Mynan, ap Isbwis Newintyrche, ap Isbwis ap Cadrod Calch Efynydd. ## APPENDIX.

CIATIS quod cum Lewelinus princeps de Aberffraw & dominus Snawerden, nobis concesserit & firmiter promiferit, quod stabit provisioni venerabilium patrum Redulphi Cicestrensis episcopi & cancellarii nostri, & Alexandri Conventrensis & Lichfield episcopi. & dilectorum & fidelium nostrorum Richardi Mareschalli comitis Pembroch, Joannis de Lascy comitis Lincolniæ & constabularri Cestriæ, Stephani de Segrave Justiciarii nostri Angliæ, & Radulphi filii Nicholai Seneschalli nostri, una cum Idnevet Seneschallo ipsius Lewelini & Werrenoc fratre ejus, Imano Vachan & David Clerico, quam ipfi facturi funt fuper congruis emendis nobis faciendis, de omnibus excessibus nobis & nostris, ab eo & suis factis & de restitutione nobis & hominibus nostris faciendà de omnibus terris & possessionibus nostris & nostrorum per ipsum Lewelinum & Wallenses occupatis, occasione Werræ inter nos & ipsum motæ; simul etiam de recipienda restitutione a nobis & nostris, de omnibus terris ipsius Lewelini & hominum fuorum per nos & nostros occupatis, occasione Werræ prædictæ, & de assignando David filio ipfius Lewelini & Isabellæ uxori ejus primogenitæ filiæ & hæreredis. Gullielmi de Breus, rationabili portione ipsam Isabellam contingente, de terris quæ fuerunt prædicti Gullielmi partis lui, & de refusione pecuniæ nobis, facienda, pro prædictis excessibus con- $Z_4$

grue emendandis & portione prædicta assignanda; provisa tamen super hoc ab eisdem sussiciente securitate de sideli seruitio nobis præstando & de tranquilitate nobis & regno nostro Angliæ, observanda. Ita quod dampnum vel periculum, nec nobis nec regno nostro inde posit evenire. Et si pendente provisione prædicta, aliquid de novo emerserit emandandum, idem Lewelinus voluerit & concessirit, quod per prædictos provisores emendetur. Nos provisionem eorundem quam sacturi sunt super omnibus præmiss, gratam habemus & acceptam pro nobis, & nostris sicut præstatus Lewelinus pro se & suis & in hujus rei testimonium has literas patentes inde sieri secimus. Teste me ipso apud Salop septimo die Decembris & decimo septimo anno regni nostri.

EWELINO principi de Aberfraw falutem. · Sciatis quod recipimus in gratiam nostram, Gilbertum Mareschallum & omnes qui fuerunt imprisii Richardi Mareschalli tam de Anglia quam de Wallia qui ad pacem nostram venire voluerunt & eis reddidimus omnes terras & tenementa sua quæ de nobis tenuerunt, & de quibus dissessiti fuerunt occasione guerræ motæ inter nos & prædictum comitem, & nobis remanent quieta quæcunque super nos & nostros per prædictum comitem, vel suos imprissos occupata fuerunt quæ vobis duximus fignificanda. Volentes quod vobis innotefcant quæ penes nos acta funt in hac parte, & quia per venerabilem patrem Edmundum Cantuariensem archiepiscopum & co-episcopos suos captæ sunt treugæ inter nos & vos sub firma spe tractandi de pace inter nos & vos formanda & fortius firmanda. Mittimus propter hoc prædictum archiepiscopum & venerabiles patres Alexandrum Coventrensem & Lichfieldensem & Henricum Roffensem co episcopos suos ad partes marchiæ; ita quod erunt apud Salop die Lunæ in crastino sancæ trinitatis ; trinitatis: et rogamus vos quatenus ficut nostram de-fideratis amicitiam non omittatis quin in crastino die Martis loco tuto & competenti, quem prædictus archiepiscopus vobis significabit ipsi archiepiscopo & coepiscopus suis occuratis ad tractatum cum eis habendum super præmiss. In quorum etiam ore quædam quæ non duximus scripto commendanda posuimus vobis plenius exponenda; rogantes quatinus ficut decet taliter ea quæ reformationem pacis respiciunt & quæ ipsi plenius in hac parte vobis explicabunt audire cum effectu & eistem adquiescere velitis, quod non stet per vos quin sirmum & stabile pacis vinculum inter nos & vos roboretur ad nostrum pariter & vestrum commodum & honorem.

ILECTO & fideli fuo Richardo comiti Cornubiæ & Pictaviæ falutem. Sciatis quod treugæ captæ funt inter nos & Lewelinum principem de Aberfraw per venerabilem patrem Edmundum archiepiscopum Cantuarientem & episcopos secum adjuntos & quosdam alios fideles nostros propter hoc ad partes Walliæ destinatos duraturæ a festo Sancti Jacobi anno regni nostri decimo octavo usque in duos annos sequentes in hac forma. Quod omnes injuriæ & damnæ hinc inde facta infra ultimam treugam captam per venerabilem patrem Henricum Roffensem episcopum in media quadregissima proximo præterita per dictatores ejusdem treugæ emendabuntur, quod omnes terræ hinc inde occupatæ per ultimam guerram motam, restituentur his quibus postea sint oblatæ, homines etiam illi qui hinc inde recesserint a fidelitate dominorum suorum & se tenuerunt ex parte adversh libere revertantur. Ita quidem quod durantibus treugis prædictis in nullo occasionabuntur nec aliquid dampni vel mali eis siet occasione prædicta. Adjectum est etiam in eadem provisione treugarum; quod fi vos & dilectus & fidelis nofter noster Radulphus de Thorny nolueritis sub eisdemi treugis comprehendi bene placebit eidem Lewelino. Sin autem nihilominus, quod ad nos & alios fideles nostros eas firmiter observabit. Et sub tali conditione quod si forte tenere non velletis contra vos se defendet. Ita quod contra ipsum & defensionem suam nullum vobis faciemus nec facere poterimus per nos vel per aliquem de marchia vel alium interim confilium vel auxilium ad ipsum gravandum, & taliter sunt treugæ prædictæ ex parte ipfius Lewelini juratæ & affecuratæ & in adventu prædicti archiepiscopi ad nos similiter ex parte nostra eas jurari faciemus & assecurari, & ideo vobis mandamus firmiter injungentes, quatinus prædictis treugis fine difficultate aliqua adquiescentes eas teneatis & ex parte vestra eas teneri faciatis. Quia modis omnibus volumus quod eas teneatis & firmiter observetis. Quid autem inde facere proposueritis aperte responsum vestrum nobis sub festinatione scire faciatis. Teste rege apud Westmonasterium tricesimo die Tunii.

Radolphus Herefordensis episcopus, decanus Herefordiæ, Walterus de Clifford & Walterus de Bello Campo iterum constituti sunt dictatores emendarum, faciendarum & recipiendarum de interceptionibus factis, ut dicitur Lewelino principi de Abersraw, &c. et Morganô de Carleon quoad castrum Carleon & eisdem dictatoribus associati sunt prior de Wenloc & Joannes extraneus & debent convenire in crastino clausi Paschæ apud vadum de Montgomery ad consequendum quod priore die ad hoc constituto debuisset fuisse executum. Teste rege apud Northamton sexto die Martii.

REX omnibus ad quod præsentes literæ pervenerint. Sciatis quod concessimus bona side & sine malo ingenio & ratas habemus et gratas treugas captas apud Theoksburiam die Veneris in festo Sancti Benedicti, anno regni nostri vicesimo per venerabilem patrem Edmundum Cantuariensem archiepiscopum inter nos et omnes homines et imprisios nostros apertos ex una parte, et Lewelinum principem de Aberfraw et doninum de Snaudan et omnes homines et imprisios fuos apertos tam Wallenses quam alios ex alia parte duraturos a festo Sancti Jacobi, anno eodem usque in unum annum completum. Ita scilicet quod tam nos et nostri quam prædictus Lewelinus et sui simus in eisdem terris et tenementis, hominibus et homagiis in quibus fuimus prædicto die captionis treugarum ista-Salva Morgano de Carleon restitutione sua tam de terris quam de bonis et mobilibus suis quæ comes Gilbertus Mareschallus occuparerat, super eum infra treugas alias inter nos et ipfum Lewelinum ultimo captas. Siquid autem interim fuerit foris factum per captionem terrarum vel castrorum vel bonorum mobilium et manifestum de captione terrarum vel castrorum illorum terræ; et castra statim reddantur non expectata aliqua correctione emendatorum treugæ, fed de bonis mobilibus ita captis per ipsos correctores fiant emendæ, treugis nihilominus durantibus in suâ firmitate in forma prædicta. Ita quod hinc inde nulla namia capiantur pro aliqua interceptione facta infra treugas istas de bonis mobilibus, nec pro aliqua contentione ante captionem hujus treugæ orta, sed per ipsos correctores fiant. Nullus etiam receptet in potestate suà imprifios alterius inde emendæ ficut prædictum est durantibus treugis. Nullum etiam castrum novum firmetur in marchia vel dirutum reficiatur durantibus treugis, et terræ sint communes secundum formam treugarum quæ ultimo captæ fuerunt inter nos et ipfum Lewelinum. Lewelinum. Juraverunt autem in animam nostram ex parte nostra in hanc treugam bona side, et sine malo ingenio sideliter observandam usque ad prædictum terminum dilicti et sideles nostri Henricus de Aldithely. Joannes Lestrange et Henricus de Stafford, in cujus. &c. Teste me ipso apud Theokesburiam, undecimo die Julii, anno regni nostri vicesimo.

lielmus de Cantelupo de præcepto regis juravit in animam ipsius regis et idem David in propria persona sua corporate præstitit sacramentum. Et insuper se submiserunt jurisdictioni et inordinationi præfati domini legati quamdiu in Anglia legationis fungatur officio, ut partem contra præmissa venientem per censuram ecelefiafticam modis omnibus quibus melius viderit expedire, tam ad prædictum arbitrium observandum quam ad transgressionem contra illud perpetratam emendandam valeat coercere, ordine juris observato. men idem David vel fui, si forsitan contra prædicta venire presumpserint prius coram dicto domino legato vel aliquibus aliis ad hoc ab ipfo deputandis et partibus merito non fuspectis in confinio marchiæ loco eidem David et suis tuto legitime communicantur, si ad hoc vocati venirent : vel si legitimè vocati non venerint pro contumacibus habeantur nisi rationabile et sufficiens habeant impedimentum, finito vero prædictæ legationis officio sub forma prescripta et cohercioni et jurisdictioni domini Cantuariensi archiepiscopi et suc- . cessorum fuorum et ecclesiæ Cantuariensis se partes prædictæ fubmiserunt. Et sciendum quod per hanc pacem remanent domino regi et hæredibus fuis omnia homagia baronum Walliæ quieta, et remittuntur omnia incendia, homicidia, et alia mala tam ex parte Anglicorum quam Wallenfium perpetrata; ita quod ad invicem plene reconcilientur. Salvo præfati David jure fuo, si quod habet in aliis terris. Et si forte aliquis prædictorum arbitrorum ante hoc arbitrium completum in fata decefferit, vel per impedimentum rationabile prædicto arbitrio faciendo non possit interesse alius loco fuo fubstituetur qui neutri partium merito suspectus habeatur: ad hoc præfati episcopus de Sancto Afaph Idnevet et Ignan et Griffinus filius Rotherich præstiterunt sacramentum, quod quantum in eis est, prædicta fideliter observabunt et ab ipso David et suis modis omnibus quibus poterunt, facient observari: ad majorem autem hujus rei securitatem factum est hoc scriptum inter ipsos regem et David in modo chirographi. Ita quod parti remanenti penes ipsum dominum regem appositum est sigillum ipsius una cum sigillo prædictorum

DAVID filio Lewelini salutem. Bene recolimus qualiter nos vobis nuper in mandatis dedimus, quod coram nobis apud Wigorniam compareretis ad providendum arbitros qui loco eorum qui primo ad hoc electi fuerint et qui ad partes recesserunt transmarinas, justitiam secundum formam pacis inter et vos provise singulis conquerentibus exhiberent; et in arbitrio prædicto fecundum formam debitam procederent et fimiliter ad justitiam recipiendam de portione uxorem vestram contingente de hæreditate sua: et similitar ad standum recto super his de quibus seneschallus de monte alto et aliis de vobis sunt conquesti. Et quia ad diem et locum vobis præfixos non accessistis, fed literas vestras nobis misistis; continentes quod tres ex vestris ad nos loco vestro destinastis, ex quibus tantum unus ad nos accessit qui ad præmissa adimplenda nullam potestatem habuit; unde quibusdam ex nostris visum fuerat quod hoc malitiose et ut subterfugium quæreretis per vos factum fuit. Nos tamen hoc non credentes sed fidelitatem vestram adhuc magis probare volentes, vobis mandamus in fide qua nobis tenemini, præcipiendo quatinus omni occasione postposita personaliter naliter compareatis apud Salop, die dominica ante dominicam palmarum coram fidelibus nostris quos iiluc duxerimus transmittendos ad consentiendum in personas certas, ad procedendum in arbitrio prædicto loco eorum qui ad partes transmarinas recesserunt et ad faciendum in eodem arbitrio id quod adhuc restat faciendum; et ad recipiendum justitiam de portione uxorem vestram de hæreditate sua contingente et ad standum recto seneschallo Cestriæ et aliis de vobis conquerentibus, Quod si personaliter ad hoc faciendum venire non possitis tales loco vestro mittatis qui plenam potestatem habeant hæc omnia nomine vestro faciendi. Nos enim vobis et vestris per eos quos ibidem mittimus aut per nofmet ipsos salvum et securum provideri faciemus conductum. Teste rege apud Wudestock decimo nono die Februarii.

Anno domini millesimo ducentesimo quadragesimo primo, die dominica proxima ante inventionem fanctæ crucis affignata, David filio Lewelini quondam principis Norwalliæ et marchionibus ad confentiendum in arbirros fustituendos loco absentium et ad faciendam et recipiendam justitiam secundum formam pacis conventæ inter dominum regem et dictum David comparuit Thudius feneschallus ipsius David, cancellarius et Phillippus filius Ibor clericus ex parte David procuratores; oftendentes literas ipfius David, in quibus dictus David promittebat se ratum habiturum quicquid per ipsos fieret secundum formam pacis supradictæ. Radulphus vero de mortuo mari et Rogerus seneschallus Cestriæ et Griffinus pro se et aliis marchionibus comparuerunt; petentes instanter quod secundum dicta testium productorum coram domino Stephano de Segrave, et conjudicibus suis vicem domini regis gerentibus apud Salop eisdem exhiberetur justitiæ complementum. Sed contra procuratores præfati David afferebant dictos restes non esse receptos secundum formam pacis. Quare fecundum dicta eorum non dicebat nec poterat judicari. Tandam continuata die et altercatione magna super hoc et aliis habitata inter partes, partes, forma pacis prædictæ producta in medio vifaque et perfecta loco absentium arbitrorum scilicet domini Ottonis Sancti Nicholai in carcere Tulliano diaconi cardinalis, domini Papæ quondam legati in Anglia Wigornensis et Norwicensis episcoporum subrogati funt per dominum regem de confensu dictorum procuratorum episcopus Coventrensis, Joannes filius Galfridi et Herebertus filius Matthæi, et Walterus de Clifford: quibus data est eadem potestas quam haberent absentes si præsentes essent secundum formam pacis prædictæ et affignata est dies partibus à die Pentecostes proximo in unum mensem apud pontem de Maneford ultra Salop ad probanda hinc inde five per productos teftes; non obstante productione jam facta per alios et quolibet probationis genere sive per instrumenta, sive alio modo quæ voluerunt et sibi noverint expedienda; et illa die dabitur alia ad judicium audiendum fecundum probata coram eisdem arbitris juxta formam pacis superius prælibatæ.

Rex, &c.

DAVID filio Lewelini quondam principis Norwalliæ falutem. Ex certa quorundam relatione didicimus quod vos contra juramentum nobis præftitum quossdam fratres Griffini filii Madoc et etiam quossdam homines nostros de Keri, qui homagia nobis fecerunt vobis confæderatis et ab obsequio et fidelitate nostra subtraxistis et fratres prædicti Griffini contra nos in terra vestra receptatis. Tres quidem de seneschallis vestris in succursum eorum qui expugnant dilectum et fidelem nostrum Radulphum de mortuo mari destinastis cædes et incendia per vos et vestros in terra sua et terris aliorum fidelium committendo, terras etiam quæ in curia nostra abjudicatæ suerunt Oweno Vaghan et nepotibus suis, eis contra justitiam desorciatis, non permittentes quod executio siat de his quæ in curia no-

stra sunt considerata. Quandam etiam navem Cestriæ quæ in potestate vestra applicuit cartata blado et aliis victualibus arestari fecistis per vos et gentem vestram, in .nullo his quorum bladum et victualia fuerint inde satisfacientes super quibus non modicum admiramur et movemur; et multo fortius quod cum nuper missifiemus nuntios vestros solempnes usque Salop, utpote venerabilem patrem Henricum Coventrensem et Lichfieldensem episcopum, et dilectos et fideles nostros Joannem filium Galfridi, et Henricum de Aditheleg paratos ad emendas faciendas et recipiendas de interceptionibus factis, tam ex parte nostra, quam ex parte vestra, vos tanquam in contemptum nostrum prædictis fidelibus nostris non occurriftis, nec per aliquos de vestris in eorum occursum mittere curastis, quod quidem ægre nos movet cum tot et tantas injurias quas longum esset enumerare contra nos et nostros nullo modo attemptare debuistis: et ideo vobis mandamus quod prædictos fideles nostros tam fratres prædicti Griffini quam homines nostros de Keri quos a fidelitate nostra subtruxistis ad fidem nostram redire faciatis. Non impedientes quin prædictus Owenus Vaghan et nepotes sui secundum abjudicatum est in curia nostra terris suis gaudere possint et eas pacifice possidere. Id etiam quod contra dilectum et fidelem nostrum Radulphnm de mortuo mari et alios fideles nostros et etiam quod de navi illa Cestrensi attemptastis, sic emendari faciatis; quod nobis non relinquatur materia injurias prædictas gravius ulcifcendi quod nollemus. omitatis quin citra festum Sancti Petri ad vincula nobis fignificetis qualiter dampna et injurias prædictas, quæ nullo modo diffimulare poterimus nobis emendare volueritis. Teste rege apud Merlebergh, quarto decimo die Tulii.

eiusdem Griffini ex altera; scilicet quod praedicta Senana manucepit pro praedicto Griffino viro fuo quo dabit domino regi fexcentas marcas, ut rex eum et praedictum Owen filium fuum liberari faciat a carcere detineri. Et ut rex postea judicio Curiae suae secundum legem Walensem ei et haeredibus suis habere faciat super portione quae eum continget de haereditate quae fuit praedicti Lewelini patris sui et quam praedictus David ipsi Griffino deforciavit. Ita si quod idem Griffinus vel haeredes sui per considerationem curiae domini regis reciperent portionem quam fe dicunt contingere de haeredicate praedicta, eadem Senana manucepit pro praedicto Griffino et haeredibus suis quod ipse et haeredes sui imperpetuum inde reddent domino regi et haeredibus suis trecentas marcas annuas. tiam partem in denariis et tertiam partem in bobus et vaccis, et tertiam partem in equis per aestimationem legalium hominum liberandas vicecomiti Salop, apud Salop, et per manum ipsius vicecomitis ad faccarium regis deferendas et ibidem liberandas scilicet unam medietatem ad festum Sancti Michaelis et aliam medietatem ad pascham. Eadem etiam Senana manucepit pro praedicto Griffino viro suo et haeredibus fuis quod firmam pacem tenebunt cum praefato David fuper portione quae eidem David remanebit de haereditate praedicta; manucepit etiam Senana pro praefato Griffino et haeredibus suis, quod si aliquis Walensis aliquo tempore regi vel haeredibus suis rebellis extiterit, praefatus Griffinus et haeredes sui ad custum suum proprium ipsum compellent ad satisfaciendum domino regi et haeredibus suis. Et de his omnibus supradictis observandis, dicta Senana dabit domino regi David et Rothery filios fuos obfides: Ita tamen quod si de praefato Griffino et Oweno filio suo qui cum co est in carcere humanitus contingat antequam inde deliberentur; alter praedictorum filiorum eidem Senanae reddetur reliquo obside remanente: juravit insuper Senana tactis facro-fanctis evangeliis pro se et praefato Griffino et haeredibus fuis quod haec omnia firmiter observabunt. Et manucepit quod praesatus Grissinus

idem jurabit cum à carcere liberatus fuerit, et super praemissis se submissi nomine dicti Griffini jurisdictioni Herefordensis et Conventrensis episcoporum, Ita quod praefati episcopi, vel alter eorum quem dominus rex elegerit ad requifitionem ipfius regis per fententias excommunicationis in personas et interdicti in terras eorum coherceant ad omnia praedicta et singula observanda. Haec omnia manucepit praedicta Senana et bona fide promisit se facturam et curaturam quod omnia impleantur, et quod praefatus Griffinus cum liberatus fuerit, et haeredes fui hac omnia grata habebunt et complebunt et instrumentum suum inde dabunt domino regi in forma praedicta. Ad majorem fiquidem hujus rei securitatem factum est hoc scriptum inter ipsum dominum regem et praefatam Senanam nomine praefati Griffini viri sui. Ita quod parti remanenti penes ipsum dominum regem appositum est sigillum praesati Griffini per manum praefatae Senanae uxoris fuae una cum figillo ipfius Senanae; et parti remanenti penes ipfam Senanam nomine praefati Griffini appositum est sigillum ipsius domini regis: de supradictis etiam omnibus complendis et firmiter observandis dedit praedicta Senana nomine praefati Griffini domino regi plegios subscriptos, viz. Radulphum de Mortuo Mari, Walterum de Clifford, Rogerum de Monte alto senescallum Cestriae, Mailgun filium Mailgwn, Mereduc filium Roberti, Griffinum filium Maddoc de Baunfeld, Howel et Mereduc fratres ejus, Griffinum filium Wennwen, qui haec omnia pro praefata Senana manuceperunt et cartas suas ipsi domino regi inde fecerunt. Actum apud Salop die Lunae proxima ante affumptionem beatae Mariae anno ipsius regis vicesimo quinto.

OMNIBUS hoc fcriptum vifuris Rogerus de Monte Alto fcnefchallus Ceftriae falutem. Sciatis quod ego me conflituti plegium Senanae uxoris Griffini filii Leolini quondam principis Norwalliae, et manu cepi A 2 2 pro pro ea erga dominum meum Henricum regem Angliae illustrem, quod omnia quae conventionavit eidem domino meo nomine praesati viri sui a carcere in quo David frater ejus eos detinet et pro portione quae ipsum Griffinum contingit de haereditate quae fuit praedicti Leolini patris suis et quam praesatus David frater ejus ei desorciat, domino regi firmiter observabit. In cujus rei testimonium huic scripto sigillum meum apposui. Actum apud Szlopesbury die Lunae ante assumptionem Beatae Mariae, anno regni ipsius vicassimo quinto.

Sciant praesentes et futuri quod ego Mereducus filius Howel, tactis sacro-sanctis juravi quod ab isto die in antea omnibus diebus vitae meae ero ad fidelitatem domini regis Angliae, et serviam ei fideliter et devote cum omnibus viribus meis et toto posse meo quandocunque indiguerit servitio meo, et treugam inter dominum Radulphum de Mortuo Mari et me initam usque ad festum S. Michaelis anno regni regis Henrici vigesimo quinto ex parte mea fideliter observabo: et tam ad fidelitatem domino regi in perpetuum observandum quatu ad treugas praedictas observandas usque ad terminum praedictum supposui me jurisdictioni domini Herefordensis episcopi, et domini Coventrensis et Lichfieldensis episcopi, vel alterius eorum, quem dominus rex ad hoc elegerit, ut si in aliquo contra praedictam fidelitatem domini regis, vel contra observantiam praedictarum treugarum venerit, liceat eis vel eorum alteri quem dominus rex ad hoc elegerit personam meam et omnes meos excommunicare et terram meam interdicere, donec de transgressione ipsam satisfecero ad plenum. Et si forsitan infra praedictum festum S. Michaeli inter praedictum Radulphum de Mortuo Mari et me nulla pax fuerit formata, licet post festum illud bellum moveant praedicto Radulpho, non obligabit me praedictum juramentum dum tainen erga dominum regem fidelitatem observam continuam, ficut praedictum praedictum est. Etsi bellum post praedictum terminum inter nos moveatur, nihilominus dominus refustinebit quod ego et mei receptemur in terra sua sicut alii sideles sui. Ad praedicta autem observanda domino regi et haeredibus suis obligo me per juramentum praedictum, et per sigilli mei appositionem quod huic scripto apposui, ad majorem confirmationem praedictorum. Actum in crastino assumptionis Beatae Mariae, anno regni regis Henrici vigesimo quinto.

Sciatis quod concessi domino meo Henrico regi Angliae illustri filio domino Joannis regis: quod deliberabo Griffinum fratrem meum quem teneo incarceratum una cum filio fuo primogenito et aliis qui occasione praedicti Griffini sunt in parte mea incarcerati, et ipsos eidem domino meo regi tradam. Et postea stabo juri curiae ipsius domini regis tam super eo, utrum idem Griffinus debeat teneri captus quam super portione terrae quae fuit praedicti Leolini patris mei, si qua ipsum Griffinum contingere debeat, secundam consuetidinem Walensium. Ita quod pax servetur inter me et praedictum Griffinum fratrem meum quod caveatur de ipfa tenenda secundum considerationem curiae ipsius domini regis, et quod tam ego quam praedictus Griffinus portiones nostras que nos contingent de praedictis terris tenebimus in capite de praedicto domino rege. Et quod fatisfaciam de damnis et injuriis illatis fibi et suis secundum confiderationem praedictae curiae vel malefactores ipsos, ipsi domino regi reddam omnia homagia quae dominus Johannes rex pater ejus habuit, et quae dominus rex de jure habere debet; et spe-cialiter omnium nobilium Wallensium. Et quod idem dominus rex non dimittit aliquent de fuis captivis quin ipsi domino regi et suis remaneant seisinae suae. Et quod terra de Engusmere cum pertinentiis suis in perpetuum remanebit domino regi, vel haeredibus suis, et quod de caetero non receptabo vilagas vel foris banniatos ipfius domini regis, vel baronum fuorum de marchia in terra mea, nec permittam receptari; et de omnibus articulis supradictis, et singulis sirmiter et in perpetuum observandis, domino regi, et hacredibus fuis, pro me et haeredibus meis cavebo per obsides et pignora et aliis modis quibus dominus rex dicere vo-luit vel dictate. Et in his et in omnibus aliis stabo voluntati, et mandatis ipfius domini regis et juri parebo omnibus in curia fua. In cujus rei testimonium, praesenti scripto sigillum meum appendi. Actum apud Atrieum juxta fluyium Elvey de S. Asapho in festo decollationis S. Johanni Baptiltae, anno praedicti domiregis Henrici vigetimo quinto.

Sciendum quod illi qui capti detinentur cum praedicto Grifino, eodem modo tradentur domino regi donec per curiam fuam confideratum fuerit, utrum et quomodo debeant deliberari. Et ad omnia firmiter tenenda, ego David juravi fuper crucem fanctam quam coram me feci deportari. Venerabilis etiam pater Howelus epifcopus de S. Præterea concessi pro me et hæredibus meis quod si ego, vel hæredes mei contra pacem domini regis, vel hæredium fuorum, vel contra articulos prædictos, aliquid attentaverimus tota hæreditas nostra domino regi, et hæredibus suis incurratur. De quibus omnibus et fingulis supposui me, et hæredes meos, jurisdictioni archiepiscopi Cantuariensis, et episcoporum Londinensis, Herefordensis, et Coventrensis, qui pro tempore præerunt, quod omnes, vel unus eorum quem dominus rex ad hoc elegerit, possit nos excommunicare, et terram nostram interdicere, si aliquid contra prædicta attentaverinius. Et procuravi quod episcopi de Bangor et de S. Asaph chartas fuas domino regi fecerunt per quas concesserunt, quod omnes fententias tum excomunicationis quam interdicti à prædictis archiepiscopo, episcopis, vel aliquo eorum, ferendas, ad mandatum eorum exequentur.

A VID filius Lewelini quondam principis Norwalliæ, Salutem. Noverint univerlitas vestræ me spontanea voluntate mea pepegisse domino meo Henrico Dei gratia Angliæ, quod ego et hæredes mei eidem domino regi, et hæredibus suis omnibus diebus vitæ nostræ constanter et fideliter serviemus, nec aliquo tempore contra eos erimus: quod si forte evenerit, quod à fideli fervicio fuo, vel hæredum fuorum, quod absit, recesserimus, tota terra nost:a erga ipsum dominum regem et hæredes suos incurratur, et in usus eorum perpetuis cedat temporibus. Hanc autem pactionem et concessionem sigilli mei appositione roboravi, et ad majorem hujus rei declarationem venerabiles patres Bangorenfem, et de S. Afaph episcopi, ad petitionem meam præsenti scripto sigilla sua apposuerunt. Actum apud Rothetan tricesimo primo die Augusti.

LLUSTRI viro domino Henrico Dei gratia regi Anglorum, &c. abbates Haberconwiæ, et de Kemere Cisterciensis ordinis inquisitores dati a domino Papâ, salutem in domino. Mandatum domini Papæ recipimus in hæc verba, 'Innocentius Episcopus, fervus servorum Dei, dilectis filiis abbatibus de Haberconwiæ, & de Kemere Cifterciensis ordinis Bangorum diocesis salutem et apostolicam benedictionem. Ex parte dilecti filii nostri nobilis viri David principis Norwalliæ fuit propositum coram nobis, quod cum inter ipsum, quem parentes ejus in alumnum Romanæ ecclesiæ donaverunt, et charissimum in Christo silium nostrum regem Anglorum illustrem bellum longo tempore perdurasset, tandem postquam fuit in venerabilem fratrem nostrum episcopum de S. Asaph et collegas ipsius de stando hinc inde eorum arbitrio super omnibus querelis juramento a partibus præstito concorditer bonis viris mediantibus conpromissum. rex, non attendens quod pendente illorum arbitrio, fibi fuper hoc aliquid attentare non licebit in prædictum principem ex insperato hostiliter iruit ad præstandum, quod super prædictis de quibus conpromissum fuerit & juratum, ac aliis ipfius regis, mandare per vim computit, & metum qui cadere poterat in constanten.

Cum igitur ea quæ vi & metu fiant, carere debeant robore firmitatis, discretioni vestræ per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus inquisita super hoc diligentius veritate, si rem inveneritis ita esse, auctoritate nostra prædictum principem ab observatione sic extorti juramenti penitus absolventes, sententia, si qua occasione ejusmodi in ejus personam, vel terram ab aliquo forsan tota fuerit, juxta formam ecclesiæ sine disficultate qualibet, ficut justum fuerit relaxetis. Testes vero, &c. Datum Januæ septimo calendas Augusti pontificatûs nostri anno secundo. Hujus igitur autoritate muniti vobis mandamus quatenus in vigilia S. Agnetis Virginis, apud Keyrus in ecclesia Gustefend coram vobis compareatis, super contentis in autentico dicto principi responsuri, si vobis videritis expedire, Ifti Isti sunt ARTICULI intimati Domino Leolino Principi Wallia, et populo ejustdem loci, ex parte Archiepiscopi supra dicti.

Tertio, Quia rogamus eos et supplicamus eis prosanguine Jesu Christi, quatenus venire velint ad unitatem cum gente Anglorum, et ad pacem domini regis, quam eis intendimus, quanto melius poterimus procurare.

Quarto, Volumus eos feire quod in his partibus

Quinto, Volumus cos attendere quod post recessium nostrum non invenient aliquem, qui ita velit sua amplecti negotia promovenda, qui vellemus, si placeret. Altissima vita nostra temporali corporum pacem ho-nestam et stabilem perpetuo procurasse.

Sexto, Quia fi nostras preces spreverint et labores, statim intendimus eorum pertinaciam scribere summo pontifici et curiae Romanae, propter peccata mortalia, quae multiplicantur occasione discordiae omni die.

Septimo, Noverint quod nifi citius ad pacem venerint aggravabitur eis bellum, quod non poterunt susti-nere, quia crescit regia potentia omni die.

Octavo, Noverint quod regnum Angliae est sub speciali protectione sedis apostolicae, et quod Romana curia plus inter regna caetera diligere consuevit-

Nono,

Nono, Quod eadem curia nullo modo volet permittere statum regni Angliae vacillare, quod sibi specialibus obsequiis est devotum.

Decimo, Amarissimè plangimus hoc quod dicitur. Wallenses crudeliores existere Saracenis; quia cum Saraceni capiunt Christianos, eos servant pecunia redimendos, quos Wallenses captos dicuntur illico jugulare quasi solo sanguine delectentur; immo quod est deterius, quos promittunt redimi, tradunt accepta pecunia jugulandos.

Undecimo, Quod cum consueverit deum et personas ecclesiasticas revereri, a devotione hominum videntur multipliciter recessisse, qui in tempore sanctissimo in redemptoris injuriam moverunt seditionem, homicidia et incendia perpetrantes, in quo eos nullus

Duodecimo, Petimus ut tanquam veri Christiani ad cor redeant pœnitentes, quia cœptam discordiam non possent continuare etiam si jurassent.

Tertiodecimo, Petimus ut nobis fignificent quibus modis velint et valeant turbationem pacis regiae, lae-fionem reipublicae, te mala alia emendare.

Quartodecimo, Ut fignificent nobis qualiter valeat ipfa concordia stabiliri, frustra enim pax firmari videbitur quae tam assidue violatur.

Quintodecimo, Ut si dicant leges suas vel fœdera ex pacto inito non servari, nobis significent quae sunt illa.

Sextodecimo, Noverint quod etiam posito quod eis derogatum fuisset, quod nescimus, nullo modo licebit eis quasi essent judices in causa suà taliter majestatem regiam impugnare.

Septimodecimo, Quod nisi modo pax fiat proceditur contra eos forsitan ex decreto militiae, sacerdoti, et

companion de la constata del constata del constata de la constata della constata K Everendissimo patri in Christo domino J. de gratia cantuaffensi archiepiscopo totius Angliæ primati, suus humilis et devotus filius Leolinus princeps Walliæ, dominus Snaudon, salutem et filialem dilectionem cum omnimoda reverentia, subjectione et honore, sanctae paternitati vestræ pro labore vobis quasi intolerabile quem assumpsistis ad præsens pro dilectione quam erga nos et nostram nationem geriris, omni qua possumus devotione regratiantes vobis affurgimus; et eo amplius quod contra domini regis voluntatem venistis prout nobis intimaftis. Cæterum quod nos rogastis ut ad pacem domini regis veniamus, fcire debet vestra fanctitas quod ad hoc prompti fumus, dummodo idem dominus rex pacem debitam et veram nobis et nostris velit observare. Ad hoc licet gauderemus de mora vestra facienda in Wallia, tamen per nos non eritis impediți quin pax fiat, quantum in nobis est, quam optamus per veltram industriam magis quam alicujus alterius roborari. Et speramus nec per Dei gratiam erit opportunum propter nollram pertinaciam aliquid scribere domino Papæ. Nec vestras paternas preces ac graves labores spernemus, sed eas amplicationer omni cordis affectu ut tenemur. Nec erit opus quod dominus rex aggravet contra nos manum, cum prompti fumus fibi obedire juribus nostris et legibus nobis ut præmittatur refervatis.

Et licet regnum Angliæ fit Curiæ Romanæ specialiter subjectum et dilectum, tamen cum dominus Papa, necnon et Curia Romana audiverint quanta nobis per Anglicos mala sunt illata, videlicet quod pax prius formata non suit nobis servata nec pacta; deinde devastationes, combustiones, et ecclesiasticarum perfonarum intersectiones, sacerdotum videlicet et inclusorum, et aliarum religiosarum personarum passim mulierum et infantium suggentium ubera et in utero portantium, combustiones etiam hospitalium et aliarum domorum religiosarum, homicidiorum in cœa iteriis, ecclesiis, et super altaria, et aliorum sacrilegiorum et slagiciorum auditu etiam horribilium, auditu Pagano-

Sperantus imprimis, quod vestra pia et sancta paternitas clementer nobis compatietur, nec non et curia super dicta, nec per nos regnum Angliæ vacillabit, dum, ut promissum est, pax debita nobis fiat et servetur. Qui vero fanguinis effusione delectantur manifestum est factis. Nam Anglici hactenus nulli sexui vel ætati feu languori pepercerunt, nulla ecclefiæ vel loco facro detulerunt, qualia vel confimilia Wallenses non facerunt. Super eo autem quod unus redemptus fuit interfectus, multum dolemus, nec occiforem manu tenemus, sed in sylvis uti latro vagatur. De co vero quod inceperunt guerram aliqui in tempore indebito, illud ignoravimus usque post factum, et tamen ipsi afferunt quod nisi eo tempore hoc fecissent mortes et captiones eis imminebunt, nec audebunt in domibus refidere, nec nisi armati incedere, et sic præ timore tali tempore id secerunt. De eis verò quæ fecimus contra dominum, ut veri christiani per Dei gratiam pœnitebimus, nec erit ex parte nostra quod bellum continuetur, dum fumus indemnes ut debemus. Ne tamen exhæredemur et passim occidemur, oportet nos defendere ut valemus. Cum verò injuria et damna hinc inde considerentur et ponderentur parati sumus emendare pro viribus quæ ex parte nostra sunt commissa, dum de prædictis injuriis et damnis nobis factis et aliis emenda nobis fiat. Et ad pacem firmandam et stabiliendam similiter sumus prompti debitis modis.

Quando tamen regales chartæ et pacta inita nobis non fervatur, ficut nec hucusque sunt observata, non potest pax stabiliri, nec quando novæ exactiones et inauditæ contra nos et nostros omni die adveniunt. Vobis autem transmittimus in rotulis damna nobis illata et sædera non servata secundum formam pacis prius sactam. Quod verò guerravimus quasi necessitas nos cogebat; nam nos et omnes Wallenses eramus adeo oppressi et suppeditati et spoliati et in servitutem redacti per regales Justicianos et Ballivos contra formam pacis et omnem justiciam amplius quam si Saraceni

Saraceni essemus vel Judæi, sicut credimus et sæpe denunciavimus domino regi, nec aliquam emendam habere potuimus. Sed semper mittebantur justiciarii et ballivi serociores et crudeliores, et quando illi erant saturati per suas injustas exactiones, alii de novo nittebantur and populum exceriandum in tantum quod populus mallebat mori quam vivere. Nec oportet militiam ampliorem convocare, vel contra nos moveri sacerdotium dum nobis siat pax et servetur modis debitis ut su superius est expressum. Nec debitis sancte pater omnibus verbis credere nostrorum adversariorum; sicut enim nos sactis oppresserunt et opprimunt, ita et vobis disfamant, nobis imponentes quæ volunt.

Primus Articulus est talis, cum in forma pacis sic contineatur ut sequitur. Si vero idem Leolinus jus vendicaverit in aliquibus terris quas alii præter dictum dominum regem occupaverint extra quatuor cantredos prædictos, pleniariam fibi justitiam exhibe-bit præfatus dominus rex secundum leges et consuetudines partium illarum in quibus terræ illæ consistunt: qui articulus non fuit observatus super terris Arwystley et inter Dyvy et ductus fluviorum, pro eo quod cum dominus Leolinus dictas terras vendicasset coram domino rege apud Ruthlan, et rex sibi concessisset causam examinare secundum leges et consuetudines Walliæ ac advocati pretium fuissent intro-ducti coram rege ut judicarent de dictis terris secundum leges Wallicanas; parte rea comparente et respondente adeo quod eo die deberet finaliter terminari ex præfixione domini regis qui apud Gloverniam existens diem prædictum partibus assignavit, licet sæpius in diversis locis coram justiciariis fuisset dicta causa examinata, et terræ ipsæ essent in pura Wallia. Nec unquam judicata suit super eis niss se-cundum leges Wallicanas; nec dominus rex posset vel deberet prorogare nifi fecundum leges Wallie; diem tamen ipfum motu proprio prorogavit et contra leges antedictas, et ad ultimo fuit vocatus ad loca varia ad quæ non debuit evocari, nec justitiam obtinere potuit, nifi secundum leges Angliæ contra illud quod in dicto articulo continetur. Et idem sactum suit coram justiciariis apud Montgomery, cum partes esfent in judicio constitutæ et firmatæ, et dies datus ad sententiam audiendam, diem prorogaverunt leges memoratas. Demum apud Londinum post multos labores et expensas varias rex ipse justitiam sibi denegavit, nifi vellet secundum leges Angliæ subire judicium in causa memorata.

Secundus articulus non servatus est talis. Et omnes transgressiones injuriæ et excelsus hinc inde factæ pænitus remittuntur usque in diem hodiernum. Iste articulus non fuit observatus quia dominus Regnialdus de Grey statim cum fuit factus justiciarius, movit varias quæstiones et innumerabiles contra homines de Tegengl, et nos super transgressis quæ factæ suerunt in tempore domini Henrici regis, et dicti domini Leolini dum dominum in partibus iliis obtinebat unde dicti homines multum timentes non audebant in domibus suis permanere.

Quartus articulus, Item concedit dominus rex quod omnes terras tenentes in quatuor Cantredis, et in aliis terris quas dominus rex retinet in manu fua, teneant eas adeo libere et pleniarie ficut ante guerram tenere confueverint, et eifdem libertatibus et confuetudinibus gaudeant quibus prius gaudere folebant, et cum contra istum articulum dictus Reginaldus confuetudines varias de novo introduxit, et hoc contra pacis formam fupradictam.

Item quintus articulus, Controversiæ et contentiones motæ vel movendae inter principem et quoscunque terminabantur et decidentur secundum leges

Marchiae

Marchiæ de his quæ emergunt in Marchia, et fecundum leges Walliæ de rebus contentiofis quæ in Wallia orientur. Contra istum articulum venit dominus rex mittendo justiciarios usque ad Montgomery, qui ibidem judicare præfumpserunt homines dicti Leolini, vindictum ponendo super illos contra leges Walliæ, cum hoc vel aliud simile nunquam factum suffet ibidem temporibus retroactis, quosdam incarcerando, alios in exilium mittendo, cum ipse idem princeps paratus esset de eisdem hominibus suis exhibere justitiæ complementum omnibus quærelantibus de eisdem.

Irem fextus articulus. Item cum fit contentum in dicta pacis forma, quod Griffinus Vachan homagium faceret domino regi, de terra, de Yâl, et principi de terra de Edeyrnahu justiciarii domini introduxerunt, in totam terram prædictam de Edeyrnahu cujus cognitio causæ ad principem pertinebat simpliciter, et non ad illos Justiciarios; et tamen pro bono pacis princeps hoc tolerabat cum ipse princeps paratus esset eidem dominæ super hoc justitiam exhibere.

Septimus articulus, ubi dicitur et licet idem princeps se nostræ ut dictum est supposuerit voluntati, nos tamen concedimus et volumus quod voluntas noftra . . . . ultra dictos articulos fe in aliquo non extendant. Contra istum articulum exigebatur aurum ad opus reginæ in qualibet folutione facta regi cum . . . . . Aurum nunquam fuit exactum Wallenfibus, nec in tempore domini Henrici, vel alicujus alterius regis Angliæ; quod aurum exfolvit pro bono pacis, cum tamen nihil de hoc tactum fuit in forma pacis vel excogitatum: et nunc insuper exigitur à principe aurum ad opus reginæ fenioris matris videlicet domini Edvardi nunc regis Angliæ, pro pace facta in tempore domini Henrici nunc regis Angliæ, cum nihil de hoc tunc fuerat dictum vel quoquomodo excogitatum, videlicet duo millia Marcarum et dimidium, et nisi dictæ Marcæ solverentur, minabatur dicta regina quod bona ejusdem Leolini occuparet quæ invenire poterat in domino regis, et homines homines suos capere vel venundare quousque dictam fummam haberet ad plenum. Item cum invitaffet dominus rex dictum principem adfectum Wiggorniensem verbis blandissimis promittendo ei quod daret tunc consanguineam suam sibi in uxorem, et multis ditaret honoribus; nihilominus cum illuc venisset in die desponsationis, ante missam petiit dominus rex unam literam confignari à princepe continentem inter cætera, quod idem princeps nullum omnino honorem in terra fua teneret contra regis voluntatem, vel manu teneret ex quo possit contingere quod omnes fideles principis ab eo commoverentur. Quam quidem literain fibi figillatam tradidit, computans per metum qui cadere posset in constantem virum, cum tamen in forma pacis, ut præmissum est, contineatur quod nihil ab eo deberet exigi, ultra quod in dicta forma conti-

Item, cum secundum eandem pacis formam consuetudines eident principi confirmentur quibus usus fuerat ab antiquo; ac idem princeps et antecessores sui, ex consuetudine diutina et obtenta bona de naufragis in terris fuis provenientia consueverant recipere, et in fuos usus convertere ad libitum: Justiciarius Cestrensis namium recepit super principem pro bonis quæ recepit de naufragiis ante guerram contra dictam pacis formam per quam hinc inde erant remissa, et contra consuetudines ante dictas. Dato etiam quod hoc effet foris factum namium recepit tale, videlicet quindecem libratas mellis et plures equos ac homines fuos incarceravit, et hoc ex propriis bonis principis Preterea, accipit scaphas de Banweys quæ venerant apud Liverpol cum mercandiis per niercatores, et eas numquam deliberavit donec pecuniam pro eis accepit quantum volebat.

Item, cum quidam homines de Geneurglyn quædam bona abstulissent ab aliis vicinis suis de Geneurglyn, dum essent in domino principis de Merpyreton homines regis de Llanbadarn prædam secerunt, et acceperunt de terra principis de Merpyreton, et cum homines sui venissent illuc ad quærendum quare dictam prædam receperant, unum de eis intersecerunt, et

alios vulneraverunt, & quosdam incarceraverunt. Et cum in dicta pacis forma contineatur quod in marchia deberent emendari quæ in Marchia committebantur. tamen dicti homines regis homines principis audire noluerunt alibi quam in castro de Llanbadarn, & hoc contra pacis formam antedictam, super quo hactenus nullam justitiam habere potuerunt. In istis articulis injuriatus dominus rex principi & suis, & etiam in multis aliis: et licet princeps tam per se quam per suos petivisset sæpius a domino rege quod pacis formam supradictam erga se & suos faceret observari, in nullo tamen extitit observata sed omni die de novo justiciarii & ballivi domini regis in partibus illis injurias injuriis, & varia gravimina cumulaverunt : propter quod mirum non debet videri alicui si princeps præfatus afsensum præstitit illis qui guerrare cæperunt, cum in his fides quam in animam domini regis sibi dominus Robertus Tibetot juraverat in nullo servabatur, & maxima & principaliter cum princeps fuisser præmunitus a personis fide dignis quod princeps foret a rege capiendus in suo primo accessu apud Ruthlan, & etiam fuisset captus si rex illuc accessisset post Natale ficut proposuerat.

Cum dominus David primo venisset ad dominum Edwardum tune comitem Cestriæ, ac homagium sibi fecisset, idem dominus Edwardus eidem Davidi duas cantredas, videlicet de dysfryn-Clwyd et Cywonant cum omnibus suis pertinentiis dedit plenarie, et literas suas patentes super hoc sieri fecit, tandem etiam donationem eidem invocavit, postquam creatus est in regem, et etiam illum Davidem in possessionem illarum cantredarum induxit corporalem.

Demum domina Gwenlhian de Lacy mortua, tres villas quas in dictis cantredis tenuit quoad vitam quæ ad ipfum Davidem spectabant ratione donationis su-

pradictæ dominus rex sibi abstulit minus juste contra tenorem chartæ suæ.

Item, Cum dictus David ex donatione domini regis prædicti villas de Hope et Eston obtineret in Wallia, de quibus nulli respondere tenebatur nisi secundum leges Wallicanas; tandem justiciarius Cestriensis fecit ipsum ad instantiam cujusdam Anglici Willh. de Vanabel nomine ad comitatum Cestriensem super dictis vilulis ad judicium evocari. Et licet dictus dominus David petivisset multoties quod injuriose contra eundem non procederetur in dicto comitatu, pro eo quod ibidem respondere nullatenus tenebatur super villis prædictis quæ sitæ erant in Wallia, sed potius tractaretur, hoc sibi plene denegavit.

Item, Idem justiciarius Cestriensis in gravamen dicti domini Davidis nemus suum de Lleweni et Sylvas suas de Hope secit succidi tam per villanos de Ruthlan, quam per alios, cum idem justiciarius in terris prædicti domini Davidis nullam omnino haberet juris-dictionem, et non contenti quod meremium ibidem quærerent ad ædificia exigenda tam apud Rodelanum quam alibi in patria, sed nemus destruendo meremium ibidem sectum ad vendendum in Hiberniam transtu-

Item, Cum idem dominus David quosdam Fortanicos de terra domini regis qui in nemoribus latitabant cepisset, ac suspendio tradidisset, idem tamen justiciarius ipsum Davidem penes regem accusabat, ac si ipse dictos malesactores desenderet et manuteneret, quod verisimile non erat cum ipse David dictos latrones suspendi faceret et occidi.

fuos homines in nullo extitit observatum.

De premissi vero gravaminibus et aliis petiit idem David aliquam emendationem vel secundum leges Walliæ, vel consuetudines, vel etiam ex gratia speciali; et hoc etiam petiit a domino rege, quorum neutrum potuit aliquatenus obtinere: et cum hoc præmunitus suit a quibusdam a curia domini regis, quod in primo regressiu

regressu domini Reginaldi de Gray de curia idem Das vid esset capiendus ut silii sui capiendi pro obsedibu esset, insuper spoliandus castro suo de Hope, et etiam sylva sua ibidem succidenda. Ideo cum idem David multum laborasset pro domino rege prædicto in diversis guerris tam in Anglia quam in Wallia, et exposuisset se et suos variis periculis et injuriis, ac amissiste nobiliores de suis et fortiores, ac multos nimis, nihilominus de dictis graviminibus et aliis nullam omnino justitiam, emendationem, seu gratiam potuit obtinere. Propter quæ gravamina et pericula, timens mortem propriam aut filiorum suorum, vel incarcerationem perpetuam, vel saltem diutinam, quasi coactus et invitus incepit prout potuit se et suos desensare.

Quod ipse dominus rex concederet unicuique eorum jus suum, et jurisdictionem suam, et etiam dominium, bonæ memoriæ domini Henrici quondam regis Angliæ, secundum quod prædicti homines de Ros referent ipsos haberent temporibus prædicti Henrici.

Item, Promsiit prædictus dominus rex supradictis hominibus quod non darentur nec ad firmam ponerentur; quibus articulis concessis præfatis hominibus homagium fecerunt domino regi, et ipse eis promisit ore proprio dictos articulos observare. Hoc non obstante quidam cementarii redeuntes ad villam de Ruthlan, de loco ubi ipsi operabantur, obviaverunt cuidam nobili transeunti cum uxore sua per viam regiam super pace domini regis, qui cementarii per vim propofuerunt auferre a prædicto nobili suam uxorem, et quia ipse nobilis defendit suam uxorem ne ab ipso auferetur, prædicti cementarii prædictum nobilem interfecerunt. Ille autem cui plus opponebatur dictum homicidium perpetrasse, cum quibusdam sociis suis capti fuerunt: et cum parentela prædicti interfecti petierit justitiam a domino B b 2 Andicu

Item, Quidam homo interfecit quendam nobilem qui videlicet filium Goronu de Heylyn nutriverat, et interfector captus fuit: et cum quidam de parentela prædicti interfecti peterent justitiam de eorum consanguineo a domino justiciario Cestriensi, quidam eorum capti fuerunt, et interfector fuit in castello domini regis liberatus, et adhuc est ibi, denegata justitia prædictæ parentelæ.

Item, Quidam nobiles vindicaverunt jus in quibufdam terris, et de mobilibus suis obtulerunt domino regi magnam summam pecuniæ pro justitia habenda per rationem et veredictum proborum et legalium hominum de patria; quæ quidem terræ adjudicatæ suerunt, prædictis vendicantibus totam terram prædictam cum omnibus ædissciis biadis, et aliis bonis in ipsis contentis. Dominus Reginaldus de Grey; et sic amiserunt primo pecuniam quam pro terra pacaverunt, et postea terram.

Item, Terras quas probi homines a domino Davide filio Leolini bonæ memoriæ habuerunt per donationem prædicti Davidis abstulit prædictus justiciarius a præ-

Item, Quando aliquis ad villam de Ruthlan veniret cum mercandiis fuis, si refutaret illud quod Anglicus eidem, offerret pro suis mercandiis, statim duceretur ille Wallensis ad castrum, et emptor ibidem haberet rem quam larginaverat, et dominus rex haberet pretium dictæ rei, tunc castellam dictum Wallensem spoliatum et atrociter verberatum deliberabant, pacatis prius portario castri quatuor denariis. Si vero aliquis Wallensis emeret aliquam rem in villa de Ruthlan,

Anglicus qualifcunque fuperveniret, et rem venditam dicto Wallensi auseret ab ipso pro minori pretio quam dictus Wallensis solverat pro eadem.

Item, Contra promissionem domini regis prædictis hominibus de Ros, ipse dedit territoriam villæ de Maenam in Penmayn et Lhysfaen.

Item, Taurus cujusdam probi hominis deprehensus fuit in pratis domini regis apud Ros, et captus, et dominus ejus vocatis fuit ad placitum usque Rodolanum, et fuit condemnatus in quinque libris occasione dicti tauri; bis adivit Londinium pro justitia petenda, et nullam fuit assecutus, et in illis duabus vicibus expendidit prædictus homo tres libras.

Item, Quidam nobiles de cantreda de Ros emerunt officia pro certa fumma pecuniæ; pacata pecunia, meritis fuis non exigentibus, dominus justiciarius Cestren-

Item, Quidam rufticus Goronow ab Heylyn condemnatus fuit in 17 l. bonæ et legalis monetæ juris, ordine non fervato.

Item, Goronow filius Heylyn accipit ad firmam territorium de Pennmaen et Lhysfaen a magistro Godfrido M. pro certa pecuniæ summa, usque ad finem quatuor annorum, quo facto dominus Robertus de C. cum equis et armis, et cum viginti quatuor equitibus venit ad inequitandum prædictum Goronow, occasione dictæ terræ, ita quod sic non fuit securus transitus nec usque Rodolanum, nec usque ad justiciarios nisi cum forti Warnistura de sua parentela et etiam de suis amicis.

Item. In reformationem pacis ultro factæ et firmatæ inter dominum regem, et fuos ex una parte, et dominum principem et fuos ex altera expresse continebatur; quod omnes injuriæ et transgressiones factæ ex utraque parte penitus remitterentur; hoc non obstante, oppositum fuit contra quosdam nobiles quoddam fore factum tempore guerræ, et statim capti fuerunt, nec potuerunt a carcere liberari antequam ipsi pacarent sedecem marcas.

Præ nos coustavimus trecentas marcas eundo ad dominum regem pro justitia petenda in prædictis articulis, ibidem morando, et ad propria redeundo; et cum nos credebamus habere plenam justitiam de singulis articulis prædictis, dominus rex transmist ad partes nostras dominum Reginaldum de Grey, cui dictus dominus rex totam terram ad firmam concessit, ad tractandos homines prædictæ cantredæ prout fuæ placeret voluntati; qui compulsit nos jurare per manum suam cum deberemus jurare per manum domini regis, et ubi crux domini regis levari deberet, quod crux prædicti Reginaldi levaretur, in fignum quod ipse erat verus dominus. Dictus vero Reginaldus in suo avdentu ad partes Walliæ vendidit quibusdam servientibus domini regis officia sua, quae praedicti servientes prius emerant a dom. rege pro 23 Marcis, et illa officia non deberent vendi nisi cum dominium dominorum mutaretur.

Item, Unus de confilio prædicti Reginaldi nobis dixit ore tenus, scilicet Cynwricus Fychan, quod in adventu prædicti Reginald ad partes Walliæ, viginti quatuor homines de probioribus hominibus cujustibet cantredæ caperet ad incarcerandos ipsos perpetuo vel decapitandos: propter ista gravimina, et alia quæ dictus Reginaldus nobis fecit, et etiam propter minas quas ipse nobis intulit, videlicet quod si mitteremus aliquos nuncios ad curiam domini regis pro justitia petenda decapitarentur. Multa alia damna nobis allata, et injuriæ sactæ; et quando mittebamus ad curiam domini regis, nuntii non permittebantur nec auss surandomini regis, nuntii non permittebantur nec auss surandomini æsis coram deo.

Lewelini, & Henrici regis, de homicidis factis tunc satisfactionem et emendam satisfacere monstraverunt; et modo de novo Reginaldus de Grey veilet et cogetet illam emendam renovare, dones oportuit ipsos terram proprias relinquere.

Item, Census et obventiones quos solvimus de veteri moneta per medietatem unius anni ante adventum novæ monetæ, cogerunt nos reddere eis novas monetas

Ista sunt gravamina per dominum regem & suos justiciarios illata Rheso parvo de Yzstrad Tywy.

Primum est, Postquam dictus Rhys dedit et concessit domino regi castrum suum apud Dynesowr post ultimam pacis formam: qui dictus Rhesus tunc temporis erat in tentilio domini Payn de Gadsry, eodem tempore intersecti fuerunt sex nobiles viri domini Rhys, de quibus satisfactionem nec justitiam unquam habuit quod fuit eis damnum et gravamen.

Item, Johannes Giffard calumniavit cum Rhefum fuper hæreditatem propriam apud Hirwryn, quicquid Rhefus inquifivit a domino rege legem patriæ fuæ, aut legem comitatus Caermardden, in quo comitatu antecessores dicti Rhys solebant habere leges, quando sierent in unitatem Anglicorum, et sub eorum dominis; quod idem Rhys nullas leges habuit, et suam terram prædictam totaliter amisit; vellent ipsum instringere in comitatu Herefordiensi, ubi numquam antecessores ejus responderunt.

Præterea in terris præfati Rhesi talia gravamina fuerunt per Anglicos facta, maxime pertinent ad ecclesiafticos, videlicet in ecclesia Sancti Davidis quæ vocatur Llangadawc fecerunt stabula, et meretrices collocaverunt, et omnia bona quæ in ea continebantur omnino asportaverunt atque totos domos combusterunt; et in eadem ecclesia juxta aram percusserunt capellanum cum gladio ad caput ejus et eum reliquerunt semi-

ecclesias ex partibus illis omnino spoliaverunt calcibus. et libris, ac omnibus aliis ornamentis et rebus.

Gravamina Lewelini filii Rhys, & Howeli fratris esus per dominum regem illata sunt hæc.

Postquam in formam pacis inter dominum Henri-cum tunc temporis regem Angliæ et dominumprincipem apud Rhydchwnna, tunc præfatus rex concessit, et per cartas suas confirmavit præfato principi homa-So long as. gium prædictorum nobibium exos. Prædicti nobiles fuerunt fideles et constantes cum præfato principe, juxta eorum donationem et cartarum suarum confirmationem: Edwardus nunc rex Angliæ prædictos nobiles dehæreditavit, denegando eisdem omnes leges et consuetudines Walliæ; ita quod non habuerunt terras fuas nec per legem, nec per gratiam.

> Primum est quamquam dominus rex concessit prædictis nobilibus fuas proprias hæreditates post pacis formam, videlicet Geneur'glyn et Creudhyn; præfatus vero rex, contra fuam donationem et pacis formam, terris supradictis antedictos nobiles dehæreditavit, denegando eidem omnes leges et consuetudines Walliæ, et Angliæ, atque comitatus Caermardhyn.

> Secundum est, Quod præfatus rex in suo comitatu de Cardigan, per suos justiciarios antedictos nobiles compellit, ut ipfi traderent judicium super ignobiles ac subditos patriæ, et quod tales homines e comisso judicium super ipsos opponerent, ubi numquam ante-

Tertium est, Quod justiciarii domini regis curiam eorum nobilium abstulerunt, compellendo homines suos proprios coram eis satisfacere quia de jure coram praedictis nobilibus deberent satisfacere.

Quartum est, Quod quoddam naufragium in terris antedictorum nobilium fuit, qui quidem nobiles boua naufragii receperunt, ficut antecessores eorum fecerunt, et hoc non fuit eis prohibitum per aliquos

ex parte regis: antedictus vero rex contra eorum confuetudinem et legem, occasione illius Naufragii eosdem dannavit in octoginta Marcis sterlingorum; atque bona quæ in Naufragio continebantur omnino asportaverunt.

Quintum est, quod nullus nostrum in comitatu Ussegd de Cardigan ausus esset venire inter Anglicos propter timorem carceris et nisi fuisset propter periculum Nobilibus Metrop. nihil contra honoram domini regis moverent.

Significant vero quod omnes Christiani habent leges et confuetudines in eorum propriis terris; Judæi vero inter Anglicos habent leges, ipsi vero in terris suis, et eorum antecessores habuerunt leges immutabiles et confuetudines, donec Anglia post ultimam guerram ab eis leges suas abstulerunt.

Memorandum de quærelis omnium nobilium virorum de Ystradatuy eisdem latis ac sactis per Rogerum de Clyfford, & Rogerum Croscil vicem domini Rogeri de Clyfford gerentem contra privilegium, justitiam, et consuetudinem prædictorum virorum de Ystratuy, ut dicunt et probant.

Item. Madecus filius Bledyn condemnatus fuit in

Item. Lewelinus Rufus condemnatus fuit in quinque Marcis et 17 averiis contra privilegium et confue-tudinem patriæ.

Item. Quod ipsi Rogeri fecerunt forestam super terram propriam virorum patriæ: et propter pedem unius cervi inventum id ore canis alicujus, tres homines suerunt spoliati omnino.

Item.

Item. Michael ab Ygustyl condemnatus fuit in decem solidis pro facto patris sui, quadraginta annis elapsis.

Îtem. Cogerunt parentes Ennii à Strabonis ad red-dendum fuum relevagum in vita fua.

Item. Quod ipsi posuerunt super nos omnes satellitos de Anglicis, quod nunquam suit nostra dimidietas.

Item. Dati fuimus domino Mauritio de Crumy, et vinditi fuimus domino Rogero de Clyfford, quod

Item. Roberti de Monte alto petiit, à domino rege tertiam partem terræ de Monte alto in Ward, et dijudicata fuit coram domino rege quod numquam dicta terra fuit in Ward data.

Hi sunt articuli quæstionum illati ab hominibus de Penlhyn, injuste per constabularium Albi Monasterii & suos cives.

Primo. Cynwric filius Madoci fuit spoliatus ab eis tempore pacis octo libris, et quatuor bobus, et blado laboris unius aratri, per duos annos et valore trium librarum à tribus hominibns ejusdem; affirmat etiam quod solvit 16 libras per octo in valore, et majorem habuit injuriam imponendo manus in ipsum quam totum quod amisit, quia tunc erat constabularius domini principis apud Penllyn: non fuit alia causa dictas spoliationis nisi quia dicebatur invenire 24 garbas de decimis in domo cujusslam hominis dicti Cynwrici.

Item. Adaf Ddu condemnatus fuit in 30 s. eo quod duo boves quos proposuerat vendere in foro Albi Monasterii Monasterii exibant villam ipso conveniente, et captus fuit et detentus usque ad solutionem 30 s. nec ipsi boves exierant nisi da Plateo qua stabant usque ad aliam Plateam.

Item. Yorwerch ab Gorgonon condemnatus fuit 7 s. eo quod evaserat quondam de carcere eorum tempore guerræ, et in tempore pacis inventus fuit in dicta villa, et hoc contra formam pacis initæ inter dominum regem, et dominum principem.

Item. Duo famuli Kenwric ap Gruffydh condemnati fuerunt in duabus Marcis, eo quod dicebant ipsos

Item. Gruffydh ap Goronow tercinarius domini A Servant. Principis spoliatus suit uno bove valoris 11 s. et 8 d. et poltquam arraveret constabularius cum dicto bove per septem menses, solvit dictus Gruffynus pro dicto bove, 40 d.

Item. David ab Gronow ab Eynion fpoliatus fuit 30 s. eo quod quidam cives albi monasterii dixit, quod quidam de Penlhyn, qui mortuus fuerat, denegabatur ei in quibusdam rebus.

Item. Duo famuli Y bongam capti fuerunt et condemnati in duabus libris, eo quod posuerunt manum in quendam latronem qui spoliabat eos in villa per noc-tem, et liberaverunt latronem.

Item.

Item. Adaf ap Ychael condemnatus fuit in duabus libris pro una libra, et ipfe posuerat in juramento cujusdam civis de albo monasterio quod non tenebatur nisi in una libra pro principe, nec voluit jurare, et ideo spoliatus fuit una libra.

Item. Guyan Maestran spoliatus suit 5 s. eo quod dicebat quod quidam Mercator de Ardydwy tenebatur eis in quibusdam rebus, cum ipse nec erat de dicta Balliva: item condemnatus suit in 8 d. quia dicebant ipsum vendere quasdam oves extra villam cum ipse non vendiderat.

Item. Famulus Lewelini ab Gwyn fpoliatus fuit feptem ovibus, et 5 s. et fuo pallio, eo quod dicebant ipfum effe de domino Griffydh ab Gwyn cum ipfe non erat.

Ista omnia facta fuerunt per Henricum Gamber dicti loci constabularium, cum aliis innumerabilibus articulis.

Item. Ybicre captus fuit in negotio domini principis, et condemnatus in 5 s. absque aliqua causa.

Hæc sunt gravamina Goronow filii Heylyn, viz.

Quod quidem Villanus dictus Coronon vocatus fuit ad curiam domini regis occasione indebitæ causæ. Tunc dictus Goronow venit ad suum villanum desendendum, et petiit pro ipso veritatem à domino justiciario, aut legem qua utuntur homines suæ patriæ; omnibus autem his eidem denegatis, dictus villanus condemnatus suit in 27 libris, et tribus obolis: tunc dictus Goronow adivit Londonium pro justitia habenda, et expendit quinque Marcas et quatuor Solidos, et promissa fuit sibi justitia, et nullam suit affecutus.

Item. Quidam nobilis fuit interfectus, videlicet, qui nutriverat filium dicti Goronow, et ille interfector fector captus fuit et deportatus fuit apud castrum de Ruthlan: tunc dictus Goronow et quidem de parentela intersecti petierunt justitiam de intersectore: tunc denegata eis justititia, quidam fuerunt incarcerati, et ille intersector fuit in Castello liberatus. Tunc dictus Goronow interum adivit Londonium propter supradicta gravamina ad justitiam petendam, et expendit, 20 Marcas, 3 s. 4 d. Et dominus rex promisit eidem plenariam justititiam, et nullam suit adeptus cum per-

Item. Tertio ex defectu justitiæ oportuit dictum Goronow adire Londonium occasionibus supradictis pro justitia petenda, et expendit illa vice 18 Marcas, 6 s. 8 d. bonæ et legalis Monetæ; et tunc simpliciter promisit dominus rex eidem justitiam perhibere; et quando credebat habere justitiam, tunc venit Reginaldus de Grey, et dixit aperte quod ipse deberit tractare totam patriam per chartas domini regis, et abstulit totam Ballivam à dicto Goronow; quam sibi dominus rex concessit, et vendidit illam Ballivam ad voluntatem suam, et tunc petiit dictus Goronow justitiam à domino Reginaldo de gravaminibus supradictis, et nullam fuit

Item. Dictus Goronow recepit terram, videlicet, Penmaen et Llysfaen ad firmam de Godfrido Merlyn, usque ad finem quatuor annorum pro certa pecuniæ summa. Tunc Robertus de Cruquer venit cum equis suis et armis ad quærendum dictam terram per vim, et quia dictus Goronow non permitteret auferre dictam terram ab eodem usque terminum præsignatum, tunc vocatus fuit ad curiam dictus Goronow illa occasione; tunc venit Reginaldus de Grey, cum viginti quatuor equitibus armatis ad proponendum capere dictum Goronow, vel ad eundem 'decapitandum; et quia viderunt quod non possent implere suum propositum illo die, vocaverunt dictum Goronow crastino die apud Ruthlan, et tunc dictus Goronow habuit confilium ita quod non deberent adire dictam curiam: iterum dictus Goronow vocatus fuit adplacitum apud Caerwys, et non ausus fuit adire dictum placitum nisi per conductum domini episcopi Afaphenfis, Asaphensis, quia dictus Reginaldus et sui complures ibidem erant armati.

Item. Propter ista gravamina de quibus nullam habuit justitiam nisi laborare et expendere duas libr. quatuor Marcas, et 9 d; et quia non ausus suit in propria persona adire curiam, misit quendam nuncium deportantem duas literas, unam ad dominum regem, et aliam ad fratrem Lewelinum, ad signandum domino regi quod amitteret totam patriam, et dictum Goronow quia non observavit illud quod essemplem promisit; et quia nullam possent homines de Ros et Arglifeld assequi justitiam, et quia noluit corrigere sive emendare ista gravamina propter hoc amissit totam patriam.

Imprimis. Juribus et consuetudinibus partiæ suerunt spoliati, viz. prædictus Edwardus compellendo quod ipsi procederent in causis secundum legem Anglicanam, cum secundum tenorem privilegii sui secundum legem Wallicanam procedere debuissent, viz. apud Tref Edwyn, et apud Ruthlan, et apud Caerwys; et optimati de patria fuerunt manu capti quia ipsi provocabant quod ipsi procederent in causa apud Tref Edwyn secundum legem et consuetudinem Wal-

Secundo. Quia unus justiciarius duceret in causis peragendis, alius suus prædecessor in irritum revocaret, viz. in causa Davidis Reginaldus de Grey recitavit processum quem suus antecessor ratum habuit, et etiam approbavit.

Tertio

Tertio. Quod si unus nobilis de patria fuisset propter calumniam sibi impositam captus, quod non remitterent eundem pro cautione fidevissoria evadere, quod Surety. facere debuiffent.

Quarto. Quod tres unius nobilis deducti ad castrum fuerunt de Flynt, propter parvam accusationem, una cum averiis suis, nec potuerunt de castro devenire, nec dilationem obtinere donec unusquisque dedit unum bovem constabulario de Flynt, et donec solverunt tres libras Kynwrico Seis pro dilatione habenda.

Quinto. Reginaldus de Grey terras virorum de Merton dedit et concessit abbati de Basingwerk ordinis Cisterciend. contra legem Wallicanam, et patræ consuetudim; et contra formam pacis initæ inter dominum Lewelinum principem et dominum regem, viz. 16 can-

Sexto. Mirantur nobiles et optimati patriæ pro eo quod dominus rex fecit ædificare castrum super terram et possessionem magnatum, et mandavit dominus rex justiciario suo quod ipse solveret eque bonam terram illis spoliatis et adhuc aliquam terram, nec suæ terræ æstimationem sunt consecuti in Flynt.

Septimo. Reginaldus de Grey non permitteret possessiones sylvarum uti sylvis suis, donec ab eisdem pretium et præmium fuisset consecutus, et aliis rusticis gratis permitteret sylvam prædictorum abscidere, cum non debuissent secundum patriæ consuetudinem et legem

Wallicanam.

Octavo. Cum homines de Cyrchynan fecerunt pactum cum domino rege, quod cum ipsi concederent dimidietatem cujusdam prati, ad hoc quod dominus rex non permitteret sylvam prædictorum abscidere Howelo filio Gruffydd præsente, et postmodum Reginaldus de Grey prædictum pratum infirmavit, viz. concedendo aliis quod absciderent sylvam prædictorum, et eosdem dimidietate prati sui spoliando.

Nono. Filius Kynwrici ab Goronow fuit captus apud Ruthlan culpa sua minime præcedente, nisi vellet pignus fuum acquietare a quoddam muliere, et con-Redeem the stabularius de Ruthlan fecit eundem detradi in car-gage.

Decimo. Cum ballivus de Ruthlan erat in convivio apud villam Four Hutmus de Limayl quendam virum nobilem crudeliter vulneravit in præfentia ballivi fupradicti; cujus vulneris occasione prædictus Hutmus fuit in octo libris condemnatus; et quum ille cui injuria fuisfet facta petere voluisset prædictas libras, eundem fecit detrudi in carcerem una.

Undecimo, Nuntii Reginaldi de Grey proposuerunt facere illud quod erat absurdum et dissonum juris secundum canonicas fanctiones; videlicet petere ab eisdem quod ipsi ararent Reginaldo de Grey, et quod ipsi seminarent illam araturam; et illi suerunt nuntii, viz. Kynwricus Seis et Hutmus de Limayl, quod prædictus vero Kynwricus in præsentia omnium de patria juravit, nisi omnes de patria ararent quod ipsi infra tempus pæniterent, et ipsi multum timuerunt metu qui potuit cadere in constantem virum.

Duodecimo. Quod præcones de Tegeyngl emerunt officium præconiæ pro 30 marcis a domino rege, et postmodum Reginaldus de Grey prædictos præcones tam pecunia quam præconia spoliavit contra legem et

Tertiodecimo. Septem nobiles fuerunt interfecti minus juste ab Anglicis, et adhuc parentes prædictorum aliquam satisfactionem non habuerunt, cum illi malefactores fuerunt capti; et postmodum prædictos malefactores remiserunt prædicti constabularii impunitos.

Quartodecimo. Constabularius unus de Ruthlan detradit duos Satellites domini regis in carcere, pro eo quod ipsi tenuerunt aliquem Anglicum qui grave delictum commist hominem alium vulnerando, denuntiare, propter metum Reginaldi et timorem, qui metus potuit cadere in const antem virum: quia prædictus Reginaldus sua voce Dilvada fuit protestatus; Openly. quod fin inveniret nuntios prædictorum quod eosdeni decapitaret prout nobis ex parte unius ex confilio fuo fuit certive intimatum. In tantum quod lingua non potest proferre, nec penna scribere in quantum prædicti homines de Tegeyngl fuerunt aggravati.

Conqueritur vobis, domine archiepiscope Cantuariensis totius Angliæ primas, Lewelinus filius Griffini filii Madoci de constabulario de cruce Oswaldi regis, et de hominibus ejusdem villae, qui praedictum Lewelinum tertia parte cujusdam villae quae vocatur Ledrot, et curia patris sui, sine observatione juris patriae suae

Praeterea. Praedictus constabularius et sui complures eundem Lewelinum communi pastura, qua praedictus Lewelinus usus fuit temporibus retroactis, ordine juris patriae minime observaro, spoliarunt, et in 70 libris occasione praedictae pasturae condemnaverint. Cæterum dominu rex Angliae concessit quasdam literas cuidam Bastardo, scilicet Grissino Fychan ab Cynlhaeth, ad litigandum contra eundem Lewelinum pro toto dominio suo obtinendo, quarum literarum occasione idem Lewelinus expendit ccl. sterlingorum legalis usualisæ monetæ.

Iterum. Prædictus constabularius, compulsit prædictum Lewelinum ad mittendum duos fuos nobiles ad eos fulpendendos ad prædictum constabularium quicquid viri nobiles suspendi minime debuissent, quam suspensionem nollent parentes prædictorum hominum sustinuisse pro ccc libris sterlingorum. Postmidum prædictus constabularius incacerravit bis 60 homines prædicti Lewelini nulla præmissa ratione, nisi quod quidam gareo emisit quandam vocem, nec potuerunt evadere fuum carcerem donec quilibet eorum folvit decem folidos pro fua deliberatione.

venditori: præsertim idem constabularius et sui ceperunt jumenta prædicti Lewelini ad terram suam propriam, et de eisdem jumentis secerunt suam voluntatem.

Idem. Prædictus constabularius abstulit equum ballivi prædicti Lewelini sine aliqua ratione, nec sibi aliquid debebatur; nec adhuc prædictus ballivus satisfactionem aliquam est consecutus.

Cæterum. Quando prædictus Lewelinus volebat adire villam quæ vocatur Caerlleon cum literis domini regis ad comperiendum ibidem in die fibi affignata; filii Griffini filii Gwenynny et armigeri domini Rogeri Starainge ex confilio Rogeri eundem Lewelinum et fuos incarcerarunt in fui injuriam et fuorum non modicam læfionem; quam injuriam et læfionem nollet prædictus Lewelinus et fui fuftinuisse pro ccc marcis sterlingorum; nec ab eisdem potuit evadere donec invenit pro se sufficientem cautionem.

His et aliis receptis in scriptis accessit, archiepiscopus ad dominum regem; supplicans ei humiliter ut gravamina suppradicta dignetur avertere, et ea correctione debita terminare: et faltem pro tanto habère exceffus Wallenfium excufatos; qui respondit Wallenses injuriis fibi illatis effe excufabiles, quia omni tempore poratus extiterat omni facere justitiam conquerenti: quo audito, archiepiscopus regi iterum supplicavit ut permitteret Wallenses pro suis gravaminibus exponendis et remediis afferendiis ap ipsum habere accessum liberum et regressum: qui respondit quod libere permitteret eos ad se accedere sed et redira; si secundum justitiam regressus eorum meritis responderet. Quibus auditis accessit archiepiscopus ad principem Walliæ in Snawdoniam ut tam ipfum quam Davidem fratrem suum et cæteros Wallenses ad aliquam humilitatis regulam ipsorum animos inclinaret; per quam posser qui ipsorum nuntius regiam clementiam ad ipsos admittendos in gratiam inclinare. Post varios autem

Idem. De tenentibus eorum cantredorum fi ad fuam pacem venerint, proponit facere prout condecet regiam majestatem, credimus tamen quod aget cum eis misericorditer si ad pacem venerint, et ad hoc proponimus una cum cæteris amicis efficaciter labo-rare, sperantes efficaciter exaudiri.

Item. De facto domini Lewelini nullum potuimus aliud habere responsum nisi quod simpliciter et absolute conformet ad domini regis voluntatem, ut credimus firmiter quod dominus rex cum eo aget miserecorditer, et ad hoc intendimus cum totis viribus laborare cum cæteris amicis exaudiendis ut confidimus cum effectu.

Primo. Quod proceres hanc formam gratiæ regiæ conceperunt; ut videlicet domino Lewelino se regiae gratiae submittente, provideatur ei per regem honorifice in mille libratis sterlingorum de aliquo honorifico comitatu, in aliquo loco Angliae; ita tamen quod praedictus Lewelinus ponat dominum regem in Seysina Snaudonum absolute, perpetue et quiete. Et ipse rex filiae principis secundum condicestiam sui proprii sanguinis providebit, et ad hoc sperant se posse regis animum inclinare.

Item.

Item. Si contingat Lewelinum ducere uxorem et habere de ea puellam masculam, intendunt impetrare proceres a domino rege, ut proles illa succedat perpetuo hæreditario Lewelini in terra masculorum liberorum videlicet comitatu.

Item. De populo principi immediate subjecto tam in Snaudon quam alibi providebitur secundum deum prout complete saluti ejusdem populi et honori; et ad hoc est regia clementia satis prona, populo desiderans

Primo. Quod si ad honorem Dei et suum juxta crucis assumptae debitum velit in terrae sanctae subsidium proficisci, providebitur ei honorisice secundum condescentiam status sui, ita tamen quod non redeat nisi per regiam clementiam vocatus: rogabimus etiam dominum regem, et speramus efficaciter exaudiri, ut provideat proli suae.

His omnibus motu nostro subjungimus Wallensibus omnia pericula imminere longe gravius quam eis diximus oraculo vivae vocis: scribimus dure valde sed longe durius est obrui vi et armis, et in fine totaliter extirpari, quoniam omni die pericula nobis imminen-

Item. Longe difficilius est omni tempore in guerra esse in angustia cordis et corporis vivere, et semper in infidiis malignari, et cum hoc vivere et mori in peccato mortali continuo et rancore.

Îtem. De quo doleremus valde si ad pacem minime veniatis, indubitanter timemus contra vos debere sententiam ecclesiasticam intolerabiliter aggravari pro excessibus vestris; de quibus non poteritis vos aliquatenus excusare in quibus invenietis misericordiam, si ad pacem veniatis et de his nobis respondeatur in scriptis.

Reverendissimò in Christo patri ac domino J. Dei gratia Archiepiscopo Cantuariensi ac totius Angliæ primati suus in Christo devotus filius Lewelinus princeps Walliæ, dominus Snaudon, salutem cum desideriis benevolentiæ filialis ac reverentiis multimodis et honoribus, SANCTE pater, ficut vosmet consuluistis, ad gratiam regiam parati sumus venire sub forma tamen nobis secura et honesta: sed quia forma contenta in articulis nobis missis minime secura est et honesta prout nobis et consilio nostro videtur; et de qua multum admirantur omnes audientes, co quod plus tendit ad destructionem et ruinam populi nostri ac nostram, quam ad nostram honestatem et securitatem, nullo modo permittit consilium nostrum nos in ea consentire si vellemus; alii quoque nobiles et populus nobis subjectus nullo modo consentirent in eandem ob indubitatam destructionem et dissipationem quæ inde eis possent evenire.

Primo. Quod licet dominus rex de quatuor Cantredis et aliis terris ab eo datis magnatibus suis, ac de Insula Anglesey nullum voluerit habere tractatum, tamen consilium principis non permittit, si contingat aliquam pacem fieri, quin tractetur de premissis; eo quod isti Cantredi sunt de puro principis tenemento, in quibus merum jus habuerunt principes et prædecessores sui à temporibus Cambri filii Bruti, tum quia sunt de principatu, cujus consistmationem princeps C c 2

obtinet pro bonæ memoriæ Octobonum sedis Aposlolicæ legatum in Anglia, consensu domini regis et sui patris ad hoc intervenienti, sicut pater Chartas eorum inspicienti, tum quia etiam equius est quod veri hæredes teneant dictos Cantredos de domino rege pro pecunia et servitiis consuetis, quam eos dari extraneis et Advenis, qui et si fuerunt regere aliquam tamen per vim et potentiam.

Dicunt etiam comiter omnes tenentes de omnibus Cantredis Walliæ quod non funt ausi venire ad voluntatem regis ut de eis disponat secundum regiam ma-

Primo. Quod dominus rex nec pacta, nec juramenta, nec Chartas servavit ab initio versus dominum fuum principem et ipsos.

personas inivit crudelissimam tyrannidem.

Tertio. Quod non tenentur ad prædicta, cum sint homines principis qui etiam paratus est de dictis tenementis domino regi obedire per servitia consueta. Ad id quod dicit quod princeps veniet simpliciter et absolute ad voluntatem domini regis: respondetur quod cum nulli de dictis Cantredis ausi sint venire ad talem voluntatem propter causas prædictas, nec comitas eorum permittat principem venire ad dictam voluntatem modo

Item. Quod proceres regni procurent ut domino principi provideatur in mille libratis in aliquo loco Angliæ; dicatur quod illam provisionem non debet acceptare cum sit procurata per dictos proceres, qui nituntur ad exhæreditationem principis, ut habeant terras suas in Wallia. Item idem princeps non tenetur dimittere hæreditatem suam et progenitorum suorum in Wallia à tempore Bruti, et etiam sibi consirmatam per Romanæ sedis legatum, ut dictum est; et terram in Anglia acceptare, unde linguam, mores et leges ac consuetudines ignorat; ubi possent etiam sibi quædam malitiori imponi ex odio inveterato à vicinis Anglicis quibus terra illa privaretur in perpetuum.

Item. Ex quo rex proponit privare principem sua pristina hæreditate, non videtur probabile quod rex permitteret ei habere terram in Anglia ubi nullum jus videtur habere. Et si etiam non permitteretur principi terra sterilis et inculta jure hæreditario ab antiquo et debita in Wallia; nullatenus permitteretur eidem in Anglia terra fertilis culta et habundans.

Item. Quod dictus princeps ponat dominum regem in Seysino Snawdon absolute, perpetue et quiete: dicatur quod cum Snawdon sit de appendiciis principatus Walliæ, quem ipse et antecessores sui tenuerunt à tempore Bruti, ut dictum est; consilium suum non permittit eum renuntiare dicto loco, et locum nimis sibi debitum

Item. Populus Snawdon dicit, quod licet princeps vellet dare regi Seysinam eorundem, ipsi tamen nollent homagium facere alicui extraneo, cujus linguam, mores, legesque penitus ignorant. Quia sic posset contingere eos in perpetuum captivari, ac crudeliter tractari, ficut alii Cantredi circumquaque per Ballivos regis ac alios regales alias tractati fuerunt, crudelius quam Saraceni; prout patet in rotulis quos vobis miserunt sancte pater. Ista funt dicenda pro Davide fratre principis. Quod cum voluerit terram sanctam adire hoc faciet voluntarie et ex voto pro Deo non pro homine, unde invitus non peregrinabitur Deo dante; qui coacta servitia Deo novit displicere. Et si contingat ipsum in posterum terram sanctam adire bona ductus voluntate, non propter hoc deberent ipse et hæredes sui in perpetuum exhæreditari; immò potius præmium obtinere. Præterea quia princeps, et sui causa odii, ad aliquos concipiendi, vel lucri captandi non moverunt guerram alienas terras invadendo; fed fuam propriam hæreditatem jura libertatesque, necnon suorum defendendo; dominusque rex et fui odio inveterato, et causa lucrandi terras nostras guerram fecit: credimus in hoc justam guerram nos fovere, et speramus in hac Deum nos velle juvare, ac in ecclesiarum devastatores divinam ultionem convertere, qui ecclesias sunditus destruxerunt ac combusserunt, sacra ex eis rapuerunt, Sacer-Cc4 dotes, Clericos religiosos, claudos, surdos, mutos, infantes, ubera lactentes, ac debiles et miserabiles personas, ut usque sexu occiderunt; et alia enormia perpetrarunt, sicut in dictis rotulis vobis transmissis contineatur: unde absit à fancta paternitate vestra sententiam aliquam fulminare in alios quam in illos qui prædicta perpetrarunt. Nos enim qui regalibus praedicta passi fuimus, speramus à vobis super praemissis paternum solatium, et remedium obtinere; et in praedictos sacrilegos eorumque fautores, qui nullo super his privilegio desenduntur, animadvertere; ne prae desectu dignæ correctionis seu ultionis in eos exercendo prædicta mala in perpetuum per alios trahantur in exemplum.

Mirantur etiam quamplures in terra nostra, quod consuluistis nobis dimittere terram nostram propriam, et alienam adire inter hostes nostros comersando; quia ex quo non possumus pacem habere in terra quæ nostra est ipso jure nostro, minime poterimus in aliena terra inter hostes nostros pacisice conservari: et licet durum sit in guerra et insidiis vitam ducere; durius tamen est funditus destrui, et ad nihilum, niss Deus avertat, deduci populum Christianum qui nihil aliud quærit niss sur desendere; unde necessitas ad hoc nos cogit, et inimicorum cupiditas non ossendit; et vos, sancte pater, coram nobis dixistis, quod vos sententiastis in omnes qui impediunt pacem causa odii vel lucri; sed manifestum est qui sunt illi qui guerrant istis causis.

Ad hoc multi alii in regno Angliæ offenderunt regem et tamen nullos exhæredavit in perpetuum, ut dicitur; unde si aliqui ex nostris ipsum offenderunt injuste, dignum est ut satisfaciant prout possint sine exhæredatione; et sicut in vobis considimus, supplicamus quod ad hoc laboretis sancte pater: nam etsi nobis imponatur quod fregimus pacem, tamen illi verius fregerunt qui nullum sœdus vel pactum nobis ser-

Primo auditis rescripsit Archiepiscopus Wallensibus in hæc verba:

IN nomine domini, Amen. Cum nos frater J. per-missione divina Cantuariensis ecclesse minister humilis totius Angliæ primas, scientes nostro incumbere officio, pro vobis domine Leweline princeps Walliæ ac subditis vestris exponere nos et nostra spretis viarum incommodis et periculis, vestram adjuverinius præsentiam oves erroneas reducturi; et speculatoris sungentis officio vobis mysteriæ vivæ vocis diximus pericula quæ genti vestræ videbamus luce clarius imminere, subjunctis remediis eorundem; teste optantes altissimo juxta pontificale debitum cuilibet vestrum ecclesiam minimo de corpore nostro pontem facere ad falutis littora reducendo. Tandem vestris auditis precibus et angustiis eas ut necessitatis vestræ nuntius præsentavimus regiæ majestati, quem ab olim ad poenitentes adversarios introitum scimus esse propitium; ut quidam de vestris et aliis ut nobis certis constat indiciis ipsius clementia abutantur. Tractavimus infuper cum magnatibus et proceribus Angliæ præsentibus de modifacione gratiæ regiæ ipforum affistentia nostris vobis supplicationibus impretranda, cujus modificationis feriem per fervum Dei fratrem Johannem Wallensem vobis misimus in scriptum, una cum consilio nostro quod vobis secundum deum falubrius videbatur; vos autem deliberationem vestram nobis in quadam remissitis cedula per eundem, cujus cedulæ pernitiofas latebras vobis paterno affectu præsentibus aperimus. Primo igitur dictis vos juri nolle cedere quatuor Cantredarum, quia progenitores vestri à temporibus Cambri filii Bruti in eisdem juris plenitudinem habuerunt; sed ne simpliciores in vobis de successu hujusmodi gloriantur, salva in omnibus pace vestra, vobis licet inviti ipsius radicem originis ex gestis Britonum et Anglorum ad memoriam revocamus. Dispersis enim olim Trojanis pro eo quod Paridis adulterium defensarunt; fatemur progenitores vestræ multitudinis interpositis quibusdam seditionibus fugæ sibi præsidium assumpsisse; et utinam non maneat in eis hujusmodi contagii memoria qui sic libera matrimonia parvipendunt ut spurios et incestu genitos à successione hæreditaria ut dicitur non repellunt, quin potius uxores legitimæ Howeli da patrociniæ, contra Evangelium dato repudio fama teste, vel potius infamia repelluntur; qualiter demum Brutus Dianæ præfagiis non fine diaboli præftigiis per idolatriam immolato Cervæ Venatitiæ obtentis, insulam Britannicam pervaserit per famosas historias declaratur; pervaserit inquam inhabitatam insulam, agentibus statura proceris quarum peremit fortissimum Corineus. Gentibus inquam de boreali prasapia quæ non folum . . . . . . verum etiam Scythiam trans Danubium ab occidente nostro per Aquilonis latera usque in Orientales terminos occupavit. Quam ergo quæsumus fecerunt vobis injuriam Angli et Saxones ejustdem generis, si vos processu temporis ab usurpato dominio perturbarunt: cum scriptum esse noveritis, vae qui praedaris in omne praedaberis. Non oportet autem simplices in radice adulterina processu idololatriæ, et usurpationis spoliis gloriari. Progenitores insuper vestri moderniores, cum enervati deliciis sibi non sufficerent defenlandis, obruentibus eos Scotis et Pictis, denegato etiam eis Romani imperii præsidio postulato, ad Germanorum refugium convolârunt, qui venientes repudiarunt, hostes usque in praesentem diem fuarum labores manuum manducantes. Ex his causis quum fedet fola à vobis infula olim populo plena, vestro proscribente Jeremia, quia prophetae tui viderunt tibi vana et stulta; item praedictorum juribus Cantredorum confirmationem legati frivole allegatis, cum non fuerit intentionis fuae jura regia, seu etiam jura civilia et Canonica, sicut nec potuit enervare: pro crimine enim lesæ majestatis, in quod vos incidisse dicimini, juxta quod scribitur sexta quaestione. Secunda paragrapho; Si quis cum militibus, et 22. Quæst. ultima capitulo de forma fidelitatis. Omne perit jus haereditarium et expirat : in Cantredis igitur praedictis in quibus ab olim domino regi jus dicitur adquisitum, et in Snawdon ac caeteris quae teneris jure haereditario, nihil potestis sicut nec subditi vestris ut ex praeallegatis videtur, nisi ex sola regia clementia praestolari. Dicitur demum quod populus non vult ad gratiam regiam convolare, quia dominus rex, nec pacta, nec juramenta, nec chartarum fœdera principi conservavit. Et nos quaerimus ex cujus vel quorum istud sit judicio declaratum, nisi per vos qui in causa propria judicium usurpatis, et per singulas lustrales periodos pacem infringitis, innocentes jugulatis, incendia facitis, munitiones regias pro viribus vastatis; ac domini Howell da quitalia injuriarum remedia in lege fua quam vidimus instituit, autoritate quam ei diabolus delegavit. Praeterea in regem impungitis, dicentes, quod regales ecclesias et personas ecclesiasticas crudeli vastavit tyrannide, et consumunt; ad quod taliter respondemus, quod dominus rex praedicta mala nec fieri mandavit, nec rata habuit, quin potius nobis obtulit ultronei, quod quam citò aderit oportunitas ecclesiarum proponit dispendia resacire; quod differe usque ad sedatam guerræ tempestatem, ne si prius sieret destruerentur iterum per latrones. Præterea timetis in Anglia honorem suscipere, ne consequenter vobis occasionata malitia auferatur, cum tamen fateamini quod dominus re nullum fuum exhæredaverit inimicum: quod frustra vos timere credimus, si legaliter vivere vos et vestri didiceritis, et non a parti cum domino vestro contendere vel certare. Mores vobis et populo vestro causamini incognitos; et nos è contrario opinamur quod expediret vobis omnibus in modum alium et mores penitus transformari. Cum enim sitis sicut cæteri homines donis Dei gratuitis adornati, fed in vestro Anglo devoramini: ut nec ecclesiam juvetis contra hostes sidei militando; nec Clerum studio sapientiae, exceptis paucissimis, decoretis; quin potius ma-jor pars vestrum torpet otio et lasciviis, ut pene nesciat mundus vos esse populum, nisi per paucos ex vobis qui videntur ut plurimum in — mendicare. Deinde scribitis quod creditis altissimum vos juvare pro justitia decretantes; utinam inquam altissimus juvet vos falubriter et dirigat ad salutem. Sed ne ruinas aliquas Anglorum ex inconsideratione sua provenientes vestris velitis velitis meritis arrogare curetis advertere qualiter qui in cœlis habitat fatuos fublimat et elevat ad modicum ut perpetuo allidat; fic certe olium populus Dei electus ante harum repertam civitatem pro unius Anathemate consortis versus in fugam quosdam suorum perdidit bellatorum: sic certe quater centena millia bellatorum duodecim tribuum Ifrael in fuo numero et fortitudine confidentes ab unius tribus modico populo, occifis ex 40 millibus bellatorum, per vices varias sunt confusi: cum tamen purgato unius Anathemate, prædicta Civitas finaliter deleleta fuerit per illos, qui prius confusi fuerant, et per lacrymas placato domino cum jejuniis, oblatis facrificiis, tribus illa quæ praevaluerat prius, per prius confusos quasi totaliter sit deleta; sic certe aliter flagellat dominus filios quos recipit, et aliter quos decernit ut arbores steriles extirpare. Ista vobis scribimus in cordis amaritudine ab his partibus recedentes, nec prenidicare intendimus falubriori confilio, si vobis cœlitus destinetur, nec latre vos volumus quod nullum per vos invenimus excufationis fufficiens remedium, quo obstante minime debeatis in excors Irnam incidisse pernuntiari: dudum latet in Oxon confilio contra pacis regiæ turbatores, viam autem pacis aliam invenire non possumus, nec adhuc in spe sumus aliud obtinendia Sed si nobis aliquid consultius videatur agendum, vobis numquam claudemus gremium, nec auxilium denegabimus opportunum. Dat. apud Ruthelan 18 Calend. Decemb. Ann. Dom. 1282.
