KEY.

A person is only given one number and it is used as the family heading of the person, as well as in numbering this person as offspring of the parents. This is the "Key" to the work. For example Thomas Yale No. 44, page 126, was son of Thomas Yale No. 29, page 123. All family and children numbers are in numerical order, so any number can be located at once. Records of persons received late or overlooked, have been numbered with the letter "A" preceding.

PREFACE.

In compiling this work I have endeavored to present only definite positive facts, based upon competent and proven authorities. It is intended that mere fiction and tradition should have no part in the facts recorded herein, and the reader may be assured that the matter presented is authentic and founded entirely upon reliable historical, biographical, genealogical and private records.

I have kept well in mind the fact that the mere assumption, based upon a tradition or like unreliable authority, of descent from or connection with noted historical characters, should have no place in a work of this class, and the ancient genealogy of the Yales as presented herein is free of all suppositional matter and is a bare record of facts as established by anciently recorded pedigrees and reliable historical matter. The principal authorities consulted are: "The Welsh People" (1906), by John Rhys, M. A., Professor of Celtic in the University of Oxford, and "The Brynmor-Joneses," by David Brynmor-Jones, member of Parliament, "Burke's Peerage," "Burke's Landed Gentry," "The Life of Owen Glyndwr," by Bradley, "The Nobles and Castles of England and Wales," "The Dictionary of National Biographies," "Country Townships of the Old Parish of Wrexham," by Alfred Neobard Palmer, and various Encyclopedias and histories.

Substantial and valuable special information was also supplied, in part, by Mr. Alfred Neobard Palmer, of Wrexham, Wales, a recognized authority on Welsh pedigrees and family history, and by Mr. George F. Yale of Pwllheli, Wales, son of Wm. Corbet Yale-Jones-Parry of Brynmor-Jones Castle.

The principal original sources of information pertaining to early Welsh history, of the authorities named, are the "Brut," a history of the British Kings, and "Annales Cambriae," both being of ancient Cymric origin.

The sources of information for the genealogy of the Yales after settlement in America were, "The Yale Family," by Judge Elihu "The New Haven Historical Society Papers," the living Yales selves, and their descendants.

I am however especially indebted to several ladies and gentlemen who have unselfishly and loyally, rendered much valuable assistance in supplying records, information, etc., pertaining not only to their branches, but to other branches as well; among whom are Miss A. Yale, Houseville N. Y., Miss Charlotte Lilla Yale, Meriden Conn., Fanny I. Yale, Hartford, Mrs. Madeline Yale-Wynne, Chicago, C. C. King, Chicago, Mr. J. Hobart Yale, Meriden Conn., Mr. George Yale, Wallingford, Conn., Mr. William T. Yale, New York N. Y., Fred'k C. Yale, New York, N. Y., Mr. William Henry Yale, New York N. Y., Mr. Washington Yale, Minneapolis, Minn., Mr. F. B. Yale, Nebraska, Mr. D. E. Williams, Reno, Nev., Mr. Arthur Yale, Montreal, Canada, and Mr. M. B. Waterman, Buckley, Ills., and others. I wish to extend thanks to the large number of other members of the family and descendants, who have unstintingly and carefully supplied the records pertaining to their own branches; and in connection with these acknowledgments, I regret that it is necessary to state, that I have found it impossible to procure from some of the Yale families, by the addresses I have, the required information regarding their ancestry to enable me to enter their family records in this work; although I have made repeated and urgent requests. I also deeply regret that there are some few whose ancestry I have been unable to trace, even with their own aid, willingly extended. I mention these facts at this time, so that it may be understood that the author is not wholly responsible for the absence of such desirable and essential family records as my work is lacking.

As many of the early ancestors of the Yales were kings and princes of ancient Britain and Wales, and others prominent leaders of the Normans in their conquest of the Principality, I concluded that the most practical way to record the events in the lives of these important personages and present same in a connected manner and the order in which they appeared in the national life, was to write a brief history of the Kings of Britain and Wales.

In fact the lives of these ancestors were so intertwined with the nal life and constituted such an important part of it, that it would be possible to write their biographies without also writing a history of Wales; and it would likewise be impossible to write a history of Wales without writing their biographies.

Individual biographies are presented of those ancient ancestors of eminence whose careers were not sufficiently connected with Welsh affairs so that the principal events of their lives could be told in connection therewith.

The "Yale Pedigree" presented herein will make clear the various connections and the several lines of descent. The names are numbered and these numbers are also inserted in the history of Wales, in connection with the names of the same persons, where they first appear, and in some instances the number is inserted successively with the name. Usually, however, the number is only inserted once, it being expected that the name will be recognized, as it successively appears in the narrative. The names of the ancestors in the History are all printed in italics, to distinguish them from other names.

The Pedigree numbers are also used in connection with the "Genealogy of the Ancient Yales" and the biographies in connection with the same.

In reference to the family records, I will state that sometimes dates given by different members of a family for the same event would differ. In such cases I have used the date which seemed most likely correct.

Where no names of children are given it does not always follow that there were no children, but it means, at least, that no record of children was sent to me.

Addresses and dates of death, etc., are usually not given in the records of children, where the persons have individual family records in their own book.

Addresses given are the last known to the author.

INTRODUCTION.

The family name "Yale" originated in Wales and was formerly called "Ial" and "Yal" and comes from the commote, hundred, or district of Yale, in Powys Fadog, Wales. The district of Yale, together with the adjoining district of Bromfield on the west, have formed since the end of the thirteenth century, a lordship, known as the lordship of Bromfield and Yale. Both Bromfield and Yale are in the county of Denbigh.

The district of Yale is an upland plain bounded on all sides by hills and contains the old parishes of Llandysiles yn Yale, Bryn Eglwys, Lanarmon yn Yale, Llandegla yn Yale and Llanrones. Each parish, except the last named, being divided into townships.

The ancient Yales were descended from Osborn Fitz Gerald (Osbrwn Yddel), of the country of Merioneth, Wales; and one of his descendents, Ellis ap Griffith, married Margaret, the heiress of Plas yn Yale, in the lordship of Bromfield and Yale; and in this way the estate of Plas yn Yale came into the family, and the descendants of Ellis and Margaret later on definitely adopted the name Yale as a family surname; and with the exception of the Lloyds of Bodidris, with whom they were connected, were the most important family in Yale. Thus it will be seen that the name of Yale, as well as the estate of Plas yn Yale, were derived from the maternal side of the house. Dr. Thomas Yale, who died in 1577 and who was Chancellor of Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury and grandson of Ellis ap Griffith and his wife Margaret, was the first to definitely assume the surname of Yale; and his nephews, Thomas Yale and Dr. David Yale (Dr. David Lloyd), who were respectively the ancestors of the Yales of Plas yn Yale and of Plas Grono, continued the name.

Surnames in Wales did not pass from father to son, in the way to which we are now accustomed, until the latter part of the sixteenth century, and the practice was not definitely settled for a long time afterwards. Sons usually had for a surname, the given name of the father; however they often assumed names derived from estates, castles, towns or districts; and as we have previously noted, the family name "Yale" was derived from the name of the district of Yale, in the lordship of Bromfield and Yale.

The Yales, although natives of Wales, were of Italian and Norman as well as British blood. There seems however to be no evidence of Saxon stock in the ancestry.

The first ancestor recorded in the pedigree, in the direct male line is Dominus Otho, a nobleman from Florence Italy (a Florentine); but he was not the only ancestor of Italian blood, as Cuneda, the head of the long line of British kings and princes, from whom the Yales are descended on the maternal side of the house, was no doubt partly of Roman parentage.

The predominant strain in this ancient ancestry was however undoubtedly British (Brythonic), as the maternal ancestors were nearly all, if not all, Welsh (British), except Alice de Montgomery, through whom came the connection with the Normans.

As regards the personality and rank of these early ancestors, it can be properly stated that their political and social standing was on an equality with the great nobles and the rulers, of the times. There are but few, if any, families among the nobility of any land, that can point to a more honorable and noble lineage, than that of the Yales; descended as they are from the ancient kings and princes of Britain and from the greatest of all the Norman lords, Roger de Montgomery, (who was of the same family as William the Conqueror), as well as from Maurice Fitz Gerald, the commander of the first expedition in the Norman conquest of Ireland.

The antiquity of the Yale pedigree is equally eminent, dating back as it does, in the direct male line, to Dominus Otho, the Florentine noble, who came to England in 1057, nine years before the Norman conquest; and on the maternal side to Cuneda, the first ruler of the Cymric nation, about the year 415 A. D. But few noble, or in fact Royal families, can claim greater antiquity.

The pedigree presented herein will make clear, the connections re-rred to, and it will be noted that the Yales are connected with the house of Cunedda and the succeeding Kings and Princes, through three distinct maternal lines. One of these maternal ancestors being, Lowrie, daughter of Tudor Glyndwr (Tudor ap Griffith Vychan), and niece of the memorable Owen Glyndwr. Her great grandfather, Thomas ap Iewelyn, as will be noted, was also the ancestor of the five Tudor Kings and Queens of England, and the present King Edward VII, as well.

Her grandfather Griffith Vychan, was descended also from the Kings and Princes of Wales and the Princes of Powys Fadog, who lived at Castle Dinas Bran.

Another one of the three Welsh princesses referred to in the preceding paragraph was Nesta, the "Helen of Wales," who was not only great herself and in her ancestry, but great in her posterity as well.

The third maternal ancestor referred to was, Gladys, daughter of the Prince of North Wales.

In referring to the pedigree and history of Wales, it will be seen that the ancestors of the Yales, among the Kings and Princes of Britain and Wales, were mainly the sovereign rulers. Attention is called to this fact, as there were many under kings and princes of minor importance, who ruled over smaller territories, which were parts of the whole and subject to the sovereign king or prince.

In writing the foregoing particulars relative to the ancient ancestry of the Yales, I am sensibly aware of the prevalent practice among writers of works of this class, to endeavor to connect the family lineage with some noted historical character, whether justified in so doing by authentic records or not, and I realize that many are disposed to scoff at such claims; however I can do no less than follow the indisputable authorities bearing on the origin of the Yales and their ancestry and feel sufficient justification in presenting the matter set forth, in the absolute knowledge that it is amply substantiated by competent and reliable records.

The foregoing is the pedigree of A 20 Owain ab Howel, son of Howel Da, and as will be noted carries his genealogy back a very long time; in fact to Beli et Anna, and the same persons who are the first in pedigree. (X)

These pedigrees are of genuinely very ancient origin and in the opinion of eminent authorities, there is no reason at all to doubt their authenticity. Anna, the earliest of the line, is said to have been daughter of the Emperor of Rome. It is quite likely that the earlier portions of these pedigrees, however, are founded, at least partly, on tradition. "Map" means "son of."

These pedigrees are presented verbatim, as examples of the character of such documents, from Cymric sources.

The above is a very ancient compilation and probably is a list of Goidelic Kings and Princes from Beli et Anna, to times contemporary with Cuneda and his more immediate descendants. It will be noted that Coyl hen (Coel Hen) or Coel Godebog, the father of Cuneda's wife, has a place here. Dyfnwal Moelmud (Dumngual Moilmut) the Cymric law maker, before the time of Howel Da, is also named in the pedigree.

Other authorities state that Coel Hen (Coel Godebog) was a King of Britain.

WALES.

The Dominion or Principality of Wales may be described as a broad indented peninsula, situated in the South Western part of Great Britain. Its greatest length from North to South is about 135 miles, and its breadth from East to West ranges from 35 to 95 miles. It is bounded on the North by the Irish sea and the estuary of the Dee, on the West by St. George's Channel, on the South by the Bristol Channel and on the East by the English counties: Cheshire, Shropshire, Herfordshire, and Monmouthshire. The present Eastern boundary was settled by Henry VIII.

The counties of Wales are named as follows, with their Welsh equivalents.

Anglesey.	Ynys Mon.
Carnarvonshire.	Sir Gaernarfon.
Denbigshire.	Sir Dinbych.
Flintshire.	Sir Fflint.
Merionethshire.	Sir Feirionyd.
Montgomeryshire.	Sir Drefaldwyn.
Becknockshire.	Sir Frycheiniog.
Cardiganshire.	Sir Aberteifi.
Carmarthenshire.	Sir Gaerfyrdin.
Glamorganshire.	Sir Forgannwg.
Pembrokeshire.	Sir Benfro.
Radnorshire.	Sir Faesyfed.
Monmouthshire.	Sir Fynwy.

The first six comprise what is generally termed North Wales, and the remainder South Wales. Their boundaries preserve to some extent the ancient divisions of the Principality. There are also two large country boroughs, Cardiff and Swansea.

Monmouthshire is technically an English county, but is essentially Welsh in origin, language and customs. The thirteen counties are divided into "hundreds," poor-law unions, highway districts, etc. The most ancient political divisions were Cantrefs and Cymwds. These land divisions, however, should not be confounded with the division of the "Cymric," land into small kingdoms or principalities, among the regal or princely families.

The geographical boundaries and divisions given by countries are, as indicated, those of the present day and of later times. The Wales, or Britain, of more ancient times, in the days of the Romans and for several centuries thereafter, comprised a large part of what is now Great Britain. Extending from the Bristol Channel on the South, to the Clyde and the Forth on the North, including as well the South Western peninsula.

Wales is quite mountainous, particularly in the North, where Snowdon, the culminating point of South Britain, rises to a height of 3571 feet. It is rich in minerals, particularly copper, coal and iron. Has many beautiful lakes and numerous rivers, also many fertile valleys.

The Welsh cherish their ancient Brythonic, or Cymric (Celtic) language, with great affection and it is quite generally in use among the people at the present time. In 1891 there were 508,000 persons in Wales who habitually spoke only Welsh; 402,000 who spoke both Welsh and English, and 759,000 who spoke only English.

In Welsh "C" has always the sound of "K," however the present Welsh alphabet does not recognize "K".

"G" never has the English sound of "J" or "dzh," as in John or James.

"F" is sounded "V", but "V" is not included in the modern Welsh alphabet.

"D" has the sound of "th" in the English words "this" and "that".

"L" is a simple and single consonant.

"R" is trilled as in Italian, and in "rh", it is a surd strengthened by the aspirate.

"S" is never sounded "Z."

"W" and "I" may be either vowels or consonants.

"U" is sounded like "i" in the word "bit", and so sometimes is "Y." Thus "Gruffyd" or "Gruffud" is sounded and spelled in English "Griffith."

The literature of the Welsh is of considerable consequence and note, but the compositions of their Bards are the most celebrated and best known. These poetry making singers had an important part in the national life of ancient Wales.

The earliest laws of Wales, of which we have the most definite knowledge, were established and promulgated by Howel Da (Howel the Good), one of the ancient Kings of all Wales, about 942; and that they were good laws and loved by the people, is well evidenced by the fact that they remained in force throughout Wales, practically uninterruptedly, until the conquest of Edward I. in 1282, a period of 340 years, and in some sections for a much longer time. It is stated that Howel summoned four "laics" and two "clerics" from each commote in his dominions, to meet at Ty Gwyn and that this assembly, under his direction and guidance, formed these laws.

These codes deal first with the organization of the household of the King. Howel appointed the following servants of the court:

- Chief of the Household.
- Priest of the Household.
- Steward.
- Chief Falconer.
- Judge of the Court.
- Chief Groom.
- Page of the Chamber.
- Bard of the Household.
- Silentary.
- Chief Huntsman.
- Mead Brewer.
- Mediciner.
- Butler.
- Door Ward.
- Cook.
- Candle-bearer.

Including eight officers of the queen:

- Steward.
- Priest.
- Chief Groom.
- Page of the Chamber.
- Handmaid.
- Doorward.
- Cook.
- Candle-bearer.

The rights, privileges and duties of these officers were set out in great detail. The Chief of the Household was required to be of the royal blood.

Besides these twenty-four officers, there were eleven servants of the household, i. e. :

Groom of the rein.
Foot holder.
Land Maer.
Apparitor.
Porter.
Watchman.
Woodman.
Baking woman.
Smith of the Court.
Chief of song.
Laundress.

There was also a "table of precedence," which went into much detail.

The near relations of the king formed an exclusive, royal class. Next in rank were the nobles or "high men"; then the bonedigion, (gentlemen); and then the unfree persons; and finally a class of menial or domestic slaves, which of course was the lowest class of all.

Courts were established by these laws, judges appointed and minute and detailed regulations were made, for the duties, rights and privileges of the people and for the enactment of justice in all things and in all matters, according to the views and ideas of these ancient lawmakers, which were evidently wise and just in the eyes of the people, who fondly cherished the laws which they promulgated, for many centuries and fought numerous, desperate and bloody battles for their retention, as against the English laws, which their enemies sought to enforce upon them.

HISTORY OF WALES

AND

The Kings and Princes.

(Names of Ancestors of the Yales are in Capitals. Note the pedigree numbers.)

Wales of to-day represents and for many centuries past has represented, in its people, language and customs, what remains of ancient Britain and the Brittones or Britons (British). The British Isles (Great Britain and Ireland) were first peopled by an Aboriginal race, perhaps the Picts, then came the Goidels in the sixth century before the Christian era, or before; a branch of the Celts of the Aryan race, who spread over perhaps most of what is now England, and Scotland, before they were pressed and attacked by the Brythons or Britons, who came in about the second century before Christ. The Brythons were another branch of the Celts, speaking a different yet related language and having customs and usages not known to the Goidels. The language of the Goidelic, is represented at this time by the Gaelic of Ireland, of the Isle of Man and Scotland, while the Brythonic is now represented by the Welsh. The British tribes called Silures, Dimetæ and Ordovices were of Goidelic or Brythonic Stock.

These early Celtic tribes had a long line of British Kings who were very important in their day, both before and after the coming of the Romans to Britain. Julius Cæsar led the Romans in their first invasions in the years 55 and 54 B. C. and in the year 43 A. D., they began an aggressive campaign which resulted finally about the year 78 A. D., in Roman supremacy throughout the greater part of Britain. The Romans governed the country and protected the inhabitants from other invaders in their accustomed aggressive way. They built, about the year 120 A. D., a wall from the Solway to the Tyne, called "Hadrian's Wall," after Emperor Hadrian; and about the year 143 his successor built a turf wall from the Clyde to the Forth, which was rebuilt in masonry in 208 by the Emperor Severus. These walls were constructed for protection against the warlike tribes in the North. The civil administration of Roman Britain was practically subordinate to the military system. The head of the civil organization was called, Vicar of the Britannias (Vicarius Britanniarum). The military command was distributed as follows: the Count of Britain, who had command of a body of troops not fixed to any particular locality; The General or Duke of Britain (Dux Britanniarum) or (Dux Britanniae) who had command of the troops on the Wall and in the country south of it to the Humber; and the Count of the Saxon Shore, who had charge of the south east part of the island, Britain was treated as a single Roman province until the year 210, when Severus divided it into two, called Lower and Upper Britain. In 297, Diocletian divided it into four provinces and in 369 a fifth was made, called Valentia.

The affairs of the Roman Empire required, finally, early in the fifth century, the support of all her legions at home, and in the year 410, the Roman troops and Roman authority were withdrawn from Britain and the Emperor of Rome concerned himself no more with the affairs of the island.

After the departure of the Romans the inhabitants seem to have maintained a more or less successful resistance against the ravages of the Picts and Scots of the North, but according to the Saxon narrative, they were finally induced to seek the aid of the Saxons, to repel these ferocious Northern neighbors, and three ships with 1600 men were sent to them under the command of the Saxon brothers Hengest and Horsa, about the year 449. A complete victory was soon obtained against the foe and then the Saxons turned their arms against the Britons; thus commencing the Saxon conquest of Britain, which was bitterly contested for more than 150 years. The Saxons were aided by other Teutonic (German) tribes, the Angles (English) and Jutes, and finally in this period named, gained supremacy over all of Britain except Strathclyde, (a medieval British Kingdom comprising parts of Southwestern Scotland and Northwestern England), Wales and West Wales, (Cornwall). The resistance of the Britons was determined, tenacious and heroic, bit-tly contesting every foot and every inch to the last extremity, with a ferocious and aggressive foe, undoubtedly greatly superior in numbers as well as in equipment. The Saxon conquest of Britain was different, and had different results, than that of any other conquest known to history. In other conquests a considerable portion of the conquered people have remained with the land and become assimilated by the conquerors, but with these Britons it was not so; when finally compelled to yield to the force of arms, practically the entire population left their homes and the land and retreated with their fighting men, leaving to the conquerors uninhabited and also, no doubt, devastated territory. These results of the struggle account for the fact that the population of England offers no evidence, generally speaking, of the assimilation of Celtic blood, while the population of Wales, to which the Britons were mainly finally driven, is predominately British (Celtic). The term "Brittones" yields in Welsh the name "Brython," a "Briton or Welshman."

As before indicated, the portions of Britain as yet unconquered by the end of the sixth century, or about the year 600, comprised the entire western part of the island, from the river Clyde in Scotland, to the English Channel; this territory being represented by Strathclyde, afterwards called Cumbria, a Cymric (British) Kingdom, the Kingdom or Principality of Wales and West Wales (now Cornwall); and as will be seen by reference to current maps, it comprised, in addition to all of Wales of the present day, and all of England on the Western and Southwestern coasts, a large part of Southwestern Scotland as well.

This large remaining British territory was not however intact as late as the year 600, as the Britons of Cornwall, Devon, Somerset and Gloucestershire had been permanently severed from the Britons of what is now Wales, by the Saxon victory at the battle of Deorham in the year 577. The desperate struggle continued, the Saxons, Engles (Angles, or Englishmen) and Jutes were met by courage and valor equal to their own, no territory was given up by the Briton or gained by the conqueror, and the price had been paid in the blood of the contestants. As each bit of ground was torn away by the stranger, the Briton sullenly withdrew from it, only to turn and fight doggedly for another.

The next event of great historical importance was the battle of Chester in 616, (the date given by Saxon writers is 607, but 616 seems more likely correct, according to Celtic authority.) At this battle 2000 British monks, from Bangor Icoed Monastery, who stood apart from their army, with arms outstretched in prayer, were ruthlessly slaughtered by the English or Saxons, under Æthelrith. This victory of the English was complete, and by the fall of Chester, which stood at the juncture of the British Kingdoms of Wales and Cumbria, the Welsh were permanently cut off from their northern allies, and Britain as a single political body practically ceased to exist; the British territories of Wales, Cumbria and Cornwall, having been permanently segregated from each other by conquest.

Before proceeding further with the narrative it is best to deal briefly with the political organization of the Britons after the departure of the Romans. It seems likely that they must have for a time endeavored to maintain the offices of authority to which they had been accustomed for several centuries under Roman domination; however, it is probable that the actual government was administered mainly by a number of sub-kings or princes, over their respective tribes. It is definitely known, however, that sometime after the Romans left, the Britons in the western portions of the island, comprising Cumbria, Wales and perhaps Cornwall and other sections, from the Clyde in the North to the English Channel on the South, organized themselves into some sort of a confederation known as the "Cymry." It is impossible to state when the national life of the Cymry began, but its inception was no doubt partly due to the assumption of the authority of the Brythons over the Goidels and partly to the necessity of organization of these two branches of Celts to withstand the encroachments of the Saxons, Angles and Jutes. At any rate they considered themselves collectively as one nation, from the time they recognized the term Cymry and acknowledged the over-lordship of a king or ruler who was called the "Gwledig," and whose office, or dignity, was sooner or later known as the "Crown of Britain." The authority of the gwledig appears to have been partly based upon his claim to be the successor of the Roman officer called the Dux Britanniarum, and partly on earlier tribal notions of political and military organization. In time the territory over which the confederation spread came to be called "Cymru" and the predominant language, "Cymraeg." However the national terms were "Britain" and "Britons," until the territory was finally reduced to the confines of Wales, and even much later; in fact until about 1135

The word Cymro means "compatriot" and also "Welshman;" the plural being "Cymry."

As regards the rulers or kings in Britain subsequent to Roman occupation, the names of Vortigern and King Arthur are prominent in the English histories; the former in connection with the Hengest and Horsa narrative and the latter in connection with heroic exploits pertaining to the struggles of his countrymen with the Teutonic tribes. The Celtic authorities do not seem to disclose anything especially definite as to the careers of either of these characters, as regards the parts they took in actual events, or the territory over which they ruled.

In any event the earliest ruler of this British organization, or of the Cymry and of "Cymru" (the land of the Cymry) of which there is distinct evidence from Cymric sources, was (A 1) CUNEDA, whose name is well known to Welsh literature. In fact, the beginning of the history of the Cymric nation, as an independent political body, must be associated with the migration into North Wales of a Brythonic tribe, whose chief was this CUNEDA WLEDIG, (the ruler) and who established his rule over Wales, and united the Celtic tribes of the west of Britain into a kind of confederation under his leadership. This was soon after the Romans left Britain, perhaps about the year 415 A. D., and before the beginning of the Saxon or Teutonic conquest of Britain.

CUNEDA was the son of Ætern (Æternus), who was son of Patern Pesrut (Paternus of the Red Tunic). "The Red Tunic" probably had reference to the purple of office. Patern Pesrut was son of Tacit (Tacitus). CUNEDA'S ensign was a "Red Dragon," which came with the title of Dux Britanniaë, from the Romans, and it was the standard of the rulers of Britain and Wales for many centuries after him. The title Dux Brittonum afterwards became Rex Brittonum, or king. His wife was daughter of Coel Hen (Coel Godebog), who was of the line of ancient British Kings who ruled in Britain before the Romans came to the island. It seems certain that CUNEDA'S family were Christains and perhaps partly of Roman descent.

CUNEDA and his sons were no doubt the founders of the British or Cymric Nation, which arose after the Romans left Britain, and the institution of this national confederation of the British tribes under one ruler, was no doubt partly due to the necessity of such an organization to combat the encroachments of the Teutonic tribes which began, as before stated, about 449.

CUNEDA had held after the departure of the Romans, the title and authority of the Dux Britanniae, and this office seems to have represented the predominant military authority in the island. He was in immediate command of the troops on the Roman wall after the Romans went away, but later, in response to appeals from North Wales, he marched there with his troops and expelled the Goidels and Scots from that territory, and organized a government, which sooner or later spread its authority over all of Wales and other portions of Western Britain, comprising most if not all, of the western territory, from the English channel on the South to the River Clyde in the North.

The authority of CUNEDA as ruler (the "Crown of Britain") descended to his sons, and thus was founded a dynasty, which retained its sovereignty until the death of Llewelyn in 1282, a period of nearly 900 years; becoming one of the very oldest Royal families of western Europe. The rule of the family of CUNEDA no doubt continued over western Britain in the larger sense for a very long time, as his great great grandson (A5) MAELGWN, exercised sway over the whole of the country from the Firth of Forth to the Severn Sea, about the years 535 to 570, and the sovereignty of the family was not likely materially lessened until the battles of Doerham in 577 and of Chester in 616, and not finally reduced to the confines of Wales until the defeat and death of (A 10) King CADWALLON in 635 and in the defeat of his son (A 11) King CADWALADR THE BLESSED in the year 664. Anyway, Maelgwn's son (A 6) RHUN, seems to have maintained the family prestige over the larger territory during his reign. CADWALADR is said to have been the last Cymric King (King of the Britons) to wear the "Crown of Britain," and this is no doubt true as regards sovereignty over the Cymry of Britain outside of Wales, for it is certain that after his defeat the authority of the descendants of CUNEDA, as rulers, did not extend beyond the borders of Wales, for any settled period of time. King CADWALLON, the father of CADWALADR, was great great great grandson of King Maelgwn (Mailcun), and the latter was, as before stated, great great grandson of CUNEDA.

From the death of CADWALADR in 664 to the death of Gruffyd ab Llewelyn in 1063, a period of about 400 years, the authentic history of Wales affords but few details pertaining to national events; the records seem to have preserved the names of a line of kings or princes, with only brief accounts of their deeds, consisting principally of battles and skir-ishes with their English and Danish foes, and between their own tribes.

The Cymric nation in passing to the sons of CUNEDA, of which there were nine, (some authorities say twelve) was divided into a number of Kingdoms or principalities and the Kingdom of North Wales (Gwyned), assumed from the earliest organization to have had a sort of over-lordship over the others. The King of Gwyned was also the King of the Cymric nation, when the Cymry first emerged into history, and also when Cymru territory covered practically all of Western Britain, from the Clyde in present day Scotland in the North, to the English Channel on the South; as well as afterwards, when the land of Cymru had been reduced to the boundaries of Wales. Therefore it will doubtless be understood that Wales consisted of a number of small kingdoms or principalities, each of which had its King or Prince, subject in a way, to the over-lordship of the King of Gwyned, who was by inheritance, the King of the Cymry and therefore of Wales. All of these Welsh Kings and princes, from the greatest to the smallest, owed their authority to their descent from CUNEDA, or by virtue of marriage to his descendants.

The quarrels of the Welsh rulers were numerous and frequent, also sometimes sanguinary and certainly continued; as there were doubtless but few years free from civil strife, during the long period from CADWALADR's death in the year 664, to the final extinction of Welsh independence in 1282, a stretch of 618 years. Who would say that there is not a probability that Welsh independence might have continued to the present day, had it not been for this weakening civil strife.

The ancient principal divisions of Wales were Gwyned, (North Wales) Powys (Mid-Wales), and South Wales (sometimes called Deheubarth). These three principal divisions were also sub-divided into small principalities or kingdoms, such as Mon, Powys Fadog, Dyfed, Gwent and others, each having its own king or prince. All of the rulers of these principal divisions and sub-divisions being, as before stated, according to the ancient theory of the government of the Cymric nation, subject to the over-lordship of the King of Gwyned. This authority was sometimes almost absolute, or at least quite definite, and at other times quite nominal, being in fact known almost only in theory, for sundry periods.

The Rulers of Gwyned immediately succeeding CADWALADR were, according to the most trustworthy evidence, successively, (A 12) IUTGUAL (also called Idwal Ywrch) who reigned until 720; (A 13) RHODRI MOLWYNOG (called King of the Britons), who died in 754; (A 14) KYNAN or CYNON (called also Conan Tindaethwy) who died in 817; (A 15) ESYLLET (or Ethil) a daughter of Cynon, who married Merfyn Frych and reigned until the year 841; and their son (A 16) MERFYN FRYCH (or Mermin), who died in battle with the English in 844. Then came Rotri, or (A 17) RHODRI MAWR, (RODERICK the Great). "Mawr" means in English "the Great." RHODRI was one of the greater rulers of Wales. He was the hereditary King of Gwyned, and in addition to whatever ancient authority this position held, he also became through his wife, daughter of Meurig ab Dyfnwal, King of Ceredigion, lord over part of South Wales, and through his grandmother Nest, ruler over Powys. He fought many battles with the Mercians and Danes, and in 877 he was slain in battle with the Saxons. He is said to have been absolute ruler over all of Wales and while he was descended from CUNEDA, it is also stated in Burke's Landed Gentry, page 1328, of 1906, that he was descended from Coel Godebog, 75th British King, and Beli Bawr, sovereign of Britain, and this is confirmed by the ancient pedigree herein, as well as by other authorities. After his death, three of his sons assumed authority over his possessions. His son (D 18) ANARAWD had North Wales, another son (A 18) CADELL, had South Wales and the third son Merfyn, had Powys. They were called "the three diademed princes."

Before continuing with the succession of events, it is best to state that Offa of Mercia, (King of one of the Saxon or English Kingdoms), in 757 to 776 and later, engaged in fierce contests with the Welsh, and about 776 built the famous Offa's dyke, a wall of earth, from about the estuary of the Dee to the mouth of the Wye; which was recognized for a time as the boundry line of Cymru. Also it is well to state at this time, that about the years 809-817, Ecgbryht the Saxon King, subdued the Cymric Kingdom of Cornwall, which had been separated from the Cymry of Wales in 577, by the battle of Doerham.

Returning to RHODRI's successors: ANARAWD ruled in Gwyned for 38 years. His palace was at Aberfraw, Anglesey. He died in 915 and was succeeded by his son (D 19) IDWAL VOEL, whose wife was his cousin Avandreg, daughter of Merfyn, King of Powys. ANARAWD defeated the Saxons in a great battle near the Conway in 880.

CADELL, King of South Wales, or Deheubarth, whose palace was Castle Dinefwr or Dynevor, in Carmarthenshire, South Wales, died some years before his brother ANARAWD, about 907, and was succeeded by his son (A 19) HOWEL, afterwards called (A 19) HOWEL DA, (Howel "the Good.") There is no record of Merfyn's descendants retaining any claim to Powys. During the reigns of IDWAL and HOWEL almost universal peace prevailed in Wales. IDWAL was however killed in battle with the English in 943 and his cousin HOWEL DA, became his successor, as King of Gwyned; thus becoming the ruler over both North and South Wales and the "King of the Britons"; or putting it in another way, King of Cymru.

HOWEL DA was the law maker of Wales. The ancient Welsh laws were compiled by him and under his direction, about the years 942-950. He died in 950 after a long, peaceful and prosperous reign. He was a great and good king. His wife was Elen, daughter of Ioumare ab Hy-nid, King of Dyfed.

Peace disappeared from Wales with the death of HOWEL DA, and for the next 113 years, until the death of Gruffyd ab Llewelyn in 1063, sanguinary strife with the English and Danes and between the Welsh princely families, was almost incessant. There was war at once between (A 20) OWAIN, Dyfnwal, Rhodri and Edwyn, the sons of HOWEL, on one side, and Ieuaf and Iago the sons of Idwal Voel, on the other, for the possession of North Wales. HOWEL'S sons were defeated at a battle at Carno in 950 and Ieuaf and Iago assumed joint authority over Gwyned, setting aside the rights of an elder brother, (D 20), MEURIG ab IDWAL VOEL, whom they blinded and imprisoned. The sons of Howel however again invaded Gwyned in 954, but were a second time defeated in a battle at Llanrwst by the sons of Idwal, who in return then invaded South Wales, but were driven back with great slaughter.

HOWEL'S four sons, as will be understood, succeeded to the Kingdom of Deheubarth (South Wales), but lost whatever rights they had in North Wales, by defeat in the battles mentioned. Dyfnwal, Rhodri and Edwyn soon died (about the years 951-953) and (A 20) OWAIN ab HOWEL reigned alone until his death in 987 or 989. OWAIN'S long reign of about 37 years was not especially eventful; there were the usual raids of the Danes to contend against and some conflicts with the English; also some raids conducted by his sons (A 21) MAREDYD and (C 21) EINEON, for the extension of territory. He was succeeded in Deheubarth by his son (A 21) MAREDYD ab Owain.

In Gwyned the brothers Ieuaf and Iago had quarrelled and Iago seized Ieuaf and caused him to be blinded and then hanged; but Ieuaf had a son Howel, who soon avenged his father's death by expelling Iago and taking possession of Gwyned himself in the year 972. Iago was captured by the Danes in 978 and nothing more is heard of him. This Howel ab Ieuaf, also called Howel Drwg, (meaning Howel the Bad) soon had to contest for his kingdom with Kystenin or Cystenin, a son of Iago, who was aided by Godfrey, son of Harold of England; but Howel defeated them at Hirbarth, and Kystenin was slain. In 984 Howel was killed by the "Saxons through treachery," He left two sons, Maig, who was killed in 985, and Cadwallon, who took possession of Gwyned, but he also was almost immediately defeated and killed in battle by MAREDYD ab OWAIN, King of Deheubarth. Thus again the Kingdoms of Deheubarth (South Wales) and Gwyned (North Wales) were united under one head; however MAREDYD'S rule over Gwyned seems to have been only nominal. It is stated that he also ruled in Powys by right of his mother, and he is placed by Caradog, an eminent Welsh authority, in the line of the kings or princes who ruled over all Wales. He was chiefly occupied in engagements with the Danes and in attacks on Gwyned and Morgannwg, and he fairly maintained in very disturbed times, the prestige of the house of HOWEL DA. He died a natural death in 998 or 999, leaving only one child, a daughter, (A 22) ANGHARAD, who married Llewelyn ab Seisyllt, and also later on, Cynfyn. The former by right of his wife, assumed the government of Deheubarth.

Returning to the affairs of Gwyned we find that (D 21) IDWAL a son of Meurig, who was a son of IDWAL VOEL and brother of Ieuaf and Iago, had returned in 992 and claimed the Kingdom from MAREDYD ab OWAIN, and was successful in a battle with Maredyd's sons in 993, whereby he wrested MAREDYD'S authority in North Wales from him and became king of that domain. He did not enjoy his success long, however, for he was killed, supposedly by the Danes, in 995. He left a young son (D 22) IAGO who was put aside for a time, but many years later finally became ruler over Gwyned.

Following the death of (D 21) IDWAL ab MEURIG, Cynan ab Howel and Aedan ab Blegored, also others, aspired to the rule of Gwyned.

ynan was killed in battle in 1003 and Aedan and his four sons were killed in 1016 in a fight with Llewelyn ab Seisyllt, who as we have seen, was King of Deheubarth; and thus again these two kingdoms were brought under one ruler. With the reign of Llewelyn began a fresh growth of Cymric power, which attained its greatest development in the reign of his son Gruffyd ab Llewelyn. The English and Danes, who had harassed the Welsh for so many of the preceding years, were very busy with their own affairs in England at this time and the Cymry were therefore afforded some relief from their attacks, for a considerable period.

Furthermore, during this period, in 1016, Cnut the Dane, became King of England and he wisely exerted himself to promote trade and manufacturing, rather than war, and the incursions of the Danish marauders from the sea ceased entirely.

It is stated that Llewelyn also ruled over Powys, but it is not positively certain that he did, at any rate he was the ruler of both Gwyned and Deheubarth for a number of years, with great credit to himself, and during a period of prosperity among his people. There were two rebellions in South Wales during his reign, in 1019 and 1020, both of which were promptly subdued. Llewelyn died in 1023 at the height of his power. He left a son, Gruffyd, who took an important part in affairs later, but during the earlier years after Llewelyn's death, IAGO the son of IDWAL AB MEURIG, mentioned in a preceding paragraph, became ruler over Gwyned, and Deheubarth was seized by Rhyderch ab Iestyn. The latter was slain by Irish-Scots in 1031 or 1033 and Howel and Maredyd, sons of Edwin, who was son of Eineon, a grandson of HOWEL DA, took his place, and although the sons of Rhyderch revolted and a battle was fought a year later at Hiraethwy, they retained the kingdom. Meredyd however was soon afterwards killed in an obscure conflict, and Howel was left in sole possession of Deheubarth.

Some six years after these events, in the year 1037, Gruffyd ab Llewelyn, the young son of Llewelyn ab Seisyllt, who had however reached manhood, asserted his rights and attacked IAGO, King of Gwyned, and slew him and seized his kingdom; this attack, however, seems to have been incited by Iago having given protection to one Iestyn ab Gwrgant, who had ravished Arden, Gruffyd's cousin, a daughter of Robert ab Seisyllt, and then fled to him. Gruffyd immediately supplemented his assumption of rule over Gwyned with other aggressive campaigns and the Cymry suddenly developed, under his leadership, a military capacity and power which had not been displayed for centuries; and during his reign reached greater strength than had before been attained since Cadwaladr. He united the forces of Wales under his leadership, after having brought the other Welsh Kingdoms under his rule, and became a factor of considerable importance in the affairs of the whole island, and a dangerous and powerful foe to the King of England. He led several campaigns into England; the first was into Mercia in 1039, where he defeated the English in a battle at Rhyd-y-Groes on the Severn, in which Edwine, brother of Earl Leofric of Mercia, was slain. Afterwards he formed an alliance with Earl Leofric and married his granddaughter, Ealdgyth, daughter of his son Ælfgar, who in later years became the wife of Harold II. of England.

Gruffyd was on friendly terms with Edward the Confessor, King of England, and secured from him a grant of all the lands west of the Dee, that had formerly been possessed by the English.

In 1052 he again invaded England and fought a battle with "the landsmen as well as the Frenchmen of the Castle" in Hereford near Leominster, inflicting considerable loss on his enemies.

In 1055 his father-in-law, Ælfgar, Earl of Mercia, was outlawed and fled to Ireland, returning to Gruffyd in Wales with a fleet of eighteen ships, they invaded England at the head of a great force, defeated the English under Ralph the Earl, near Hereford, with great slaughter. Then took and burned Hereford and slew the priests who were in the church, retiring with much booty. Harold's son Godwine, was then made Earl in Ralph's place and a great English army was gathered; but Gruffyd evaded a conflict. Negotiations were then taken up between Harold and Ælfgar and Gruffyd. Ælfgar was in-lawed as Earl and Gruffyd gave up the lands West of the Dee, previously granted to him.

There was again some fighting between Gruffyd and the English in 1058, but in the main he remained quiet until after the death of Ælfgar about 1062. It seems he must have given the English some trouble in the latter part of 1062, for Harold, (who in 1066 became the King of England), decided it seems, to attempt to crush this dangerous and formidable enemy. He attacked the chief palace of Gruffyd at Rhuddlan, near the end 1062; Gruffyd escaped by sea and Harold burned the place, with the remaining ships.

This event had an unfavorable effect upon Gruffyd's power and prestige, especially in South Wales; and it is evident that he had many enemies among the Welsh, who regarded him as an oppressor and tyrant.

Harold followed up his first success and in conjunction with his brother Tostig planned a campaign by both land and sea, Harold taking command of the fleet and Tostig of the land forces. They began this vigorous campaign early in the summer of 1063. The fleet left Bristol and sailed along the coast, landing at points where damage could be inflicted. The English land forces gave up their armour and fought much after the same fashion as the Welsh. No quarter was given and the fighting, while of the guerilla kind, was desperate and furious. The Welsh finally made a truce with Harold, and Gruffyd, it is stated by the chronicler, was slain in August 1063 by Welshmen, because "of the war he waged with Harold the Earl." It is also stated that the Welsh sentenced him to deposition.

Harold had been ruthless in his campaign against Gruffyd, but as soon as he had been disposed of he proceeded to dispose of the kingdom, by dividing it between two native Princes of Wales, who were half brothers of Gruffyd: (A 23) BLEDYN AB CYNFYN and (B 23) RHIWALLON AB CYNFYN; however considerable portions, in the Vale of Clwyd, a part of Radnorshire, and a portion of Gwent, became from this time English possessions.

As stated, Gruffyd ab Llewelyn ab Seisyllt, who was defeated and slain in Harold's campaign, was a half brother of BLEDYN and RHIWALLON, who succeeded to his kingdom. Their mother was ANGHARAD, daughter of MAREDYD AB OWAIN, (King of Wales) who first married Llewelyn ab Seisyllt and later also married Cynfyn.

The Battle of Senlac, or Hastings, in England, on Oct. 14, 1066, was an event of far reaching and widespread importance to England, and through the great changes which were wrought in the political and military affairs of England, by this decisive victory of the Normans under William the Conqueror, over the English, its results finally had great effect on the affairs of Wales. However, the Welsh and those who trace their ancestry to Welsh families, have good reason to note with pride, that while the Normans conquered England at almost a single stroke and practically by a single battle, it took them two hundred and sixteen years to conquer Wales; and it seems very likely they would not have succeeded even at the end of that long stretch of years, covering as it did, nearly two and one-fourth centuries, had they relied solely on military operations. The process finally adopted by the Normans for the subjugation of Wales was, both military and economic. It consisted of military campaigns of conquest, the building of strong castles for the quartering of garrisons within the territory, and the permanent settlement of their people on the lands adjacent to and protected by the castles; also the inter-marriages of some of the Norman leaders, with members of the princely families of Wales, doubtless had some effect on the progress of events. There were so many castles built by the Normans and their followers that Wales finally became known as "the land of castles."

Harold, the English king who fell at the battle of Hastings, was the same Harold who had defeated Gruffyd ab Llewelyn, as we have seen, in 1063, and the Welsh were probably, in general, pleased over his fall; however, they found later that the Normans were no better friends than he.

Prior to the "Norman conquest" Wales had remained as a whole almost intact, and subject only, to the authority of the native kings and princes. It is true some fragments of Mid-Wales (Powys), had been wrested away by the English or Saxons, but in 1066 it was practically the same Wales, territorially and politically, that Roderick the Great (Rhodri Mawr) ruled over in 844. During this long interval there were several Welsh kings and princes who paid personal homage to the Saxon or English Kings and acknowledged their political superiority, for defensive purposes during the Danish incursions, and doubtless for other reasons, growing out of the wars between the rulers of England and the rulers of Wales; but at no time did these foreign kings have anything whatever to do with the government of Wales, or with its affairs as a separate and independent nation. Its independence as a nation had in no way been abridged, prior to 1066; except possibly by the victory of Harold over Gruffyd in 1063, and almost immediately after that event Harold handed the territory and government over to the native Welsh princes Bledyn and Rhiwallon ab Cynfyn, with its independence practically unimpaired. It is well to state here that perhaps, the methods the Normans were as a whole, no greater factor in the final overthrow of Welsh independence in 1282-1283, than the internal strife between the princely families of Wales and their following.

Returning to the internal affairs of Wales we find that BLEDYN and RHIWALLON, to whom Harold had delivered the possessions of Gruffyd ab Ibleddin ab Llewelyn in 1063, combined with Eadric the Wild, who possessed lands in Herefordshire and Shropshire, England, and refused to submit to the new Norman King of England, "William the Conqueror." The Welsh laid waste the English lands of Eadric in 1067, although they did not capture the town of Hereford and its fortress, which was garrisoned by Normans. Immediately following there was internal war in Wales. Maredudd and Idwal (or Ithel), sons of Gruffyd ab Ibleddin ab Llewelyn, assailed BLEDYN and RHIWALLON. They met at Mechain and Idwal and RHIWALLON fell in the battle and Maredudd fled and died of cold. BLEDYN survived and reigned over Powys and probably the most of Gwyned; but in some way he seems to have lost Deheubarth, as Maredudd ab Ibleddin ab Edwin was the ruler there at this time. This Maredudd was attacked in 1070 by Caradog ab Gruffyd ab Rhyderch, who was aided by the Normans, and was defeated and slain on the banks of the Rymney.

In 1071 and 1072 the Normans raided Dyfed and Keredigion; probably in conjunction with Caradog ab Owain, who also fought a battle with Rhys ab Owain, who was likely his brother, in 1073; and this Rhys ab Owain and Rhyderch ab Caradog maintained themselves in Deheubarth.

In the meantime BLEDYN AB CYNFYN had remained in possession of Powys, and probably of a considerable part of Gwyned, and he is regarded by the chronicler as the man who, after Gruffyd his half brother, nobly supported the whole kingdom of the Britons; "the gentlest and most merciful of kings," "a defense to every one." His reign was terminated in 1073, as he was killed in that year by Rhys ab Owain, "through the deceit of evil minded chieftains and the noblemen of Ystrad Tywi." He was succeeded in Gwyned by a cousin, Trahaiarn ab Caradog and Powys evidently fell to his sons.

Rhys ab Owain and Rhyderch ab Caradog, of Deheubarth, put down a rising under Goronwy and Llewelyn ab Cadwgn, in a battle at Llanidwr, in 1073; and Rhys, after the murder of Rhyderch in 1074, defeated them again in 1075. But in 1076 Trahaiarn ab Caradog attacked Rhys ab Owain and decisively defeated him in the battle of Pwll Gwdyc, thus avenging the blood of BLEDYN ab CYNFYN. All of Rhy's family fell in this battle, but he escaped; however, before the end of the year he was killed by Gruffyd ab Caradog.

After the fall of Rhys ab Owain in 1076 his kinsman, (C 23) RHYS ab TEWDWR (Tudor), a lineal descendent of RHODRI MAWR, succeeded to the rule of Deheubarth, and for about fourteen years, was the leading chieftain in South Wales, and was the last one who can really be regarded as the sovereign king or prince, of the ancient kingdom of Deheubarth, (South Wales).

Returning again to Gwyned, where Trahaiarn ab Caradog was ruler for the time, we find that his authority was disputed. Many years before, (D 23) CYNAN, the son of IAGO and grandson of IDWAL, who came of the direct line of RHODRI MAWR, had taken refuge in Ireland and married RAGUELL, daughter of AULEOD, an Irish king. They had a son (A 24) GRUFFYD AB CYNAN, born about 1055. This son GRUFFYD, on the death of BLEDYN AB CYNFYN, made a descent on Mon, in 1073, and with the aid of his Irish kinsmen effected a settlement there. Later on RHYS AB TEWDWR, of Deheubarth, joined him, and with reinforcements from Ireland, they attacked Trahaiarn ab Caradog and in battle at Mynydd Carn, in 1079, Trahaiarn the King of Gwyned, was defeated and slain. Thus once more we have two princes, lineally descended from RHODRI MAWR ruling over Gwyned and Deheubarth, and the sons of BLEDYN AB CYNFYN ruled in Powys.

For a number of years following these events nothing of importance happened in Wales, William the Conqueror made an expedition into Welsh territory with an army in 1080 or 1081; and it is stated by some that he subdued the country, but as no apparent change occurred in the rule of RHYS AB TEWDWR, or of GRUFFYD AB CYNAN, the campaign certainly had no practical results; however, he and his army penetrated as far as St. Davids. William the Conqueror died in 1087 and during his reign of twenty-one years, no encroachment had been permanently made on Welsh territory, but he made some dispositions which later had much effect on Welsh affairs. He founded the palatine earldoms of Chester and Shrewsbury and made Worcester, Hereford and Gloucester, important military stations. A castle had been built at Rhuddlan by the Normans, where the Welsh had formerly had a seat of government, and also another was built at Montgomery, by (E2) ROGER DE MONTGOMERY, r whom it was named. ROGER DE MONTGOMERY also built the castle at Shrewsbury and was the first Earl of that name. The Castle at Cardiff was either completed, or in course of erection, when William died.

As will be seen by reference to current maps, the Welsh were practically hemmed in by these several Norman strongholds, just named.

William Rufus succeeded William the Conqueror on the throne of England, and in 1088 there was a rebellion among the Normans by which the Welsh rulers profited to some extent. Robert of Rhuddlan and Hugh of Chester were opposed to each other in this contest, and GRUFFYD AB IYDNER, ruler in Gwynedd seized the opportunity to invade Robert's territory. He advanced to Rhuddlan with his Irish allies, and slew many men and carried off many captives. Robert however attempted to retaliate and went to a castle at the mouth of the Conway, which had been erected by the Normans on the site of an old British stronghold, supposed to have been the seat of MAELGWN. GRUFFYD entered the Conway with three ships and raided the adjacent territory, carrying prisoners and booty to his vessels. Robert sallied forth with his men and finally attended by only one knight, rushed to the shore, where he was surrounded and shot down by arrows and darts. His head was cut off and placed on the mast of one of the ships, but GRUFFYD ordered it down and thrown into the sea, and then sailed away with his booty.

About the time the above events were taking place, three sons of BLEDYN AB CYNFYD, from Powys: Madog, Cadwgan and Rhirid, expelled RHYS AB TEWDWR from Deheubarth. Rhys escaped to Ireland, but almost immediately returned with a fleet "of the Gwydy" and gave battle to the sons of Bledyn at Lych Crei, in the same year (1088); Madog and Rhirid were killed, but Cadwgan escaped. Rhys was evidently wealthy, as the gifts to his Irish mercenaries were so large as to attract special attention. Although his defeat of the sons of Bledyn was decisive, he was soon engaged in other conflicts. It seems he attacked and defeated Llewelyn and Eineon, princes of Dyfed, at Landydoch; and then Eineon formed an alliance with Iestyn, Lord of Morgannwg and they, together with an army of Normans, whose aid they had enlisted, attacked RHYS AB TEWDWR and in a terrible battle, somewhere near the borders of Brecknockshire, in 1093, he was defeated and slain and as stated by the chronicler thus, "decaied the Kingdom of South Wales." The Brut also says, with his death the Kingdom of the Britons fell. He was certainly the last Welsh prince to rule over South Wales as a whole.

The conquest by the Normans in South Wales and also in other Welsh territory continued, Cardiff Castle was completed and served as a stronghold for them. Brecheiniog was invaded by Bernard de Neufmarch, who built a castle at Aberhondu (Brecon), in 1093. Robert Fitz-Hamon conquered Glamorgan, and a force of Normans in 1093-1094, under (E 3) ARNULF DE MONTGOMERY, son of ROGER DE MONTGOMERY, invaded Dyfed and Keredigion and built a castle at Pembroke and confided the defense of it to (3) GERALD DE WINDSOR. During these years just noted, Earl Hugh of Chester had retained the Norman hold on Rhuddlan and Deganwy, and the Earl of Shrewsbury, ROGER DE MONTGOMERY, was busily engaged in extending Norman power over Powys.

In Gwyned, GRUFFYD AB CYNAN was during these times the recognized ruler, although nothing is heard of his deeds for several years after 1088, when, as will be recalled, he slew Robert of Rhuddlan on the Conway; however he was doubtless allied with Cadwgan ab Bledyn, in the years 1094-1099, in the efforts made to throw off the Norman yoke, although he is not specifically mentioned for some time after the beginning of the campaign.

The year 1094 saw the beginning of a general uprising of the Welsh, in an attempt to push the Normans back, and Cadwgan ab Bledyn, who as will be remembered, escaped, while his brothers were defeated and killed in a battle with, RHYS AB TEWDWR in 1088, was chosen as chief leader by the elders; as he was son of BLEDDYN AB CYNFYN and nephew of Gruffyd ab Llewelyn ab Seisyllt.

The Welsh allies began the movement by an attack on the newly-made castles of the Normans in Gwyned and Mon, which resulted in their destruction or capture. The Normans made a counter expedition into Gwyned, but were defeated in the woods of Yspwys; and Cadwgan and his troops took the offensive and ravaged Chester, Shropshire and Herefordshire, burning towns, slaying many men and carrying off much booty. Having by these events freed Gwyned, the Welsh chieftains marched south into Keredigion and Dyfed. They demolished all the Norman fortresses except two. Pembroke held out under GERALD DE WINDSOR and William, son of Baldwin succeeded in retaining Rhyd y Gors.

CASTLE DINAS BRAN. (Also called Castle of Yale.)

Near Llangollen, North Wales. View taken from the western end of the ruins, looking east (1907). Dimensions of ruins about 140x300 feet. Walls 6 feet thick. Defended by a trench cut in the solid rock.

This picturesque ruin stands on a conoid hill which rises abruptly from the surrounding country, to a height of 1000 feet above the river Dee. An earlier structure on the site is said to have been destroyed by fire in the tenth century. The castle represented by the present ruins was quite likely built by Griffith ap Madoc about 1150. In any event he lived there, and so also did his son Madoc ap Griffith, the founder of Valle Crucis Abbey and his grandson Griffith ap Madoc. It was therefore the abiding place of the princes of Powys Fadog and the lords of Bromfield and Yale. In 1282 it passed into the hands of Earl Warren Mortimer, after the mysterious death of young Llewelyn ap Madoc, the rightful heir. It was in ruins as long ago as the time of Henry VIII. Some authorities state that it was built by Owain Gwyned, Prince of North Wales in 1148; but anyway he did not live there and the heritage came through another line, to the princes of Powys Fadog and their descendants, the lords of Bromfield and Yale; however one of the last Welsh lords of Bromfield and Yale, Griffith ap Madoc who died in 1270, was Owain Gwyned's grandson.

CASTLE DINAS BRAN. (Ruins of tower and south side.)

It is said that Cadwgan brought all the people and all the cattle out of Dyfed, leaving Dyfed and Keredigion a desert.

For the present the work of the Normans seemed to have been undone; they had practically been cleared out of Wales. However in 1095 the Normans of Morgannwg made a fresh advance to the West and overran Gwer, Kidweli and Ystrad Towi, and built several strong castles at Sansea, Kidweli, Longhor and Llanrhidian.

While the Normans were making the advances just named in the South, the Cymry of Powys, with probably the men of Gwyned, were fighting in the valley of the Severn, in England; where they took the important Norman castle of Tre Faldwin and killed the garrison. This latter event aroused King William Rufus, and he personally commanded an expedition into Wales, about the end of the year 1095; but the Welsh avoided a pitched battle with this large force and the Normans returned to England without having accomplished anything.

The Cymry were encouraged by the failure of the Norman King and in 1096 "threw off the Norman yoke" in Brecheiniog, Gwent, and Gwentllwg. They also took possession of the castle of Rhyd y Gors, which the garrison had deserted and which formerly had successfully resisted their efforts, and following this success, Uchtrud ab Edwin and Howel ab Gronwy, with many chieftains of the cenedl of Cadwgan, marched against Pembroke, the only great castle in the south which had withstood their previous attacks, and which as before, was in command of GALDDE WINDSOR. They failed again to take this castle, but despoiled and ravaged the territory, taking away its cattle and immense booty.

While these events were taking place in the South there was also fighting in the North, and in the meantime the Normans sent an army into Gwent; but like the forces of William Rufus, it returned empty-handed, and was also cut off and defeated at Kelli Carnant. Soon afterwards a larger force was raised by the Normans, with the view of crushing the whole of the Welsh territory; but it met defeat also at Arllech, by the sons of Idnerth ab Cadwgan.

So far the success of the Cymry, in pushing the Normans back and regaining their territory, had been singularly great; they had almost entirely retrieved and annulled the Norman conquests begun by William the Conqueror, and had assumed control of about all the land which had been theirs before the Norman invasion. However, great reverses were soon to come, and the first Norman blow given to the new Cymric power which had been raised over Wales under the leadership of Cadwgan ab Bledyn, was by GERALD DE WINDSOR, who took the offensive early in 1097 and ravaged the land of Dyfed, up to the boundaries of the church of St David.

Following this event, King William Rufus determined to go to the aid of his lords in the west, and gathering an army soon after Easter, 1097, he entered Wales. Led by native guides, he penetrated far into the country, but with no practical results. He returned to England; but before mid-summer of the same year he again set forth with an army of cavalry and foot soldiers and for the third time, proceeded far into Wales, where he remained for some weeks, returning, however, to England some time in August without accomplishing anything; losing, nevertheless, in the meantime many men and horses, also equipment. His three campaigns into Wales had been failures; he had not yet learned what experience had taught Harold in 1063: that cavalry, especially knights in armour, could do nothing against an enemy, lightly armed and on foot and who knew every inch of the country. The Normans, however, learned by these events, the lesson, which more than all others, had definite results in the final undoing of Welsh independence; and this was that castle-building could subdue territory, which to their armies had seemed impregnable.

Returning to the immediate events of the times, it seems that while King William Rufus himself had been unsuccessful with his armies, some of his earls and lords, following the success of GERALD DE WINDSOR, in the early part of 1097, which has been noted, made campaigns into Wales, which had far reaching and definite effects; and it seems too, that in the meantime, the internal strife and jealousies between the princely families, which had so many times before worked havoc with Welsh affairs, had been revived, and this combination brought a quick downfall of the results attained by the recent Welsh achievements.

The great border earls, Hugh the Fat, of Chester, and Hugh the Proud of Shrewsbury, (the eldest son and successor of ROGER DE MONTGOMERY), in 1098, made an expedition into Mon; Cadwgan ab Bledyn and GRUFFYD AB CYNAN, retreated into the strongest places and enlisted a fleet of Vikings in their service; but their defense was of no avail, and finally, for fear of their own men, they fled to Ireland. The erls and their followers treated the inhabitants of Mon with extreme cruelty; but Hugh the Proud was killed during this conquest by Magnus, a Prince or King of Norway.

In South Wales the Normans were equally successful, and with the slaying of Llewelyn, one of the sons of Cadwgan, in 1099, they achieved complete victory.

In 1099 Cadwgan and GRUFFYD returned from Ireland. The former made peace with the Normans and received Keredigion and part of Pwys. Gruffyd obtained possession of Mon, but whether by force or not is uncertain; at any rate he did not receive it by grant from the Norman King. Affairs remained in this position through the year 1100, during which time William Rufus was killed and Henry I. became King of England.

In 1101 the revolt of Robert de Belleme and his brother ARNULF DE MONTGOMERY (sons of ROGER DE MONTGOMERY) against King Henry I. of England, had an important effect on the affairs of Wales. Robert de Belleme had become Earl of Shrewsbury, after his brother Hugh was killed by Magnus and he and Arnulf, espoused the cause of Robert, Duke of Normandy, who sought to oust Henry I. from the English throne.

Robert and ARNULF asked for the assistance of Cadwgan ab Bledyn and his brothers Iorwerth and (A 24) MAREDYD, whom they regarded as their vassals; and it seems in fact they then were, as Cadwgan was at this time, and since his return from Ireland, a feudal tenant of the Earl of Shrewsbury.

The Welsh princes repaired to Shrewsbury, where they were received "magnificently and honorably," and the earls made great promises of Welsh liberty. Cadwgan then called together, the host of the territories of the house of Bledyn, and together with the earls, achieved temporary successes. Henry I. however speedily laid siege to Bridgenorth, the principal castle of Robert, and at the same time, opened negotiations with Iorwerth, with the view of detaching the Welsh allies from the Norman Earls. He promised Iorwerth, during his own life (Henry's) Pwys, Ceredigion, half of Dyfed, Ystrad Towy, Cidweli and Gower; if he would turn the Welsh against the earls. Iorwerth consented, without the knowledge of his brothers, and sent orders to the Welsh forces to turn against Robert, which they did, and thoroughly despoiled the territory of the earls, collecting immense booty. It seems that in the meantime ARNULF had gone to Ireland for aid; but before the end of the year, Robert was forced to submit, and he was allowed to cross over to Normandy. ARNULF remained in Ireland, where he had been negotiating with King Muircertach for reinforcements.

The Welsh princes quarreled after these events and Iorwerth seized and imprisoned MAREDYD, but agreed to give Cadwgan part of the lands promised to him by Henry I. The latter, however, refused to keep his bargain and imprisoned Iorwerth on a charge of treason, where he remained until 1109. Pembroke was given to one Saer, from whom it passed in 1104, to GERALD DE WINDSOR, who had held it for some years before for the king.

The Norman lords, in fact, retook or retained the fortresses which they had built, and Deheubarth and Powys not actually in Norman hands, was divided by Henry, between Howel ab Goronwy, (a grandson of RHYS AB TEWDWR), and the descendents of Bledyn. The former received Ystrad Towy, Cidweli and Gower, as fiefs from the king, and Cadwgan and other members of the cenedl of Bledyn, were confirmed in the possession of Ceredigion and parts of Powys, on terms of vassalage. In the North, GRUFFYD AB CYNAN still held Mon and parts of Gwyned on the mainland, independently of Henry.

As will be noted the Welsh princely families were at this time, with the exception of GRUFFYD AB CYNAN, in the position of tenants (in capiti) of Henry I.

Howel ab Goronwy did not long enjoy his possessions; he was at feud with the house of Bledyn, and was soon in trouble with Richard son of Baldwin, over Rhyd y Gors castle, which Howel claimed. He was expelled from his lands, but soon returned and slew many of the Normans; however through conspiracy in 1105, he was surrounded while asleep in the house of a supposed friend; his sword and spear were taken away before he awoke and his men at arms deserted. He was captured and beheaded and his possessions were divided among several Normans and Welshmen.

Cadwgan in 1108 was still in undisturbed possession of Ceredigion and parts of Powys, which he had received from Henry I., but his declining years were clouded in misfortune by the lawless acts of his son, Owain ab Cadwgan; whose first recorded feat was the slaying of the sons of Trahaiarn ab Caradog. His next adventure was an attack on

VALLE CRUCIS ABBEY.

Near Llangollen, North Wales.

Founded in the year 1200 by Madoc ap Griffith, Prince of Powys Fadog and Lord of Castle Dinas Bran, the ruins of which stand on a frowning hill in the neighborhood. The Abbey was Cistercian, and it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. These ruins are considered as among the most beautiful and picturesque of the kind in Great Britain. Beneath its grass grown aisles lies the dust of its founder and of his son Griffith.

Pembroke castle and the abduction of NEST (or Nesta) the wife of GERALD DE WINDSOR. NEST was daughter of RHYS AB TEWDWR, Prince of South Wales, and before her marriage to GERALD, had been mistress of Henry I., King of England. She was said to be the most beautiful woman of her time, and was called the, "Helen of Wales." The narrative of the event states that GERALD DE WINDSOR was still holding Pembroke in 1107, and he had deposited there, "all his riches, with his wife and heirs and all dear to him, and he fortified it with a ditch and a wall and a gateway with a lock to it." The next Christmas time Cadwgan made a feast in honor of God, at which Owain was present. The conversation turned upon the charms of NEST, and Owain, fired by the accounts of her beauty, paid a visit to Pembroke, and being received as his kinsman—as in fact he was—made the acquaintance of the lady. Soon afterwards, with a small band, he made a raid on the castle, set fire to the houses near it and forced an entrance. GERALD escaped, through the connivance of his wife, but Owain carried away NEST, as well as the children, and returned with them to his own land, taking also booty of the more usual kind.

Cadwgan, Owain's father, was greatly disturbed at such an outrage, against a man so high in the king's favor, and tried to induce his son to return to the great steward, his wife and the spoils, but in vain. The children were however sent back, but NEST herself was for the time detained.

GERALD DE WINDSOR had his revenge sometime later; however in the meantime, Richard, the King's steward at Shrewsbury, persuaded Ithel and Madog, sons of Rhirid ab Bledyn, to capture Owain, or expel him and Cadwgan. Owain fled to Ireland, and Cadwgan secretly went to a retreat in Powys, owned by his wife; while Ithel and Madog seized that part of Powys which Cadwgan had received from the king. Cadwgan soon made peace with the king and was allowed to return to Credigion, by promising to have nothing to do with Owain.

Owain returned to Powys and was joined by Madog ab Rhirid, who had quarreled with the Normans and together, with armed forces, they ransomed the country, burning and robbing wherever they could.

Iorwerth ab Bledyn who had been imprisoned by the king in 1102, was now (1109) released, and he returned to his lands in Powys, where in the meantime Owain and Madog had made their headquarters.

Iorwerth tried to have them desist from their lawless course, but they scorned his request. They continued their depredations until the king took Cadwgan's lands and gave them to Gilbert, founder of the house of Clare, who built two castles in the region, and the king pensioned Cadwgan.

Owain again retreated to Ireland, where Madog already was. Madog soon returned to Wales and to Iorwerth's lands. The latter treated him with scorn and he with Llewelyn ab Trahaiarn plotted to kill Iorwerth, which they did in 1110, with the aid of Llewelyn's men, slaying him with their spears after a brave defense.

After Iorwerth's death the king gave Powys to Cadwgan; but he was also killed by Madog and his men.

MAREDYD AB BLEDYN, Cadwgan's brother, held his land until Owain, Cadwgan's son, should return from Ireland.

Owain returned in 1110, and both he and Madog interviewed Henry, the King, and received grants of land, on giving pledges and promising "much money"; but the friendship between these princes had ceased, owing to the murder of Cadwgan by Madog. In 1112 Madog was taken prisoner by MAREDYD AB BLEDYN, who turned him over to Owain and he put out his eyes, but spared his life, and MAREDYD and Owain divided his lands between themselves.

GRUFFYD AB CYNAN was, during these events ruling in Gwyned and in 1114, he was accused by the Normans of various misdeeds, and about the same time Owain ab Cadwgan, was also accused of robberies. The King of England made an expedition into Wales. MAREDYD AB BLEDYN submitted at once, and GRUFFYD AB CYNAN made peace by paying a large tribute; Owain ab Cadwgan also made terms with the king, and accompanied him in an honorable capacity on an expedition into Normandy.

The principality of Powys was now practically at an end, and about all of Cymru, except Gwyned, was divided between the Norman and Welsh lords, who came to be called "Lords-Marchers."

And now comes the end of Owain ab Cadwgan's stormy career. It seems that RHYS AB TEWDWR, the last great Prince of South Wales, who fell in 1093, had left a young son, (C 24) GRUFFYD AB RHYS, who had been taken for safety to Ireland. He returned to Wales in 1112. He remained quiet until 1114, when, having learned that the English King Henry had designs on his life, he took refuge with GRUFFYD AB CYNAN in Gwyned. It is evident that the latent hopes of the Welsh people were now centered in this young prince, and for this reason, Henry desired to capture him. He is described in the "Brut" as "the light and strength and gentleness of the men of South Wales." GRUFFYD AB CYNAN promised, on the king's demand, to deliver him up; but GRUFFYD AB RHYS, hearing of this, fled south and collected a force in Ystrad Towi, and in 1116 was raiding in various directions in South Wales.

Owain ab Cadwgan, who was with the king, was commissioned, together with Lywarch ab Trahaiarn, to capture young Gruffyd ab Rhys. They promptly collected an army and proceeded to Ystrad Towi, harrying the country; the people fleeing before them, to Carmarthen. At this time also GERALD DE WINDSOR was marching with a force of Flemings, from Rhos, in Dyfed, towards Carmarthen ostensibly, also, with the intention of putting down GRUFFYD for the king, inasmuch as he was a Norman lord in the service of the king.

The people complained to GERALD about Owain, and when the two forces met, GERALD set his Flemings upon Owain's force. Owain met the assault bravely, but fell at the first discharge of arrows and was promptly dispatched.

While GERALD and Owain were both in the service of the king, it will be recalled that Owain, years before, had abducted GERALD's wife, NEST, and perhaps this outrage was the incentive for Gerald's attack. Furthermore GRUFFYD AB RHYS, whom they were supposed to be trying to capture, was NEST's brother and GERALD's brother-in-law; so it seems to be very likely, that while not openly acting in defiance of the king's orders, GERALD was really marching to intercept Owain, in aid of GRUFFYD, and to avenge his own wrongs at the same time.

For some years longer MAREDYD AB BLEDYN and the remaining sons of Cadwgan ab Bledyn, upheld the claims of their cenedl, to the sovereignty of so much of Powys as was not in the hands of the Norman—English lords, and in 1121 they rose again against the foreigners, MAREDYD and his friends, appealed to GRUFFYD AB CYNAN, Prince of Gwyned, for help; but he prudently refused to join them against King Henry, who entered Wales with an "immense and cruel" army. There was at least one engagement, during which King Henry was struck on the breast-plate with an arrow, which glanced off and did not wound him; but he became greatly disconcerted and behaved with cowardice and entered into negotiations, which led to peace, and which, it seems, involved the submission to Henry's sovereignty, as before.

MAREDYD AB BLEDYN died in 1129 or 1130 and the "Brut" describes him as the "ornament, and safety, and defence of all Powys." The ruin of the house of BLEDYN was now complete, so far as sovereignty was concerned, and the possessions of the princely families in Powys and South Wales had dwindled to small areas. In Gwyned (North Wales) however, GRUFFYD AB CYNAN was in authority, as an independent sovereign, with the sole exception of acknowledging, personally, the superiority of the King of England; which did not carry with it any jurisdiction of the English royal court over his territory.

GRUFFYD AB CYNAN, Prince or King of North Wales died, in 1137 at the age of 82, and was interred on the South side of the altar, in Bangor Cathedral, having survived Henry I. of England by two years. GRUFFYD had assumed the monastic habit before his death. His long, prudent and wise reign, had built up the strength and importance of his kingdom during a very difficult period, and made North Wales the center of Welsh national life, and the eagerly sought refuge, of many Welshmen dispossessed elsewhere by the Normans. North Wales continued as an independent nation for 145 years after the death of GRUFFYD AB CYNAN. His ensign was, "gu, three lions, passant. in pale, arg., armed az."

GRUFFYD left several sons. His son OWAIN (usually called (D 25) OWAIN GWYNED) succeeded to the principality, and his brothers doubtless received shares under his sovereignty. OWAIN and his brother Cadwaladr, had, before their father's death, made some expeditions into the territories of the lords-marchers, and had captured and retained for a time, some of the fortresses built by the invaders; and in the year of OWAIN'S succession, they again marched to the south and destroyed several castles.

During King Stephen's reign of 17 years in England, he left Wales much to itself and OWAIN materially added to the resources of his country and re-occupied several districts, which the Welsh had lost in former years. In the meantime however, he and Cadwaladr quarrelled and the latter fled to England. Also during these years (C 25) RHYS AB GRUFFYD, a son of GRUFFYD AB RHYS, who was son of RHYS AB TEWDWR, had won several comparatively important engagements and successes in the south.

Henry II. succeeded Stephen on the English throne, and in 1157 he invaded North Wales; but was met and defeated by OWAIN. One of the king's two forces, personally commanded by the king, was defeated in the woods by OWAIN'S two sons, Davyd and Cynan, and escaped with difficulty. The king then gathered his forces together and went to Rhuddan; but was harrassed day and night by OWAIN, with the assistance of MADOG AB MAREDYD, the chief Welsh baron of Powys; their forces being encamped at Lwyn Pina.

Henry's army was supported by a fleet, which sailed along the coast and effected a landing in Mon; but after pillaging some churches, this force was defeated with heavy slaughter by the men of the island.

Henry's attempt was a failure, but nevertheless peace was made, and OWAIN restored his brother Cadwaladr to his lands and did homage to Henry.

About this time, peace was made also, between RHYS AB GRUFFYD and Henry. RHYS had been waging a sporadic warfare against the Norman lords, from the recesses of Ystrad Towy; Henry asked him to come to court. He went, and Henry made peace, by agreeing to give him Cantref Mawr and other lands adjoining.

Peace continued until in 1164, and then RHYS began to raid the lands of the Normans again, because Henry had not fully kept his promise. He dismantled and burnt the castle at Aber Rheidol and overran Keredigion a second time. Now OWAIN GWYNED joined him at the head of the other Welsh barons, and Henry II. with a large force, marched to the westry; while the Welsh hosts under OWAIN GWYNED, his brother Cadwaladr and Owain Cyfeiliog, and other lords of Powys, encamped at Corwen. The king hesitated to attack, and finally moved into the wood of Ceiriog and thence penetrated to near the Berwyn range; but his supplies failing and the weather being bad, he was compelled to retreat to Chester and abandon the expedition. He however cruelly blinded some Welsh hostages whom he held.

Later in the year Henry left England and was absent about six years, during which time there were the usual disputes and quarrels among the Welsh, but no warfare of consequence. The most serious quarrel was in 1167, between OWAIN GWYNED and RHYS AB GRUFFYD on one side and Owain Cyfeiliog on the other, in which after some fighting the latter, with Norman aid, came off the better. However during the year OWAIN and RHYS took and destroyed the castles at Rhuddlan and Prestatyn.

Nothing retarded the growing power of Gwyned, until the death of OWAIN GWYNED in 1169; after which his sons quarreled. OWAIN'S later years were clouded by religious disputes, caused partly by a disputed election to the see of Bangor, and partly by his marriage to his cousin Crisiant, who was his second wife. In the end he was excommunicated by Thomas a Becket, but notwithstanding this, he received the last sacrament and a Christian burial at Bangor. The Welsh chronicler praises him as a man of "the most extraordinary sagacity, nobleness, fortitude, and bravery."

On OWAIN'S death his succession was disputed among the sons. His brother Cadwaladr advanced no claims, although he survived OWAIN several years, dying in 1172. Howel ab Owain, the late prince's eldest son, and Davyd, one of his sons by Crisiant, were both declared illegitimate by the clergy; while (D 26) IORWERTH, the eldest legitimate son of Owain, by Gladys, daughter of the Lord of Pembroke, was for some reason passed over altogether; although his son (D 27) LLEWELYN AB IORWERTH (Llewelyn the Great), later on obtained Gwyned, and raised the principality to its highest point of power and renown. His mother was the Princess Margaret, daughter of Madoc, Prince of Powys. Anyway, Howel gained the throne in some way, directly after his father's death, but did not hold it long. Davyd attacked and slew him in 1170; but his brother Maelgwn seized Mon, while other members of the family refused to submit; however he succeeded in driving Maelgwn from Mon in 1173, and by 1174, had driven all his brothers or near relatives, who refused to recognize him as ruler, into exile.

When the barons revolted against Henry II. Davyd sided with the king, and in 1175 married Henry's bastard sister Emma, the daughter of Geoffrey Plantagenet by a lady of Maine. This did not please his Welsh subjects, and before the end of 1175, his brother Rhodri seized Mon and part of the mainland, while his nephews, the sons of Cynan ab Owain, seized Meirionydd. Davyd was driven over the Conway. He was now granted Ellesmere, but his power over Gwyned had about lapsed, and his real sway was limited to Rhuddlan and the Vale of Clwyd, with his newly acquired estate. He died unnoticed in 1203.

During the years when Davyd was trying to secure his sway over wyned, RHYS AB GRUFFYD, the grandson of RHYS AB TEWDWR, the last actual Prince of South Wales, lived at Cantref Mawr and was engaged in almost continual warfare with the lords-marchers within his reach, and sometimes with his Welsh neighbors. However after defeating Owain Cyfeiliog, in a campaign in 1171, he became reconciled to King Henry II. England and joined him in an expedition to Ireland. The king granted him Keredigion and other lands, and returned his son Howel, who had been held as a hostage. Henry also made him Justiciar of South Wales. He rebuilt the castle of Aberteifi (Cardigan), whence for many years, he ruled over a large part of South Wales in comparative peace and was greatly revered by the Welsh, and in his later years was called "the lord Rhys," and he was emphatically "the lord" in his domain. He died at an advanced age in 1197.

Returning to the affairs of Gwyned, we find that LLEWELYN AB IORWERTH, grandson of OWAIN GWYNED, who was born about 1176, had obtained possession of the greater part of Gwyned before his uncle Davyd died. He made peace with King John of England, on terms which gave him good title to the principality of North Wales, and in 1206 he married Joan, the daughter of King John. In 1207 John and LLEWELYN fought Gwenwynwyn, (son of Owain Cyfeiliog) a lord in Powys, and Llewelyn seized his lands. In the same campaign LLEWELYN conquered all of Keredigion north of the Aeron, which Maelgwn ab Rhys then possessed. Most of the Welsh barons now acknowledged him as their superior. In 1208 there was a quarrel between John and Llewelyn. John helped Gwenwynwyn regain his lands in Powys in 1209, and LLEWELYN ravaged the land of Chester and made successful attacks on the English within his reach, in the same year.

John decided to depose LLEWELYN, and in 1210, took the field with a large army and with the aid of Welsh allies, drove LLEWELYN into the mountains. John captured Bangor and rebuilt many castles. Later LLEWELYN sued for peace, and owing to Joan's intercession, retained the most of Gwyned, but ceded Perfedwlad and made large gifts in cattle and delivered hostages.

King John was now having trouble with his English barons, and LLEWELYN took the field against him, and with the help of Gwenwynwyn and Maelgwn and others, took in 1211, all the castles which John had built in Gwyned, and achieved some successes in Powys. He continued the hostilities into 1212, and John retaliated by hanging 28 of the Welsh hostages at Nottingham and made hasty preparations for another expedition into Wales; but troubles in England compelled him to abandon his designs and LLEWELYN soon regained Perfedwlad.

John asked LLEWELYN'S aid against his English barons, but the latter refused and acted with the barons instead, and succeeded in having clauses inserted in the great charter, ("Magna Charta") which the barons compelled John to sign, intended to remedy the grievances of the Welsh. John died in October, 1216.

The Welsh lords of the South had revolted. LLEWELYN came to their aid, and in 1215 took Carmarthen, demolished the castle of Llanstephan and many others, marched through Keredigion and captured the castles of Aberystwyth and Cilgerran. He was equally successful the next two years and as a result became the feudal chief of all Wales, not in the actual possession of the lord-marchers.

King John was succeeded on the English throne by his infant son Henry III., and William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke, was made "governor of King and Kingdom." LLEWELYN pursuing his usual policy, did homage to the boy-king at Winchester in 1218. William Marshal died in 1219, and his son William succeeded to his great possessions and later became involved in a private war with LLEWELYN of six years duration. In 1221 Henry III. entered Wales with an army in the earl's interest, with, however, little result; but the earl about this time defeated the Welsh in a battle, with great slaughter.

The Archbishop of Canterbury now excommunicated LLEWELYN, but his power remained unshaken, and again the King of England led another army into Wales, and while no decisive operations took place, peace was made; however the Earl and LLEWELYN were at feud until the king and prince LLEWELYN met at Shrewsbury in 1226, when some sort of reconcilliation was effected.

For sometime there was peace, but in 1228, Henry III. and LLEWELYN were again at war, and the king marched into Montgomery. There was at least one battle, and while no important results were achieved by the king, peace was made and LLEWELYN agreed to pay 3000 marks, as compensation. About this time however, LLEWELYN captured William de Braose, the heir to the powerful marcher house of de Braose, and he was compelled to purchase his release in 1229, by paying 3000 marks and by

PEMBROKE CASTLE. (In Pembrokeshire, South Wales.)

The first castle was built on this site by Arnulf de Montgomery and Gerald de Windsor, about 1093-1094, and Gerald was the lord here for many years. He successfully resisted the attacks of the Welsh and it was, during one period, while he was in command there, the only Norman Castle in Wales which the Welsh could not take. In fact they never did capture it. It was from here that Gerald's wife Nest was abducted by Owain ab Cadwgan. Later on the castle was enlarged by Earl Gilbert Strongbow, and Henry VII., the first Tudor King, was born here in 1456. It has withstood many sieges and attacks during the several centuries of its existence, the most notable being the siege by Oliver Cromwell in 1648, who finally succeeded in capturing it.

consenting to the marriage of his daughter Isabella to Davyd, LLEWELYN's son by Joan; and further by agreeing to not take up arms against the prince again. It so happened, however, that William had an intrigue with Joan during his captivity and afterwards, which LLEWELYN discovered, and publicly hanged him in the year 1230; but Davyd married Isabella nevertheless.

In 1231 LLEWELYN invaded the marches, burnt Montgomery castle, marched to Brecon and Gwent, destroying castles and cruelly devastating the districts. He advanced to Neath and Kidweli and then with the help of some South Welsh lords, took Cardigan. This brilliant campaign alarmed the English government; the spiritual weapons of excommunication and interdict, were again employed against the prince, and once more Henry III. marched into Wales; but effected nothing decisive. A truce for three years however was soon arranged, on the terms of the suspension of the excommunication and interdict; but before the truce expired, he joined the earl of Pembroke against the king and raided Gwent and Morgannwg and besieged Carmarthen, yet even after a prolonged attempt, they failed to take the castle, and peace was renewed the next year, on terms favorable to the Welsh.

In 1238, he convened his Welsh vassal lords at Strata Florida, where they swore fealty to his son Davyd, who was to be his successor.

He had in the meantime released his son (D 28) GRUFFYD, whom he had imprisoned in 1228, for insubordination, and had given him lands in Llyn. Now having arranged his succession and his other affairs, he retired from the world and assumed the monastic habit. He died April 11, 1240, in the Cistercian monastery at Aberconway.

The Welsh accorded to LLEWELYN, and with justice, the title of Mawr (the Great) and he is known as "LLEWELYN the Great." His full name, as we have noted, was LLEWELYN AB IORWERTH, and he was no doubt the most capable ruler the Cymry produced, after HOWEL DA, or Guffyd ab Llewelyn.

LLEWELYN's son Davyd II. succeeded to the principality and in 1240, seized and imprisoned his half-brother, GRUFFYD, with whom he had long been at feud. Senena, the wife of GRUFFYD, interceded with King Henry at Shrewsbury, in her husband's behalf, and Henry made an expedition into Wales and Davyd submitted; but by the agreement of peace GRUFFYD was transferred to the king, who exacted from him a relinquishment of much of his lands, and kept him imprisoned in the Tower of London. GRUFFYD, despairing of release, attempted to escape in 1244, by means of a rope, but fell in the attempt and his neck was broken.

Davyd II. again engaged in war with the English, with varying success and finally his career was cut short, by his death in 1246. He left no issue, but GRUFFYD had left three sons, namely: Owain Goch, (D 29) LLEWELYN and Davyd.

Owain and LLEWELYN assumed the sovereignty of Wales and divided the possessions of their house, making provision also for their younger brother Davyd; but the King of England at once regarded them as rebels, for it seems the king had in earlier years forced agreements, whereby the principality was to pass to the English crown, in case Davyd II. died without issue. A treaty was made however, in 1247, by which Henry pardoned the rebellion, retained all Welsh lands east of the Conway and a part of the southern districts, but conferred upon Owain and LLEWELYN the residue of the principality.

Peace was maintained until 1254, when Owain and Davyd took up arms against LLEWELYN, who had been strengthening his power and popularity among the Welsh.

LLEWELYN defeated his brothers at Bryn Derwin; Owain was captured and imprisoned, while Davyd escaped to England and LLEWELYN seized their lands, and on the death of Maredyd ab Llewelyn, one of his vassal barons, seized Meirionydd (Merioneth).

About this time, Edward, the eldest son of Henry III. and heir to the English throne, was married, and the king conferred on him the Earldom of Chester and all his lands in Wales. The king's lands in Wales consisted principally, of Perfedwlad and three lordships in the south. Edward at this time was only sixteen years of age, and his ministers, possibly under the direction of the king, attempted to bring the Welsh lands named under English laws and regulations. The Welsh laws, established several centuries before by the great Welsh King, HOWEL DA, had been up to this time in vogue in these portions, as well as the other sections of Wales, and the people were bitterly opposed to giving them up; furthermore, Edward's ministers were cruel and oppressive in their management of affairs. In their distress they appealed to LLEWELYN. He took the field in 1256, with the determination to regain the territory which he had lost by the settlement of 1247, and to relieve the distress of his countrymen. For eleven years there was almost continual warfare, which was finally ended however by the peace of 1267.

Once determined on war, LLEWELYN acted with vigor and promptitude. In the autumn of 1256 he invaded Perfeddwlad. His forces were hailed with delight by the inhabitants and he subdued it within a week, except the castles of Diserth and Deganwy. He then marched south, overran parts of Keredigion and took the cantref of Buallt in Powys, which belonged to the Mortimers. He did not retain these southern conquests in his own possession, but granted them to Maredyd ab Owain, who was a descendent of Rhys ab Tewdwr, and who therefore represented the ancient princely line of South Wales. He also restored to Maredyd ab Rhys Gryg, lands which had been taken from him.

In his next campaign, (1257) LLEWELYN expelled Roger Mortimer, from the cymwd of Gwrthryn, in Powys, and Gruffyd ab Gwenwynwyn from Cyfeiliog; he also ravaged a large part of South Wales, taking and burning many castles that were in English hands. Henry III. in the summer of 1257, came to his son's assistance with a considerable force and reached Deganwy, but he did not cross the Conway. He soon retired without accomplishing anything.

In 1258 a truce for one year was concluded between Henry III. and LLEWELYN.

LLEWELYN'S fame was now spreading, for he was able to enter into an alliance with Scotch nobles, against the king, and to enter into friendly relations with the English barons, who were discontented with Henry's weak, yet tyrannical government. His domestic rule and military career had been so successful, that now, nearly all the Welsh lords, openly took their stand on his side, and at a formal assembly, a large number of the nobles of Wales, took oaths of fealty to him.

The year 1262 brought the opening of hostilities, after the peace of 1261. LLEWELYN began by attacking Roger Mortimer, one of the principal lord-marchers in the cantref of Maelienyd, and he also seized several castles in that region. He then compelled the submission of Brecheiniog, and returned to Gwyned. The English were alarmed and in 1263, Edward marched into Wales, but without results.

Civil war now broke out in England, between the barons headed by Simon de Montfort, and the king. LLEWELYN formed an alliance with Simon, who promised him his daughter Eleanor in marriage.

Success in battle made Simon de Montfort, finally, the real ruler of England and Edward was taken prisoner. The Parliament of 1265, assigned the earldom of Chester to Simon.

In the meantime, while giving powerful support to Simon and his party, LLEWELYN had put down all opposition to his rule in Wales and had taken the castles of Diserth and Deganwy, which had previously successfully resisted his efforts. Simon rewarded LLEWELYN for his aid, by forcing the king to grant him large additional territories, including Mauds castle, Hawarden, Ellesmere and Montgomery, and to formally acknowledge his sovereignty in the principality of Wales.

Fortune however soon deserted the great earl. On August 4th 1265, he was defeated and slain, by prince Edward, at the battle of Evesham. The loss was very great to LLEWELYN, but he continued the war, and in September 1265, made an inroad into Chester, which had been restored to Edward. The cause of the barons was however now lost, and they made peace with the king. Also peace was soon made between LLEWEYN and Edward, through the intervention of the Pope, and a treaty was signed at Montgomery by King Henry III. and Llewelyn; which was so favorable to the Welsh, as to amount to a real triumph for the Welsh nation. The king agreed that LLEWELYN and his heirs should have the principality of Wales, on the terms of doing homage, and LLEWELYN was to receive the homage of the Welsh barons, except that of Maredyd ab Rhys, the representative of the old South Wales line of princes, which the king reserved for himself. The limits of the principality were defined in a liberal manner towards LLEWELYN, and Perfedwlad was granted to him also. Davyd, LLEWELYN's brother, was restored to his private possessions, and LLEWELYN was to pay an indemnity of 24000 marks. This treaty practically left to Edward, no part of his former Welsh estates, except Carmarthen and its appurtenant lands.

It is impossible to conjecture what might have been the result, had LLEWELYN steadfastly adhered to the terms of this treaty, but it is not unreasonable to presume, in view of the uncertain and devious devolution of the English kingship, in the succeeding years, that if he and his heirs had faithfully adhered to the treaty and kept out of English civil entanglements, the "crown of Britain" might have been finally regained for some descendent of his house. Events however brought far different results.

LLEWELYN kept peace until the death of Henry III. in 1272. On

CAREW CASTLE. (From an old print.)

This princely fortress remains a grand representative of feudal times. It stands near Milford Haven, in Pembrokeshire, South Wales, and its extensive ruins aptly represent its ancient grandeur and magnificence.

It was one of the possessions of Rhys ab Tewdwr, the Prince of South Wales, and passed with others, into the hands of Gerald de Windsor, on his marriage with Nesta, the prince's daughter. Henry, Earl of Richmond (Henry VII.) was entertained here on his march to Bosworth field, where he won the English Crown. There are secret passages in the walls and it is well supplied with dungeons.

November 29th 1272, he was summoned by a commission appointed by the regents, to do homage to the new King Edward, who himself was then absent from England with the crusaders in the East. The prince took no notice of the summons, and was in the meantime, likely negotiating with the sons of Simon de Montfort. Anyway in 1273, he was betrothed to Eleanor de Montfort, in accordance with the previous promise of the late earl, and about this time, he obtained a decree from Pope Gregory X., absolving him from obedience to citations to places outside of Wales.

Furthermore, his brother Davyd and other barons, revolted about this time, and he defeated them and seized their lands; and Davyd fled to England and was well received by the king, which likely offended LLEWELYN.

Edward I. was crowned on August 18th 1274, and while Alexander III of Scotland, attended the ceremony and paid homage, LLEWELYN, was conspicuous by his absence. King Edward determined to compel him to pay homage, and went to Chester and summoned him there, but LLEWELYN refused to attend, and Edward returned to England in anger. It was about this time that Eleanor de Montfort, under the escort of her brother Amaury, sailed for Gwyned to marry LLEWELYN; but the vessels of her party were captured by Bristol sailors. Amaury was imprisoned and King Edward meanly and unchivalrously, caused Eleanor to be detained in captivity, as one of the queen's household. LLEWELYN sent many messages to the king, with the view of obtaining the release of his wife and forming a durable peace, but they were fruitless.

Border hostilities opened in 1276, and in November of that year, Edward formally declared war against LLEWELYN and invaded Wales with three armies; one of which the king personally commanded. LLEWELYN was finally surrounded in the mountains of Snowdon and compelled to submit. The Treaty of Conway was signed, which completely undid the work of 1267 and reduced LLEWELYN almost to the position of a baron. He agreed to pay 50000 marks indemnity and the larger portion of the principality passed from his sway. His brothers Davyd and Owain were granted lands by the king, in this settlement.

Later the king remitted the fine and about Christmas time 1278, the king allowed the marriage of LLEWELYN and Eleanor to take place. Eleanor died in childbirth in 1280, leaving a daughter named Gwennlian, and the loss of his wife tended to estrange LLEWELYN from the English court, while the complaints of oppression from the Welsh people also embittered him; however no formal rupture of peace occurred, until in 1282.

LLEWELYN and Davyd, his brother, had become reconciled to each other and a general uprising seems to have been agreed upon, throughout North and South Wales; mainly to contend against the substitution of Norman-English laws for the Welsh laws of HOWEL DA. The campaign was commenced by Davyd, who suddenly attacked and took Hawarden castle and captured Roger Clifford, the Justiciar. LLEWELYN at once crossed the Conway and ravaged the country up to Chester itself, and besieged Rhuddlan and Flint. Also, almost simultaneously, the chiefs among the southern barons, Gruffyd ab Maredyd and Rhys ab Maelgwn, took Aberystwyth, burned the castle and destroyed the ramparts around the town. The Archbishop of Canterbury attempted to intercede, but LLEWELYN and the king could not agree on the terms, and King Edward marched into Gwyned at the head of his army and LLEWELYN and his allies were finally defeated, and LLEWELYN was killed on December 10th 1282, near Buallt Castle, by a force commanded by Sir Edmund Mortimer. His head was sent to Edward and it was afterwards exhibited in London. He is usually regarded as the last Cymric Prince of Wales, and this view is literally true, for he was the last lineal descendant of RHODRI MAWR, who ruled over the whole, or nearly the whole of the ancient kingdom of Gwyned and Wales. However to his brother Davyd III., must be technically accorded the melancholy honor, of being the last ruling Welsh prince, if we except the temporary success of Owen Glyndwr many years later.

Davyd was in command in Snowdon, when LLEWELYN was killed, and he was at once acknowledged as their prince, by the Welsh barons. For a time he held out, but was finally betrayed into the king's hands and was imprisoned at Rhuddlan castle. The Welsh barons now surrendered and Wales was finally completely and firmly in English hands and has so remained to this day, with the exception of the several years when Owen Glyndwr was in power in the principality.

Davyd was tried as a baron of England, by a Parliament held at Shrewsbury; was convicted, and on October 3d 1283, was hanged, drawn and quartered.

Edward's brutal treatment of the remains of Llewelyn and his harsh dealing with Davyd, was long remembered by the Welsh, in hatred and abhorrence.

Thus on the death of Llewelyn III. (LLEWELYN AB GRUFFYD) and Davyd III. (Davyd ab Gruffyd), we have seen the end of Welsh independence, the final closing of the affairs of Wales as a separate nation; and more than this:—it brought to a finale, the rule of one of the very best of the reigning families of western Europe—a family that could trace its origin to the time when Britain still formed a part of the Roman Empire, and which had, with some brief intervals, ruled in Gwyned, and in other sections of Wales; also at times over the whole of it, as well as over the ancient British nation, which comprised about all of western England and Scotland and included Wales, for nearly nine hundred years. The Britons were singularly devoted and loyal to this long line of kings and princes and their memory is greatly revered and cherished to this day. During this long period these Cymric kings or princes of the line of CUNEDA, at various times, beginning with the reign of Alfred the Great in England, paid personal homage to the Saxon, Norman and English kings; but this did not involve any authority of these foreign kings in the administration of the national affairs, or laws, of the Cymric nation. It was personal only, and the custom was doubtless begun in Alfred's time, for purposes of alliance against the Danes. The formality was not always practiced however, as some of these Cymric rulers neglected to perform the honor.

There is not in all history, another such example of prolonged, persistent and tenacious resistance of a nation or people, against a vastly more numerous and powerful foe, as this desperate struggle of these Britons for nearly nine hundred years, for the maintenance of their independence, and it is interesting to surmise what might have been the reward of such a people, had they refrained from their almost continual fighting among themselves and conserved their strength for their foreign enemies.

Edward I. did not add to England the Welsh possessions which he had now gained by conquest; the principality was still maintained, but annexed to the English Crown; and in 1301 his son Edward, who was born in Wales, and who became his successor, as Edward II., was created "Prince of Wales," and it became the custom,(which has been maintained to this day), for the King of England to grant the principality to the heir to the English Crown, and therefore the Prince of Wales, is always, the heir presumptive to the Throne of England.

Edward resolved to make his hold on Wales secure and immediately built several great castles, of which Carnarvon is the best known example; and he also encouraged the settlement of English traders and artisans in the principality.

While the English authority in Wales was now supreme, they could not change the customs and language of these obstinate and persevering Britons, and even to this day, the predominant spoken language in Wales is Brythonic, (Welsh).

As we have stated, the independence of Wales ended with the successes of Edward I. and it has remained under the government of England to the present time, except for a period of about seven years in the early part of the fifteenth century, during which Owen Glyndwr (Owen Glendower) was the real ruler over the principality. There is however much satisfaction, from a Welsh view-point, in the fact, that a descendant of CUNEDA, a prince of Welsh blood, who came of the line of the South Wales princes, finally became king of England and Wales, in the person of Henry Tudor (The Earl of Richmond). who became Henry VII. and king of England, after his victory over Richard III. on Bosworth Field, August 22d, 1485. Henry was the first of the Tudor dynasty of England and was son of Edmund Tudor and grandson of Owen Tudor, a Welsh knight, who was a great-grandson of (C 32) THOMAS AP LLEWELYN AP RHYS, a decendent of the Princes of South Wales. Henry VII. was succeeded by his son Henry VIII. April 21, 1509. Then came the son of the latter, Edward VI., who was king in 1547-1553, and following him was Mary I., (Bloody Mary), who was a daughter of Henry VIII. She was queen, July 13, 1553 to 1558, and was succeeded by Elizabeth, another daughter of Henry VIII, the last and most prominent of the Tudor dynasty and one of the most illustrious and very greatest, of the rulers of Great Britain; who was queen, 1558-1603. Elizabeth was as stated, the last of the so-called Tudor dynasty; however all the long line of kings and queens of England after Elizabeth were decendents of the first Tudor king, Henry VII., and so also is the present king, Edward VII.

Returning to the narrative of historical affairs in Wales, it can

This tumulus is the site of the mansion of Glyndyfrdwy, one of the two mansions on the estates of Owen Glyndwr. It is near the railroad about five minutes to the westward of Glyndyfrdwy station in North Wales. The site of the other mansion, called Sycherth, lies in a meadow, between a wooded hill and the Cynllaeth brook, near Llansilin, and is conspicuous from the road leading up the valley to the little hamlet.

Griffith Vychan, the father of Owen Glyndwr and his brother TUDOR GLYNDWR (Tudor ap Griffith Vychan), was the lord of these estates, and on his death they passed to Owen, the eldest son. They had been in possession of the family from the time their princely ancestors were dispossessed of their sovereign authority.

properly be stated, that there is nothing more of great importance to record, in a brief history of Wales, except the stirring events of Owen Glyndwr's memorable rebellion.

OWEN GLYNDWR.

Owen Glyndwr and his brother, (A. C, D, 34) TUDOR GLYNDWR, (Tudor ap Griffith Vychan), who was associated with him in the rebellion, were direct decedents in the male line, of the celebrated BLEDYN AB CYNFYN, Prince of Powys and also for a time of Gwyned; whose career has been briefly given, in the preceding pages; and on their mother's side from Prince LEWELYN, the last British Prince of all Wales, also from, RHYS AB TEWDWR, Prince of South Wales.

BLEDYN AB CYNFYN had a son, MAREDYD AB BLEDYN, who died in 1129 or 1130, and he had a son MADOG AB MAREDYD (Madoc ap Meredith), who died in 1157, and left a son, (A 26) GRUFFYD AB MADOG (Griffith ap Madoc), who inherited Lower Powys, or Powys Fadog. This GRUFFYD AB MADOG had a son (A 27) MADOG AB GRUFFYD (Madoc ap Griffith), who in the year 1200 founded the beautiful Abbey of Valle Crucis, the ruins of which, stand in one of the loveliest nooks of the Vale of Llangollen and presents one of the most exquisite pictures of the kind in Britain. Beneath its grass grown aisles lies the dust of this chieftain of Powys.

On a conical hill rising some eight hundred feet above the ruins of the Abbey, stands the ruins of Castle Dinas Bran, the most proudly perched mediaeval fortress in Wales and perhaps in all Britain. Here in this eagles nest, swung twixt earth and heaven, lived the Princes of Powys Fadog, and Lords of Bromfield and Yale.

MADOG AB GRUFFYD, the founder of the Abbey, had a son, (A 28) GRUFFYD AB MADOG (Griffith ap Madoc), who was also grandson on the maternal side of Owain Gwyned, Prince of North Wales, and who died in 1270 and was interred in Valle Crucis Abbey. He had at times been on friendly terms with the English king, and at other times was in alliance with the Welsh. He married EMMA, daughter of James, Lord Adley, who had done great service for Henry III. against the Welsh, with a body of German cavalry. Madoc ap Griffith, one of the sons of Griffith and Emma followed, and he died leaving two young sons Llewelyn and Griffith to whom he left his inheritance, dividing it between them. The elder Llewelyn, had Dinas Bran, with the lordships of Yale and Bromfield; while Griffith had Chirk castle and the territory attached to it.

These two boys were by the law, wards of King Edward I., and he placed them in the custody of the great marcher barons, Warren Mortimer and Roger Mortimer. Warren had Llewelyn and Roger had Griffith. The two boys soon disappeared and a black tale is told of a deep pool in the Dee, beneath Holt castle, and a midnight tragedy therein enacted. At any rate, the boys were seen no more and the Earls, according to custom, succeeded to their estates. It seems, however, that the conscience of Earl Warren was stirred later on, to in some measure atone for the outrage he had perpetrated upon the family, as he petitioned the king, while at Rhuddlen in 1282, to have the manors of Glyndyfrdwy, on the Dee beyond Llangollen, and of Cynllaeth, a few miles to the south of it, restored to (A 29) GRIFFITH, an uncle of the two boys who had so mysteriously disappeared. This GRIFFITH was another son of that GRIFFITH AP MADOC who had married EMMA, the daughter of Lord Audley.

In this manner GRIFFITH succeeded to these estates, and he was known as Y. Baron Gwyn or "the White Baron," Lord of Glyndyfrdwy in Yale. He died about the year 1300. Fourth in direct descent from him, and occupying the same position. was (A 33) GRIFFITH VYCHAN, the father of Owen Glyndwr and TUDOR GLYNDWR.

Such was the parentage and ancestry of Owen and his brother TUDOR, through their father.

On their mother's side their descent was also quite as distinguished. Owen stated that their mother, ELEN, or Eleanor, was a great-granddaughter of the Princess Catherine, the daughter of the last Prince Llewelyn, who was the last British Prince of Wales, and no doubt she was, as it is unlikely that Owen could be mistaken about it, and the statement is confirmed by Burke's Peerage (Mostyn), Page 1173 (1906 Ed.) But be this as it may, she also came from other princely stock. She was a daughter of (C 32) THOMAS AP LLEWELYN AP RHYS, a descendent of the Sovereign Prince of South Wales and Lord of Iscoede Vchirwen in Cardigan and of Trefgarn in the parish of Brawdy, Pembrokeshire. ELEN'S sister, Margaret, another daughter of THOMAS AP LLEWELYN AP RHYS, was the wife of Tudor ap Gronow, of Pen-nydd, and they were the grand parents of the famous Owen Tudor from whom the Tudor Kings and Queens of England were descended. Thus it will be seen, that THOMAS AP LLEWELYN AP RHYS, was the ancestor of Owen Glyndwr and TUDOR GLYNDWR, and also of the present king of England, Edward VII.

Shakespeare in his Henry IV. depicts Owen Glyndwr as a Wild Welsh chieftain, but on the contrary he was a polished, educated gentleman of princely birth and accustomed to king's courts and military associations. He was a student at Law at the Inns of Court of London. After receiving his education he seems to have taken up the profession of arms at the English court, and later on he became, certainly, squire of the body to Henry Bolingbroke who afterwards became Henry IV; and it seems strange that men so intimately acquainted and linked together in a relationship so intimate as these two were, should later engage in such a long and bitter war, as the Welsh rebellion under Owen's leadership involved.

Some Welsh authorities state that Owen was also squire of the body, to Richard II. during the later years of his reign: and it is likely he was, after Henry was banished to France in 1398. He is said to have been present when Richard II was made a prisoner by Henry at Flint castle, and if he was, he must have viewed the proceedings with feelings of sorrow and regret, for he was at that time an intimate friend of both.

Owen, being the eldest son, born in 1359, had succeeded to the estates of Glyndyfrdwy and Cynllaeth, (or Sycherth), and through his mother he had also inherited property in Pembroke. The two former estates were close together, if they did not actually join, and there were mansions on each. Glyndyfrdwy was the most important property, but Sycherth or Sychnant was the most imposing edifice. It comprised a gate house, a strong tower and a moat. The main house contained nine halls, each with a wardrobe filled with the raiment of Owen's retainers. Near the house, on a verdant bank, was a wooden building supported on posts and roofed with tiles, containing eight apartments for the guests. There was also a church in the form of a cross, and several chapels. The mansion was surrounded with every convenience and every essential, for the maintenance of profuse hospitality: a park, warren and pigeon house, mill, orchards and vineyard; a well stocked fish pond, a heronry and plenty of game of all sorts; and it is stated that the hospitality of the establishment was so great, that the office of gate porter was a sinecure. A tumulus, called "Glyndwr's Mount" crowned by a group of fir trees, marks the location of this famous place: along the railroad about five minutes westward from Glyndyfrdwy station, where the river Dee makes a sudden bend to the north. It is perched high, and nearly overhangs the railroad.

The Commote of Glyndyfrdwy, which formed Owen's Dee property lay in the then newly formed county of Merioneth, though on the east it was wedged in by the Marcher lordships of Chirk, Bromfield and Yale; while on the north it touched the Norman lordships of Ruthin and Denbigh. His rent roll was about two hundred pounds a year, which was very large for those days, and he was probably one of the richest native Welshmen of his times, and all of the contemporary bards unite in praise of his hospitality.

A strip of land known as the Common of Croesau, lay between the Dee valley and the water shed of the Clwyd, It was claimed by Owen, and also by Reginald, Lord Grey, of Ruthin, and was the primary cause of Owen Glyndwr's rebellion. It originally belonged to Owen's estate, but was seized by Lord Grey. Owen appealed to Richard II. and the case was decided in his favor; but later when Henry IV. was king, Lord Grey again seized it, and when Owen once more took his case to the king, Henry refused to even listen to his plea, and Grey was permitted to remain in possession. But this was not the only outrage Grey perpetrated upon him. About this time the king was preparing for his expedition against the Scots, in July 1400, and among the noblemen and gentlemen summoned to his standard was, Owen Glyndwr. This summons was sent through Lord Grey, who kept Owen in ignorance of it until it was too late, to either join the kings army or send an explanation; and on this account Owen was adjudged a rebel at the English court. Owen seems to have remained quietly on his estates, however, for sometime afterwards, although a few of his Welsh contemporaries were at this time making some trouble for the Norman and English barons in their midst, and giving evidence of a general unrest and spirit of retaliation among the people, They only needed a leader to make a general uprising an actual fact, and this leader was soon to be found, in the person of Owen Glyndwr, then the leading and most influential and popular Welshman in North Wales. Lord Grey of Ruthin castle, seems to have determined to take advantage of Owen's unfavorable standing at court at this time and perhaps designed to seize his estates. At any rate he collected his forces and joined them with his brother, Earl Talbot of Chirk castle, and they suddenly attacked Owen at one of his manors, (it is uncertain whether it was at Glyndyfrdwy or Sycherth), and he only had time to escape to the neighboring woodlands before it was surrounded. Owen's two manors were about seven or eight miles apart and separated by the Berwyn mountains.

This attack was the last drop needed to fill this Welshman's cup of bitterness to the brim, and it was an evil day for Grey, as well as for his master Henry IV., when this lion was finally hunted from his lair. This gallant and experienced fighter of princely blood was just the leader the Welsh people needed at this time, to set in action their already high strung desire for war. He was a chief after their own heart, and most important of all was the fact that in his veins flowed the blood of the Princes of Powys, of South Wales and of Llewelyn the Great. He was the right man to lead them and also to stir up the enthusiasm and arouse the long crushed patriotism, of an emotional and martial race.

Owen stepped at once to the front and was hailed with acclamation, as their leader, and promptly raised his standard: the ancient Red Dragon of Wales, upon a white ground. He was at this time forty-one years of age, handsome, brave, experienced and able. The hardy mountaineers flocked to his support with their bows and spears and so also did the courageous and tough warlike sons of Wales, come from the valleys, vales and uplands, ready to contest against their country's wrongs.

Thus, in the year 1400, was begun the decade of strife which desolated Wales and embittered the life of Henry IV. of England. Nothing is known of the real cause of the personal enmity between Henry IV. and Owen, which seems to have been evidenced just previous to this time, but it must have been something radical and unforgivable, to break the long, intimate and close friendship of these two. In any event, to Lord Grey, of the great Red Castle of Ruthin, is accorded the undesirable honor, of being the immediate instigator of this devastating war.

In the van of the hosts gathering to Owen's standard, came the Welsh bands, with their harps, and carrying also the bent bow, which was symbolic of war; and to them indeed Owen owed, in great measure, the swift and universal recognition, which made him at once the man of the hour. They persuaded themselves that their deliverance from the Saxons was at hand, and saw in the valiant figure of Owen Glyndwr, the fulfilment of the ancient prophecies, that a Welsh prince should once again wear the "Crown of Britain."

Owen naturally made his first attack on his relentless enemy, Lord Grey of Ruthin. He fell on the little town and made a clean sweep of the stock and valuables; thence he passed eastward and crossed the English border, spreading panic everywhere; harrying and burning the property of the English and their sympathizers. He invaded western Shropshire, capturing castles and burning houses; in fact threatened Shrewsbury itself,

In the meantime the king who had effected nothing in the north against the Scots, learned of the warlike events in Wales and promptly turned about and hastened southward. He reached Northampton Sept. 14, 1400 and promptly summoned his sheriffs of the midland and border counties, to join him at once with their troops, to quell the insurrection in Wales. He marched at once to Shrewsbury and thence into Wales. Naturally neither Henry or his soldiers knew anything about Welsh campaigning or of Welsh tactics and they expected an easy victory. They little realized what an indomitable and wily foe they were to contend with, and in this first campaign they did not even get sight of them; however they got out of the country without feeling the pricks of their spears, which is more than can be said of later invasions. The only success attained in this first campaign was the plundering of the Abbey of Llanfaes, and the invasion is designated by authorities as a "promenade." Henry however on his return to England declared Owen's estates confiscated and bestowed them on his own half-brother, the Earl of Somerset; but many years were to elapse before any English nobleman dared take possession of them. On November 20th a general pardon was offered to all except Owen; but only a very few took any notice of it. It is due King Henry however to state, that he was inclined to greater clemency at this time, than the Parliament.

During the succeeding winter Owen was carefully and wisely making his plans, and the enthusiasm of the day was spreading throughout the land and reached even to the colleges of England, where there were many Welsh students. At Oxford many Welshmen put aside their books and stole home to join Owen's standard, filled with the glow of rekindled patriotism.

In the early spring of 1401, William and Rhys ap Tudor, of the ever famous stock of Penmynydd, took the great castle at Conway by strategy, with forty followers. William and Rhys were among Owen Glyndwr's most trusted lieutenants; however William, who retained command in Conway, was finally starved into submission by Henry Percy (Hotspur), who was then Justice of North Wales for the king. By the terms of surrender, William ap Tudor retired from the fortress, leaving nine hostages in Henry's hands, who promptly put them to death after the usual brutal fashion of the time.

In the meantime Owen had turned his attention to the south. South Wales had hitherto not shown much desire to rise; but when the now renowned Glyndwr raised his Dragon standard on the summit of Plinlimmon, there was prompt response in men and arms. He now fell with a heavy hand on this southern country, and almost in the beginning of his campaign, fought a battle which aroused great enthusiasm and brought almost every wavering Welshman to his support. It seems he was encamped on the summit of Mynydd Hyddgant, with less than 500 men and was surrounded during the night, by 1500 Flemings. Owen promptly took the lead of his troops, and fell upon the enemy with such fury, that he and most of his men cut their way out, leaving 200 dead Flemings on the mountain side.

During this entire summer of 1401, Owen was fighting and ravaging throughout South and Mid-Wales; castles here and there were taken and New Radnor, under Sir John Grendor, was stormed and taken, and the sixty defenders were hung on the ramparts, by way of encouragement to others to yield. He also destroyed the noble abbey of Cwmhir about this time, doubtless on account of the animosity of the Church to his success, and swept on down the Severn Valley; being finally halted by the great Red Castle of Powys, from which he was repulsed, after much hard fighting and the destruction of the suburbs of the town.

In the meantime Henry Percy (Hotspur) had abandoned North Wales and, now in August 1401, throughout all of North, South and Mid-Wales, so far as the open country was concerned, the rule of Owen Glyndwr was supreme, from the English border to the sea.

The English and King Henry were panic-stricken by these events and an invasion of Wales on a large scale was planned at once. The king and Prince Henry, with a large army, entered Wales in October, but after much weary marching without being able to bring Owen to an engagement, they were compelled to retreat to Shrewsbury, where the army was disbanded before the end of the same month. They lost much of their equipment in this campaign, through the harrying of Owen's troops; and the only results attained were the destruction of the Abbey of Ystradflur, where eleven Welsh Princes, of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, were interred, the execution of an eminent Welsh gentleman and patriot, Llewelyn ab Griffith Vychan of Cayo, who had purposely misled the army, and the capture of one thousand Welsh children.

Following these events Owen moved into North Wales and early in November attacked the great English castle of Carnarvon. Its garrison had, however, been reinforced and he was repulsed with a loss of 300 men. Owen soon afterwards went into winter quarters at Glyndyfrdwy, with his captains and bards. The castle Dinas Bran, then possessed by the English Earl of Arundel, was in plain sight, and the great Chirk castle, in English hands, was less than a dozen miles away; however, the whole country, outside of the castles, was openly or secretly, in sympathy with Owen, and the movement had now become national. There was nothing to check the songs and revelry, which sounded high above the breakers of the Dee, in the long winter nights, in Owen's quarters.

During December, Owen made a dash upon Harlech castle, but it was saved to the king for the time, by reinforcements from Chester, consisting of 400 archers and 100 men-at-arms. However a more satisfactory expedition to Ruthin, in January 1402, resulted in the defeat and capture of Owen's old enemy, Lord Grey, whose force was cut to pieces by Owen's followers. Grey was confined in the castle of Dolbadarn, in the Snowdon mountains, and his ransom was set at ten thousand marks. He was held by Owen for nearly a year, when he was released on payment down of six thousand marks and the guaranty of the remaining four thousand, by placing hostages in Owen's hands, among which was his eldest son; Grey was also compelled to agree to never bear arms against Owen, during the remainder of his life. This settlement was arranged with Owen, by the king, through a commission, and it is stated it left Grey a poor man as long as he lived.

In the meantime Owen and Henry Percy (Hotspur) had met, and it seems some understanding, which had bearing on future events, was arranged. Owen also at this time was in communication with the King of Scotland and the native chieftains of Ireland, as well as the King of France; with the object of forming alliances against the English King. His messengers bearing his letters, to King Robert of Scotland and to the Irish chieftains, were however captured and beheaded. The letter to King Robert of Scotland is of much interest and it is given in full as follows:

“Most high and Mighty and redoubted Lord and Cousin, I commend me to your most High and Royal Majesty, humbly as it beseemeth me with all honour and reverence. Most redoubted Lord and Sovereign Cousin, please it you and your most high Majesty to know that Brutus, your most noble ancestor and mine, which was the first crowned King who dwelt in this realm of England, which of old times was called Great Britain. The which Brutus begat three sons; to wit, Albanact; Mocrine, and Camber, from which same Albanact you are descended in direct line. And the issue of the same Camber reigned loyally down to Cadwalladar, who was the last crowned King of the people, and from whom I, your simple Cousin am descended in direct line; and after his decease, I and my ancestors and all my said people have been and still are, under the tryanny and bondage of mine and your mortal enemies, the Saxons: whereof you most redoubted Lord and very Sovereign Cousin, have good knowledge. And from this tyranny and bondage the prophecy saith that I shall be delivered by the help and succour of your Royal Majesty. But most redoubted Lord and Sovereign Cousin, I make a greivous plaint to your Royal Majesty, and most Sovereign Cousinship, that it faileth me much in soldiers, therefore most redoubted Lord and very Sovereign Cousin, I humbly beseech you kneeling upon my knees, that it may please your Royal Majesty to send me a certain number of soldiers, who may aid me and withstand, with God’s help, mine and your enemies, having regard most redoubted Lord and very Sovereign Cousin to the chastisement of this mischief and of all the many worst mischiefs which I and my ancestors of Wales have suffered at the hands of mine and your mortal enemies. And be it understood, most redoubted Lord and very Sovereign Cousin that I shall not fail all the days of my life to be bounden to do your service and to repay you. And in that I cannot send unto you all my business in writing, I send these present bearers fully informed in all things, to whom be pleased to give faith and belief in what they shall say to you by word of mouth. From my Court, most redoubted Lord and very Sovereign Cousin, may the Almighty Lord have you in his keeping.”

Written in North Wales on the twenty-ninth day of November (1401).

Sometime in the early part of 1402, Owen moved down the Vale of Clwyd, making a final clearance of Lord Grey's property, and descending with a merciless hand upon Saint Asaph, destroying the cathedral, the bishop's palace and the canon's house. Trevor was then the bishop and he had been friendly to the English.

About this time occurred the famous personal encounter between Owen and his cousin Howel Sele the Lord of Nannau. Howel had not been friendly to Owen's cause, but the latter was induced, by the abbot of Cymmer, to visit him at Nannau, with the hope of promoting a better understanding. Owen came with only a few attendants and during the day, the two went for a stroll in the park, Howel who was a celebrated marksman with the bow, carried this weapon with him, and Owen, seeing a buck through the trees suggested that his cousin try his skill; Howel bent his bow and pretended to take aim, but suddenly swung around and discharged his arrow full at Owen's breast. He, however, had a coat of mail beneath his tunic and the shaft fell harmlessly to the ground. The fate of Howel was swift and terrible and Owen at once burned the house at Nannau to the ground. It is said, that no one but Owen and his companion, Madog, knew of the exact vengeance meted out to Howel. He never returned and his real fate was unknown to his family and followers for many years afterwards. However, one tempestuous evening in November, long years later, a lone horseman was seen urging his flagging steed up the heights of Nannau, and it proved to be Madog; who after the death of the fiery yet generous Glyndwr, was hastening to fulfill his last command and disclose the resting place of Howel's remains. He pointed out a great hollow oak tree, which had been the last resting place of the remains of the lord of Nannau. This tree was afterwards known as the "hollow oak of demons" and the "Haunted Oak". It fell on July 13, 1813 from sheer age and measured at that time twenty-seven feet and four inches in circumference. Sir Walter Scott in his "Marmion," has helped to immortalize this memorable combat between Owen and Howel.

While these events were taking place the Scots were at war with the English in the north and were confronted by Henry Percy, who was a host in himself, in the defence of the English border.

Owen was having things about his own way in Wales, and late in May 1402, with a large force, defeated and captured Edmund Mortimer, uncle and guardian of his nephew, Edmund Mortimer, (the Earl of March), who was the legal heir to the English throne. Eleven hundred English men, including great numbers of knights, were slaughtered in his battle, which occurred in a narrow valley below Pilleth Hill, near Wigton. King Henry refused to ransom Mortimer, which greatly incensed Henry Percy (Hotspur), Mortimer's brother-in-law, and the great Percy left the King's presence in anger, and as it happened never returned.

Owen followed up the great victory of Pilleth, and strong in its prestige, went burning and ravaging, fiercely through Glamorgan and all upon Cardiff, destroying the whole town except a street where stood a religious house of his friends, the Franciscans, thence he went to the north and invested the three great castles of Carnarvon, Harlech and Gwynedd. These events brought to his dragon standard, many wavering Welshmen, who hitherto had not heartily welcomed it with its accompaniment of flaming torches and pitiless spears.

King Henry was greatly aroused and disturbed by Owen's achievements; and although the Scots, with French allies, were strongly pressing his forces under Henry Percy in the north and his son Prince Thomas, viceroy in Ireland, was reduced by want of money, to sore straits, he was bent upon raising a great army to subdue Wales. He in fact assembled three great armies, which on August 27th 1402 were assembled at Chester, Shrewsbury and Hereford, under the commands of the Prince of Wales, (the King's son,) the King himself, and the Earl of Warwick, respectively. In all there were one hundred thousand men and they crossed the border into Wales the first week in September.

Henry had learned of Owen's power of "calling spirits from the vasty deep," to his aid, and in less than a week he was convinced that he was the very devil himself. No one had ever before seen such terrible weather, as now descended upon Henry's troops, and by September 22, 1402 there was not an Englishman in Wales, outside of the few castles which still remained in their hands. The vast army had been beaten and driven out of Wales, without the prick of a single Welsh spear, or the flight of a solitary arrow. Henry Percy, had in the meantime, been fighting the Scots and had defeated them in a great battle and captured eighty noblemen and knights, including the Earl Douglas himself. King Henry learned of his victory, at once upon his return in defeat from Wales, and he promptly sent congratulations to Percy, but demanded that the Scottish prisoners be delivered to him. This order enraged Hotspur and he refused to comply.

Soon after these events some sort of an alliance was formed between Owen Glyndwr, Henry Percy (Hotspur) and Edmund Mortimer—who, as will be recalled was a prisoner in Owen's hands—for attacking Henry IV. of England; and in the meantime Mortimer had married, in November 1402, Owen's fourth daughter, Jane.

Owen, in the fore part of 1403, summoned representatives from all Wales, to gather for a parliament at, Machynlleth. There were four from each "Cantref." Owen was by this assembly crowned the "Prince of Wales" and seated on the throne. The persons attending this assembly were not all friends, however, and there was at least one who went there expressly to assassinate Owen. This was Davy Gam, who at one time, had been a member of King Henry's household. His intentions were discovered and he was cast into a dungeon, where he remained many years, being nevertheless eventually freed. Owen in the meantime, however, burned and destroyed his property.

Owen Glyndwr was now in actual and complete possession of all Wales, except some few strong castles which were yet held by the English; however the garrisons of the castles had no influence outside. Owen was the real and actual ruler in Wales at this time. His troops were successfully besieging the great castles of Harlech and Carnarvon and he felt sure of their ultimate fall, and during the early summer of 1403 turned his attention to South Wales, where he was engaged against the remaining English power in that quarter, when in May 1403, Prince Henry made a raid from Shrewsbury and burned Owen's two mansions at Glyndyfrdwy and Sycherth.

Owen was also, certainly, still busily engaged in South Wales, nearly a hundred miles away from Shrewsbury, about the time of the great battle between Henry Percy and King Henry, at that place. There is no doubt that there had been an understanding, between the Percy's and Owen Glyndwr and Edmund Mortimer, to act in unison against King Henry; but Hotspur's messengers must have failed to reach Owen; as he was negotiating with Carew of Pembroke, on July 12, 1403, and for several days afterwards, was busily engaged before the castle of Dynevor. He had no thought at that time of leaving South Wales, and he certainly knew nothing of the impending battle between "Hotspur" and Henry; yet he was likely expecting messages from Hotspur, as he undoubtedly contemplated invading England in conjunction with the Percys. He is represented by some writers, as being within sight of the battle of Shrewsbury while it was going on, but he was certainly far away in South Wales at the time and in ignorance of the fact that Hotspur so sorely needed his aid. Hotspur and his ally, Earl Douglas, with an army of 15,000 men, was confronted with a force twice as large under the command of the King, and after one of the most desperate and bloody battles that ever occurred on English soil, the lion-hearted Percy was signally defeated and slain, July 21, 1403.

The loss of the battle of Shrewsbury was a great blow to Owen's cause and it is interesting to imagine, how different the subsequent history of Great Britain might have been, had Percy's messengers reached Owen, so he could have stood with him at Shrewsbury, with a thousand Welsh spears.

Anyway by the time King Henry was ready for another invasion of Wales in September, 1403, Owen was as strong as ever, and had in the meantime invaded Herefordshire England, with success. On the 15th of September, Henry invaded Wales and reached Carmarthen, but almost at once retreated and returned to Hereford and thence to London, having accomplished nothing, and Owen's troops again poured over the borders into England and ravaged Herefordshire.

The number of Owen's troops have been variously estimated. It is said however he had 30,000 archers and spearmen in Carmarthen at one time. The Welsh spears were exceptionally long and his men of Merioneth, had an especial reputation for making use of them.

About this time Owen had made some sort of an alliance with the King of France, and French troops were landing in Wales to aid him; but it was not until two years later that the greatest French effort was made in his behalf.

Early in the year 1404 Owen finally captured Harlech castle and it is supposed he moved his family there and made it his headquarters. Later on he also summoned a parliament to meet at Harlech. On July 1st, 1404, a treaty of alliance was concluded between Owen and the King of France and it was signed by their respective ambassadors on that date. At this time Owen's council house was at Dolgelly. The seal which Owen now adopted represents him, with biforked beard, seated on a throne-like chair, holding a scepter in his right hand and a globe in his left. (It has lately been adopted as the corporate arms of Machynlleth).

By the treaty made, with King Charles of France, Owen was recognized and acknowledged as the Prince of Wales, by the French King; and at the same time Henry IV. was designated: Henry of Lancaster, as Charles did not recognize him as the King of England and never had done so.

During 1404, Owen's forces continued the sieges of the castles yet in English hands and ravaged again and again the English border counties. Two fierce engagements occurred during the summer, between Owen and the Earl of Warwick, at Mynydd-cwm-du and at Craig-y-dorth. Owen was defeated in the former and he himself came near being captured; but in the latter battle he signally defeated the English and forced them back over the border.

Aberystwith castle had fallen to Owen during the year, but Harlech was the seat of his government during the winter of 1404—05. On its matchless site, some of the ancient British princes in the early centuries, had built their fortresses: from Bran the Blessed to Maelgwyn.

With Owen this winter, there were no doubt gathered in majestic Harlech, all of his family and near relatives, including his son-in-law Edmund Mortimer and his younger brother TUDOR GLYNDWR, as well as his principal captains, and the great Bishop Trevor, who had lately come over to his side. His bards, were of course, also there, to entertain the distinguished company with their patriotic songs. Owen Glyndwr was now at the high tide of his power and renown and it is well to state here, that to this day he is regarded by the majority of the Welsh people as the greatest of the Welsh Princes, from Owen Gwyned to the last Llewelyn.

The opening of the spring of 1405 was now at hand and with this season, came the first serious reverses to Owen's arms. His trusted captain, the renowned Rhys Gethin, with 8000 Welsh troops, moved in March 1405, to the English border and attacked Grosmont, where Prince Henry then was with a strong force. The prince and his followers sallied forth from the castle and attacked the Welsh and after a bloody battle completely routed them, with a loss of 800 men.

Owen, learning of this reverse pushed forward fresh forces under his brother, (ACD 34) TUDOR GLYNDWR, and in less than a week they met Prince Henry with a large force, at Mynydd-y-Pwll-Melyn, in recon, and a desperate battle, attended with great slaughter ensued, in which the Welsh commander, TUDOR GLYNDWR himself, was slain, and 1500 of his followers were either killed or taken prisoners. TUDOR was so much like his illustrious brother, in face and form, that the English at first thought the much dreaded elder Glyndwr had fallen; but the absence of a wart under the left eye, a distinguishing mark of Owen, soon disproved their premature conclusion. The slaughter in his battle, had perhaps never before been exceeded or equalled in Wales. Owens son Gryffydd was also taken prisoner at this time and was sent to London and confined in the Tower, where a year later the young King of Scotland was his companion.

These two reverses were a great blow to Owen's cause. King Henry however was kept busy in the early summer of 1405 by the Scots, and by the Earl of Northumberland, who was again in revolt, and who also, had been intriguing with Owen. Furthermore a great French expedition, consisting of 140 ships and 4000 to 5000 men, appeared in July or August of this year and landed at Milford Haven to join Owen's fortunes, and they met them at Tenby with 10000 Welshmen at his back. The French were nominally under the command of the Marshal of France, but Sire de Hugueville was the leading spirit.

These events seemingly made up for Owen's losses in the two engagements earlier in the year.

Owen and his French allies at once invaded England, retaking Camorgan which had recently receded from him, and also capturing Carmarthen on the way. The allies pushed on through Herefordshire and reached the vicinity of the town of Worcester about the middle of August, where they encamped on the summit of Woodbury hill, still known as "Owen's camp." Henry IV. with a large army met them here and took an advantageous position on the northern ridge. Each army feared to attack the other in its commanding position and here, in the heart of England, these two armies faced each other for eight days, with no results except a few skirmishes in which some 500 men fell. Henry had recourse to abundant provisions, but the Welsh and French soon ran short of supplies and were thus compelled to retreat. The English king attempted to follow them, but they promptly captured some of his supplies and he then desisted.

During the next month, about September 10, 1405, Henry again invaded Wales, but was soon driven out by Owen and his soldiers, with the aid of the elements, having accomplished practically nothing.

All except some 1700 of the French returned to their own country before Christmas, 1405, but Owen was unmolested by the English during that winter and had, as before, practically entire control of Wales. The French had counted on booty as their reward, and Owen and the Welsh were much disappointed with the results of their expedition, and also displeased with their conduct.

In the meantime, Owen had finally succeeded in subduing Western Pembroke, known as "Little England," and the earl agreed to pay him £200 for a truce to last until May 1406.

Owen now again retired to Harlech castle for the winter of 1405—1406.

The chief event of the early part of 1406, was the signing of the "Tripartite Indenture," which has been attributed by Shakespeare and others to an earlier date, before the battle of Shrewsbury.

The old Earl of Northumberland (Percy), and Bardolph of Scotland, met Owen Glyndwr and Edmund Mortimer at Aberdaron, and on the 28th of February 1406, the notable instrument was signed. By its terms they were bound into a solemn alliance and they agreed thereby, to divide the Kingdom of England and the Principality of Wales between themselves. Owen was to have Wales with considerable English territory added, and Percy and Mortimer, were to have the remainder of England.

Little came of this understanding, however, and as the year 1406 advanced Owen's influence and power seemed to decline. Glamorgan and Ystrad Towy in the south and Anglesey in the north, fell away from him, apparently through weariness of strife and lack of provisions, coupled with the offer of pardons from Henry of England. These defections were, anyway, certainly not due to pressure of English arms.

During the latter part of 1406 and part of 1407, Owen seems to have disappeared to some extent from public view; however his family and friends were yet in possession of Harlech castle and he also held

HARLECH CASTLE.
On the coast of Merioneth, North Wales.

An ancient British fortress was erected on this site by the early British Kings, but the castle represented by the present grand ruins was built by Edward I., in 1286, and was seemingly impregnable. It is of special interest in this work on account of being Owen Glyndwr's headquarters and seat of government for several years, 1404-1408, after he had captured it from the English. It is also interesting on account of the fact that a kinsman of the Yale ancestors, Davyd ap Ievan ap Einion, was in command of the force which successfully held it for the Lancastrians against assault, during the War of the Roses, for nine years, surrendering finally on honorable terms in 1468. In response to the demand of the Earl of Pembroke for its surrender, when he invested it, Davyd said: "I held a castle in France until all the old women in Wales heard of it, and now I will hold this Welsh Tower till all the old women of France hear of it." The "March of the Men of Harlech" commemorates this event.

berystwith castle, with a strong force, and sometime during 1407 he made a raid through Pembroke.

A great attempt was made by the English in the early fall of 1407 against Aberystwith castle. About all the great English leaders assembled there, including Prince Henry, the Duke of York and the Earl of Warwick; as well as many other notable commanders and thousands of knights and men at arms. They brought with them engines of war of every then known kind, including the "King's cannon" which weighed four and one-half tons. But they were powerless against the great castle and the brave Welshmen commanded by Owen's lieutenant, Rhys ap Griffith ap Llewelyn. Provisions ran low, however, and in September, a truce was agreed upon until November 1st (1407). When the Welshmen were to deliver up the castle, unless Glyndwr in the meantime should appear and relieve it. Thereupon Prince Henry and his nobles returned to England, leaving a force of 500 soldiers on guard.

During October, just at the right time, Owen appeared upon the scene and went into the castle with a fresh force, and remained in possession of the west coast and its castles during the winter of 1407-1408.

The summer of 1408 found Owen still active and formidable, but in this year Prince Henry renewed the sieges of both Aberystwith and Harlech and they both fell to the English during the winter of 1408-1409, after prolonged and desperate resistance; being in fact starved into submission.

By the fall of Harlech castle, Owen's wife and practically all of his family, with the exception of three married daughters then in England, fell into the hands of the English and were taken to London. Edmund Mortimer, his son-in-law and a member of the Royal family of England, had however died during the siege. Owen himself escaped, doubtless still hoping to retrieve his losses and rescue his family. He held for a time some castles and strongholds in the Snowdon mountains, but his sway was now practically at its end, and after some desultory skirmishes it reached a final close. Numbers of his brave commanders in English hands were executed, including Rhys and William Tudor, who were thus disposed of at Chester.

Owen Glyndwr's career having reached its melancholy finale he retired from public view. He was offered a pardon by Henry V., who had succeeded his father on the English throne, but the proud old hero seems to have refused to accept it and after living some years in seclusion, he finally died in peace in the year 1416, at the home of his daughter at Monnington in Herefordshire, England, and his body was interred at Monnington church.

Owen had accomplished much, yet in the end the reward was bitter failure for his cherished, patriotic aspirations, and a devastated and ruined country, which required many years for its up-building and recovery, from the desperate, bloody, strife, of nearly a decade. He was the absolute and almost undisputed ruler and monarch of all of Wales, except a few castles, for about seven years; and for nearly ten years he had successfully conducted a war, with a power vastly superior in resources of wealth and men, and in fact one of the very greatest powers of the world at that time, as it is now; and moreover the territory for which he was contending was contiguous to this great power and therefore within striking distance.

This was the last attempt, the last struggle, for Welsh independence. From its close, Wales has remained absolutely, if not always passively, under the government of the throne of England. Welsh pride and Welsh ideals were however in a great measure satisfied, when a King of Welsh princely blood ascended the throne of England, in the person of Henry VII., the first ruler of the Tudor dynasty, to which we have heretofore referred in the preceding pages.

In concluding this brief history of Wales it seems desirable to refer more particularly to some of the places where these Welsh Kings and Princes lived, and also where some of the principal events occurred.

Plates and special remarks are presented herein, of The Town of Llangollen, Castle Dinas Bran, Aberystwith Castle, Harlech Castle, Sycherth, Carew Castle and Pembroke Castle and of other places as well, of which no further description seems required; but there are other places of perhaps equal interest, among which are the following:

Rhuddlan Castle, North Wales, as it now stands, represents the great stronghold built by Edward I.; but an earlier stronghold was built and occupied on this site by Llewelyn ab Seisyllt, Prince of Wales, and his son. There was also an earlier Welsh castle built by former Welsh Princes, on a mount called Tuthill, a furlong south of the castle.

Mold and Caergwre (Hope) castles, and also a fortified Tower near Mold, North Wales, were frequently the scenes of British and English engagements. Mold was razed by Prince Owain Gwyned in 1144, but was rebuilt and afterwards was taken and retaken in the struggles of the Welsh and English.

Hawarden Castle, North Wales, was stormed and taken by Prince Davyd, brother of the last Prince of Wales, Llewelyn, in 1281, near the close of their final struggle with the English. Llewelyn and Simon de Montfort signed their memorable compact here.

Denbigh Castle stands on the site of an earlier Welsh castle, held by Prince Davyd, as lord of Denbigh, when his brother Llewelyn was Prince of Wales.

Dolbadarn Castle in Snowdonia, North Wales, was one of a number of fortresses built and maintained in the passes of the Snowdon mountains, by the ancient British or Welsh kings and princes, and proved for many centuries, safe retreats, when they were from time to time, driven by their enemies from the more accessible places. It is said to be one of the first of Welsh castles, and it is certainly very old; it is doubtful whether it was built before, or after Roman times in Britain.

Dynevor (Dinefwr) Castle, in Carmarthen, South Wales, stands where an earlier Welsh castle was built by Rhodri Mawr (Roderick the Great), for his son Cadell, Prince of South Wales, whose successors later on moved the seat of government to Carmarthen castle, which for many years was the headquarters of these Princes and their descendants.

Cardigan Castle, with Cardiganshire and other territories, belonged for many years to Prince Rhys, grandson of Rhys ab Tewdwr, and Prince Rhys' son Griffith.

Tenby Castle and the great walls surrounding the town, in Pembrokeshire, were built by the Flemings, under the command of Gerald the Windsor, Governor of Pembroke.

Many other places and castles, which were associated with early Welsh history, could be referred to with interest, but space which would perhaps properly be assigned to such matters, in a work of this kind, has already been much enlarged, and the author feels that he must be content with the foregoing.

GENEALOGY OF THE ANCIENT YALES.

The Direct Male Line.

DOMINUS OTHO.

He is supposed to have been a member of the family of Gherardini of Florence, Italy; and this is seemingly confirmed by the Latin form of the name, "Geraldini," assumed by the descendants; in any event he was a nobleman and came from Florence. This noble passed over into Normandy and thence into England, in 1057, where he became so great a favorite of King Edward, the Confessor, that he excited the jealousy of the Saxon thanes.

His English possessions were enormous and at his death they devolved upon his son, Walter Fitz Otho.

WALTER FITZ OTHO.

After the Conquest in 1066, he was treated by the Normans as one of their fellow-countrymen, a fact which seems somewhat remarkable, and he was mentioned in the Domesday Book as being in possession of his father's estates in 1078. He was Castellan of Windsor and Warden of the forests in county of Berks.

This fortunate heir put the cope-stone to his prosperity, by marriage with Gladys, the daughter of Rhiwallon ap Cynfyn, Prince of North Wales, by whom he was father of three sons, namely:

GERALD FITZ WALTER (Gerald de Windsor), the eldest son and successor.

Robert de Windsor, Baron of Eston.

William de Windsor, Ancestor of the Barons of Windsor and Earls of Plymouth, also of the Marquess of Lansdowne.

3.

GERALD FITZ WALTER (Gerald de Windsor).

The principal recorded events of his career are given in connection with the history of Wales in this work, as he took a prominent part in the Norman invasion of that principality. Through his wife Nesta, daughter of Rhys ap Tewdwr, Prince of South Wales, who as we have seen was dramatically abducted by Owain ab Cadwgan, he came into possession of Carew castle and other properties in South Wales. He was also for many years the Governor of Pembroke castle, Pembrokeshire, "Little England beyond Wales," where a colony of Flemings settled and under his leadership, successfully resisted the onslaughts of the Welsh. The Flemings under Gerald's direction fortified Tenby in Pembrokeshire, building walls of great strength and height around the town and also a strong and magnificent castle. Under his guidance they also fortified other towns and strongholds in that section of Wales, making Pembrokeshire, in fact, almost impregnable against the military genius of the times.

Nesta, the wife of Gerald, was even more famous than he. She was a descendant, through her father Rhys ap Tudor, (or Tewdwr) of the long line of kings and princes who had ruled over Britain and Wales for many centuries, and was said to have been the most beautiful woman of her time, being called the "Helen of Wales." She was mistress of Henry I., King of England, and her sons by him were named Fitz Henry. Henry seems to have put her aside, perhaps for political reasons, for Matilda, the daughter of Malcolm, King of Scotland; and she then married Gerald de Windsor. Anyway the settlement of affairs between herself and Henry must have been mutually agreeable, as it is well known that her husband Gerald, was a staunch friend of the English King for many years after he married Nesta.

Gerald and Nesta had three sons, namely:

MAURICE FITZ GERALD, Lord of Maynooth and heir to his father's estates. Ancestor of the Dukes of Leinster, Earls of Kildare and other noble families.

William Fitz Gerald. Ancestor of the great noble family of Carew, represented by the Barons and Knights of Carew; also of the barons of Gerard, and of the Fitz Maurice's.

David Fitz Gerald. The Bishop of St. David's, who died in 1176.

They also had a daughter,

Angharad, who married William de Barri and was the mother of Gerald de Barri (Giraldus Cambrensis), the noted British historian.

After the death of Gerald de Windsor, Nesta married Stephen the Castellan and by him was mother of Robert Fitz Stephen, who was associated with his brother, Maurice Fitz Gerald, in leading the first invasion of Ireland, in the Norman conquest, in 1169.

Nesta was certainly one of the most noted women of her time, and she was as we have stated, the maternal ancestor of a number of the greatest families of England, Ireland and Wales.

MAURICE FITZ GERALD

The name of Maurice Fitz Gerald is indelibly and prominently associated with the Norman conquest of Ireland and he was the patriarch of the Irish Geraldines and the ancestor of the Dukes of Leinster, Earls of Kildare and other noble families, representing Ireland's most prominent nobility. In 1168, Dermot MacMurrough, King of Leinster, having been driven from his territory by Roderick O'Connor, sought aid from the English, and succeeded in enlisting in his cause Richard de Clare, the second Earl of Pembroke, also called "Richard Strongbow." Dermot, having concluded his arrangements with Richard, started on his return to Ireland; it being understood that the latter was to follow as soon as he could collect his forces. Having reached St. Davids, Wales, on his return journey, Dermot was kindly received by David Fitz Gerald, the Bishop, and at the prelate's suggestion, his brother Maurice Fitz Gerald and his half brother Robert Fitz Stephen, engaged to assist the Irish King with their forces; and in May, 1169, Maurice and Robert embarked with a small body of soldiers in two ships. They first captured Wrexford, with which lordship Maurice was invested, and then they marched forward and took Dublin.

Strongbow did not land in Ireland and join Maurice and Robert until in August 1170, thus it will be noted, that to Maurice Fitz Gerald and his half brother Robert Fitz Stephen, belongs the honor of leading the first of these Norman expeditions to Ireland, more than a year in advance of Richard de Clare.

In 1171 Maurice and Strongbow, with a force of only 600 men, were beleaguered in Dublin, by 30000 Irish under Roderick the Irish King, who was also assisted by a blockading fleet of 30 Manx vessels.

In this desperate emergency, through Maurice's earnest advice and inspiring exhortations, the garrison resolved to sally forth and attack the enemy. The bold exploit was crowned with success; the Irish were completely defeated, and Roderick made his escape with difficulty.

Maurice Fitz Gerald married Alice, daughter of Arnulf de Montgomery, who was son of Roger de Montgomery, the greatest of the Norman lords and the foremost among the Norman leaders, next to William the Conqueror himself.

Maurice died in 1177 at Wrexford and was buried in the Abbey of Grey Friars, outside the walls of the town.

By his wife Alice he left five sons among whom were: William Fitz Maurice, Baron of Naas; Gerald Fitz Maurice, Baron of Offaly; THOMAS FITZ MAURICE, ancestor of the Earls of Desmond and Decies.

THOMAS FITZ MAURICE (Fitz Gerald).

He was the third son of Maurice Fitz Gerald, by his wife Alice.

Thomas Fitz Maurice left a son: JOHN FITZ THOMAS (Fitz Gerald), Lord of Decies and Desmond.

JOHN FITZ THOMAS (Fitz Gerald).

He was Lord of Decies and Desmond and a Count Palatine in the year 1259. By virtue of the latter royal position, he created three of his sons by his second wife Honora, hereditary knights; and thus originated the titles of the "White Knight," the "Knight of Glyn" and the "Knight of Kerry."

He also was father of a son by his first wife, who was called,

OSBORN FITZ GERALD. This son was also denominated by the Welsh heralds, Osborn Wyddel (Osborn, the Irishman).

7.

OSBORN FITZ GERALD (Osbwrn, or Osbern, Wyddel).

As has been stated Osborn was a son of John Fitz Thomas-Fitz Gerald. Lord of Decies and Desmond, by his first wife. He left Ireland, his native country, about the year 1260, and went to Wales, where he obtained extensive possessions, by grant or marriage, or by both, in Co. Merioneth in North Wales, including the site of the present mansion of Cors-y-Gedol.

As we have seen, Osborn's ancestors had formerly lived in Wales and were closely and highly associated with the national affairs of the principality. His great-great-great-grandmother Gladys, and his great, great-grandmother Nesta, were Welsh princesses, while his great-grandmother Alice was granddaughter of the greatest of the Norman lords.

Also, as we have seen, his great-grandfather, Maurice Fitz Gerald, was the leader of the first successful Norman invasion of Ireland.

Truly the greatness of his ancestry was all that could be desired and it is evident that he was no stranger to Wales, or to Welsh affairs, when he emigrated there from Ireland. He was the ancestor of the Yales in the direct male line and he was certainly living in Co. Merioneth in 1293, as he was assessed in that year, in the parish of Llanaber, towards the tax of a Fifteenth. He had a son; CYNRIK AP OSBORN.

CYNRIK AP OSBORN.

On the division of his father's lands, he, according to the custom of gavelkind, then prevalent in Wales, inherited Cors-y-Gedol as a portion of his share. He was father of: LLEWELYN AP CYNRIK.

9.

LLEWELYN AP CYNRIK.

He married Nest, or Nesta, daughter and coheir of Griffith ap Adda,

ABERYSTWITH CASTLE.

On the coast of Cardiganshire, Wales.

This great castle was taken and re-taken by Llewelyn ap Iorwerth, and in after years, Owen Glyndwr took it and held it for some time. It was a grand example of the great castles of the times of Dolgoch, in the parish of Towyn, and of Ynys-y-Maengwyn, Co. Merioneth, a Collector of the Fifteenth, 1294, Raglot (Governor) of the Commote of Estimaner 3 and 7 Edward III., living 17 Edward III., derived from Madoc, son of Cadivor ap Gwaethvoed, Lord of Cardigan. By this lady Llewelyn had an eldest son, Griffith ap Llewelyn.

GRIFFITH AP LLEWELYN.

He was of Cors-y-Gedol, and Farmer of the office of Sheriff of Merioneth, 46 Edward III.; Sheriff 15 Richard II.; Woodwarden of the Commote of Estimaner at some period between 7 July, 1382; and 12 Oct. 1385; died probably between 29 Sept. 20 Richard II. and same day 1 Henry IV. Griffith ap Llewelyn married Efa, daughter of Madoc ap Ellis, of Crynlarth, in that Co., sister and co-heiress of Llewelyn ap Madoc, Bishop of St. Asaph 1357-75, derived from Owain Brogyntyn, Lord of Edeirnion. By this lady he had a son and successor, Einion ap Griffith.

11.

EINION AP GRIFFITH.

He succeeded to Cors-y-Gedol and was Capt. of Forty Archers for the King, from Co. Merioneth, 10 Richard II.; living at Michaelmas, 20 Richard II. Einion married Tangwystl, daughter of Rhydderch ap Ievan Lloyd, of Gogerddan, Co. Cardigan, and had issue, three sons and two daughters, namely:

Iorwerth ap Einion of Ynys-y-Maengwyn, Co. Merioneth, also of the Ville of Towne, and lessee of the Crown dues or revenues in that district, 1415.

Ievan ap Einion, Progenitor of the Wynne's of Peniarth.

GRIFFITH AP EINION, Progenitor of the Vaughans of Cors-y-Gedol, the Yales of Plas-yn-Yale and Plas Grono, and the Rogers of Bryntangor.

Tibod, married 1st. Howel ap Ievan ap Iorwerth, of Cynllaeth; secondly, Ievan Vychan ap Ievan Gethin, of Abertannatt; and thirdly, Howel ap Tudor ap Grono.

GRIFFITH AP EINION.

At the division of his father's lands he received Cors-y-Gedol as his portion and he held the office of Woodward of the Commote of Ardydwy, Merioneth, at Michælmās, 1400, also 2 and 3 Henry V. He married Lowrie, daughter and heir of Tudor ap Griffith Vychan, Lord of Gwyddelwern, Edeirnion, and niece (and in her issue sole heir) of his brother Owan ap Griffith Vychan, Lord of Glyndyfrdwy, the memorable Owen Glyndwr, representative of the dynasties of North Wales, South Wales, and Powys. Tudor ap Griffith Vychan was upwards of 29 years old, 3 Sept. 10 Richard II., 1386, when under the designation of "Tudor de Glendore," he appeared as a witness in the celebrated Scrope and Grosvenor controversy. By this alliance Griffith ap Einion had three sons and two daughters, as follows:

Griffith Vaughan, of Cors-y-gedol, a firm adherent of the Lancastrian cause, and one of the defenders of Harlech Castle, under his valiant cousin, David ap Ievan ap Einion, 1461. Griffith was ancestor of the Vaughans, of Cors-y-gedol.

ELLIS AP GRIFFITH, of whose line we treat.

Tudor ap Griffith, whose heirs general were the Lloyds of Bodidris, Barts., represented by Edward, 2nd Lord Mostyn.

Catherine, married Howell ap Griffith, of Crogen-yn-Edeirnion.

Efa, married Madoc ap Griffith.

13.

ELLIS AP GRIFFITH.

This ELLIS AP GRIFFITH, of Cwyddelwern, and jure uxoris, of Plas-yn-Yale, Farmer (lessee) of the office of raglot of the commote of Penllyn, 12 Edward IV., 1485, married Margaret, one of the Bodidris family and daughter and heir of Jenkyn ap Ievan, of Plas-yn-Yale, aliter Bodanwydog, Byrn Eglwys, co. Denbigh, brother of Tudor ap Ievan, derived through Ievan ap Ynyr o' Yal, Lord of Gelligynan, from Sandde Hardd, Lord of Burton. By the heiress of Plas-yn-Yale, Ellis ap Grif-fith, who is stated to have died 1489, had issue, seven sons and four daughters, as follows:

DAVID LLOYD AP ELLIS, of whose line we treat.

John Wynn ap Ellis, of Bryntangor, Bryn Eglwys, ancestor of the Wynnes of Bryntangor.

Richard ap Ellis.

Jenkin ap Ellis.

14.

DAVID LLOYD AP ELLIS.

He was of Plas-yn-Yale, and married Gwenwhyfar, daughter of Richard Lloyd, of Llwynymaen, derived from Hedd Molwynog, Lord of Uwch Aled, and had issue, five sons and two daughters as follows:

JOHN YALE, also called John Wynn, or Wynn, of whom presently.

Griffith Lloyd, a doctor.

Thomas Yale, LL. D., Prebendary of St. Asaph, 7 July, 1564. Dean of the Arches, and Chancellor of Bangor. Dr. Yale, who was also Chancellor of Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, died 1577.

Hugh Yale, Alderman of Oswestry,

Roger Lloyd ap Ellis, of Brynglas Lloyd, co Denbigh, called "Mr Ellis," who was Secretary to Cardinal Wolsey, married Katherine, daughter of William ap Griffith Vychan, Lord of Kymmer-yn-Edeirnion, and a baron of Edeirnion, qui vixit June, 15 Henry VIII., 1525, and was father of John Wynne ap Roger Lloyd, of Caedwrig, ancestor of the Lloyds of Plas Einion, Bryn Eglwys. &c.

Jane, married 1st, Edward Trevor, Brynkynnalt, co. Denbigh, and 2ndly, John Hammer.

Ellen, married Robert Lloyd, of Halghton.

15.

JOHN YALE (Also called John Wyn or Wynn).

John Yale was, as has been noted, the eldest son of David Lloyd ap Ellis. He inherited Plas-yn-Yale from his father and was the ancestor of the Yale's of Plas-yn-Yale, and also of the Yale's of Plas Grono. He married first, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Mostyn, of Mostyn, co. Flint. By her he had a son and a daughter, namely: Thomas Yale, who succeeded to Plas-yn-Yale and continued that line of Yales; and Jane Yale, who married Joseph Haynes.

John Yale was also father of another son, by Agnes, daughter of John Lloyd, who was named David Lloyd, D. C. L. (Dr. David Yale), who married Frances, daughter of John Lloyd D. C. L. David Lloyd D. C. L., or Dr. David Yale, as he was called later on, was the ancestor of the Yales of Plas Grono and therefore of the Yales in America.

"Powys Fadog" (vol. five note on P. 139) is the authority for the above statements relative to the parentage of David Lloyd D. C. L. (Dr. David Yale) and of his marriage to Frances daughter of John Lloyd D. C. L.

The matter referred to in "Powys Fadog" was taken from "Cae Cyriog" Mss. and certainly such authority cannot be questioned. There is other ample and indisputable evidence in "A History of the Country Townships of the Old Parish of Wrexham, 1903" by Alfred Neobard Palmer, to prove positively that David Lloyd D. C. L., was no other than Dr. David Yale, and it is not at all strange that he was first called Lloyd, as surnames were notoriously unsettled in Wales at that time, as they had been for a long time previously and were for some years later. The preceding pedigree shows how unsettled the names were among his ancestors.

I have gone into the matter of Dr. David Yale's connections at some length, as the most of the former printed pedigrees of the Yales, do not

PLAS YN YALE (Hall in Yale).

In the Township of Bodanwyddog, Parish of Llanarmon, and in Yale, of the Lordship of Bromfield and Yale, County of Denbigh, Powys Fadog, North Wales.

The present structure, which can hardly be called ancient, stands on or near the site of an older building. It was the home of the Yales for many generations, and is now mainly a hunting lodge. The estate is now owned by Sir Wm. Corbet Yale-Jones-Parry. The nearest village is Llandegla, but the church where the family worshipped, stands in the village of Bryneglwys, also near by. The region is picturesque and wild in character, and abounds in fish and game.

explain definitely, if at all, how the Yales of Plas-yn-Yale and the Yales of Plas Grono were related.

We have now brought the Genealogy of the Yales in the male line, from Dominus Otho down to and including John Yale (also known as John Wyn or Wynn), where the family lines of the Yales of Plas-yn-Yale and the Yales of Plas Grono (and of America), divide; and we have also given, in the history of Wales, about all that is known of the principal events in the lives of the most noted ancestors on the maternal side, except the ancestors of Alice de Montgomery, who became the wife of Maurice Fitz Gerald; and before proceeding with the line of the Yales of Plas Grono and of America, which begins with Dr. David Yale, I think it well to give here a brief pedigree of the persons associated with Plas-yn-Yale, from John Yale (or Wynn) down to the present time. And as events in the lives of the illustrious de Montgomerys by all means must have a place, I will follow the notes on the Yales of Plas-yn-Yale, with a brief account of their careers.

The Pedigree in the forepart of the work will enable the reader to clearly understand the connections and descent.

The Yales of Plas-yn-Yale.

THOMAS YALE, the half brother of Dr. David Yale and son of John Yale (Wynn), by his second wife, Margaret Puleston, had three sons. He was succeeded by his eldest son:

THOMAS YALE, who married Dorothy Bostock and had four sons, the eldest and successor being named also

THOMAS YALE, who was a captain in the service of King Charles I. He married Oct. 2 1649 Dorothy Hughes and had, with other heirs, an elder son and successor:

HUMPHREY YALE, born Jan. 25, 1656. He married Susan Lloyd, and was succeeded by his eldest son:

THOMAS YALE, who died, s. p., aged fifteen years and was succeeded by his brother:

DAVID YALE, who married Margaret Maurice, and was succeeded at his death, Jan. 29, 1763, aged 81, by his son:

REV. JOHN YALE, born April 15, 1716. He married Frances Jones, and was succeeded by his son:

REV. JOHN YALE, B. D., M. A. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his sister:

SARAH YALE, who died unmarried June 13, 1821, aged 67, and by her will, dated Nov. 7, 1818, gave the estate of Plas-yn-Yale to Lieut. Colonel William Parry-Jones-Parry, her cousin, who in compliance with the terms of the will, assumed the name and arms of Yale:

WILLIAM PARRY-JONES-PARRY-YALE was succeeded by his nephew:

WILLIAM CORBET YALE, the present proprietor of Plas-yn-Yale, who in later years also inherited Madryn Castle and assumed the name of William Corbet Yale-Jones-Parry.

The House of de Montgomery.

—o—
E 2.

ROGER DE MONTGOMERY.

Earl of Shrewsbury, Chichester and Arundel.

He was son of Roger the Great, who was cousin of William the Conqueror, and an exile at Paris in 1035. (E 1) Roger the Great accordingly was of the same family as William the Conqueror, and was also cousin of Ralph de Mortimer and William Fitz Osbern.

Roger de Montgomery was lord of Montgomery in Normandy, and by his marriage to Mabel, daughter of William Talvas of Belleme, Alencon and Seez, he became the greatest of the Norman lords.

He was a supporter of William the Conqueror, his kinsman, fought with him at Domfront, Normandy in 1048, and in 1066 contributed 60 ships for the Norman invasion of England. At the great battle of Hastings (Senlac) England, Oct. 14 1066, at which William the Conqueror won the English crown, Roger commanded the Norman right and particularly distinguished himself, by his valor in killing an English giant. He is said by Freeman in his "Norman Conquest," to have been "literally foremost among the conquerors of England."

He returned to Normandy in 1067 and jointly with Matilda, the wife of William the Conqueror, was guardian of the Duchy, in William's absence.

Later he returned to England and was made Earl of Shrewsbury in 1071, and also became Earl of Chichester and Arundel. The title and rank of Earl was the highest in England from 1066 for about 300 years and during William the Conqueror's reign there were only six earls. He built a great castle at Shrewsbury, parts of which still remain. He also built other castles on the Welsh border and one in Montgomery, Wales, in 1093. Montgomeryshire in that principality was named after him.

He founded Shrewsbury Abbey of St. Peter and St. Paul, 1083-1087, and richly endowed it. It was a grand edifice of great extent.

He secretly supported Robert against King William Rufus, but later sided with the latter and fought with him at Rochester in 1088.

By his wife Mabel he was father of five sons: Robert, Hugh, Roger, Philip and Arnulf. He also had four daughters.

He died July 27, 1093, and was interred in the Abbey at Shrewsbury.

Roger de Montgomery was not only the greatest of the Norman lords in prestige and position and the foremost of the Norman leaders, next to William the Conqueror himself, but he was also great in his piety, as is evidenced by his founding and rich endowment of Shrewsbury Abbey and his liberal benefactions to the monks.

E 3.

ARNULF (Arnulph) DE MONTGOMERY.

Earl of Pembroke (Fl. 1110)

He was fifth son of Roger de Montgomery and took a prominent part in the Norman invasion of Wales, as has been noted in the history of the principality given herein. He built Pembroke Castle about 1093, and as has been set forth in the history of the Wales, he was in league with some of the Welsh princes in favor of Robert Duke of Normandy, in his attempt to remove his brother King Henry (Beauclaire) from the English throne. About this time Arnulf entered into an alliance with Muircertach, King of Munster, Ireland, who gave him his daughter in marriage and promised to make him his successor. The attempt to depose King Henry was however, unsuccessful, and Arnulf went to the court of Muircertach for assistance, which he was unable to give; and in fact he expected aid from his son-in-law against Magnus, the Danish King. Later on, in 1102, Muircertach courted the favor of King Henry and took back his daughter from Arnulf and gave her to another man, and even plotted against his life. (Britannica, Volume XIII. page 254 ninth edition).

It is also stated (Dic. Nat. Biog. XLIX. 103) that Arnulf married, after much negotiation, the daughter of Murchadh, King of Leinster, Ireland, and died next day.

His daughter, Alice de Montgomery, became, as has been stated heretofore, the wife of Maurice Fitz Gerald.

Arms and Crests.

The use of the Coat of Arms first became general in the twelfth century. The first known tomb or monument bearing escutcheons, in the period of modern history, is said to be the eleventh century tomb in the Church of St. Emmeran at Ratisbon; which bears the Arms of Varmond, a count of Vasserburg. Badges, emblems and ensigns were in use in much earlier times, among the Israelites, Greeks and Romans; but there seems to be no connecting link, between these more ancient devices and the more modern devices and the more modern use of heraldic emblems of the middle ages.

Heraldic designs were used as distinguishing emblems on the armor of knights and nobles, in the eleventh century, so that they might be known to each other in battle; but as stated, they did not come into extended use until the twelfth century; when it became the duty of the aged knights, appointed for the purpose, to pass judgment on the coats of arms displayed and the right of knighthood, at the tournaments. This practice developed the professional and official heralds.

VIEWS AT PLAS YN YALE.

A walk in the garden, and

The stable

The escutcheon, or shield, is the most important in the arms, and next in importance are the stripes on same. Each of the various devices have some sort of significance.

The Arms and Crest of Yale (Coat of Arms) are undoubtedly almost as ancient as heraldry itself, as the emblem illustrated in the colored plate, herewith, is essentially the same as the Arms and Crest of the family of John Fitz Thomas (Fitz Gerald), who was Lord of Decies and Desmond and Count Palatine in 1259. His family Arms and Crest included the Ermine shield, with the red St. Andrews cross, and the wild boar. Also the shield and the red St. Andrews cross, are incorporated in the Arms of the Dukes of Leinster and other descendants of the notable Maurice Fitz Gerald, who died in 1177. In fact the arms of practically all of the "Geraldines," (descendants of Maurice Fitz Gerald and of Gerald de Windsor), include the shield with the red St. Andrews cross, and the most of them have the ermine field.

The Yale Coat of Arms, was therefore, derived from the Fitz Gerald and handed down through the direct male line, from Osborn Fitz Gerald (Osborn Wyddel).

The Arms of Yale shown by the plate are the Arms of the Yales of Plas Grono, the ancestors of the Yales in America, and practically differ from the Arms of the Yales of Plas yn Yale only in the "fretty," or lattice work of gold, which appears on the Arms of the latter. The wild boar in a gold net on a green mount, with an acorn slip in his mouth, is represented in the crest of each; but the chapeau, a military or official cap or hat, seems to have been added at some time, by some member of the family of Yales of Plas Grono.

The Arms and Crest shown in the plate are technically described as follows:

Arms:—ERM, (ermine) A SALTIRE GU. (A red St. Andrews cross).

Crest:—A MOUNT (hillock) VERT (green), thereon a boar az. (blue), within a net or. (gold), in the mouth an acorn slipped ppr. (natural colors).

The ermine represents the fur of a small white animal, a native of Armenia, and the marks on same are supposed to represent the tails of the animals, sewed to the fur for its enrichment. Ermine is an especial mark of dignity and has long been associated with royalty and the nobility.

The St. Andrews cross is a symbol of resolution, while the red denotes military fortitude and magnanimity.

The wild boar is a fierce combatant and may be considered to represent a valiant warrior. Blue may have a religious significance and possibly originated in the Crusades. The acorn slip signifies strength and antiquity; while the golden net indicates that a great warrior finally succumbed to pacific influences.

The chapeau denotes military authority.

Crests were anciently affixed to the helmets of the commanders for their distinction in battle and were in use before the hereditary bearing of coat armour, and they were not considered in any way connected with family arms, until by enactment of Edward III., in the fourteenth century.

The use of arms by private persons was forbidden by proclamation during the reign of Henry V. All persons in the British Isles, who had not borne arms at Agincourt were prohibited from assuming them, unless by hereditary descent, or with the sanction of the authorities. Periodical circuits (visitations) were held afterwards, until the end of the seventeenth century, to determine by examination of pedigrees, etc., the right to the use of armorial bearings. Many of these records are preserved in the British museum and are still consulted, for evidence of the hereditary right to use family arms.

Ashworth P. Burke, author of "Burke's Peerage" and other works, aptly states: "A right to bear arms is the true criterion of nobility."

Doctor David Yale was son of John Yale, who was also sometimes called John Wyn and sometimes John Wynn, of Plas-yn-Ial (Plas-yn-Yale).

John Yale, or Wynn was, as heretofore stated, the father of two sons and one daughter, namely: first, Thomas Yale, who inherited Plas-yn-Yale, and continued that line of the family; and second, Jane Yale, who married Joseph Haynes, D. D. (The mother of Thomas and Jane was Elizabeth Mostyn, daughter of Thomas Mostyn.) The third was Dr. David Yale and his mother was Agnes Lloyd, daughter of John Lloyd.

It will be noted here, as well as in the preceding pedigree, that Thomas Yale, whose descendants continued the line of "Plas-yn-Yale" and Dr. David Yale, the ancestor of the Yales of Plas Grono, were half brothers; hence the relationship of the Yales of these two ancient estates will be understood.

The father of John Yale (Wynn), was David Lloyd ap Elisse (Ellis) of Plas-yn-Ial, who was descended from a long line of honorable, illustrious and noble ancestors, as set forth in the preceding pages.

Dr. David Yale was also known as David Lloyd D. C. L., but this is not at all strange, as at that time surnames in Wales were quite unsettled, and in fact were first brought into use and handed down from father to son, just about this time.

He and his half brother Thomas were the first, after their uncle Thomas Yale, Chancellor of Matthew Parker, to assume definitely and finally, the surname "Yale."

Dr. David Yale was one of the great men of his time and country. Mr. Alfred Neobard Palmer pays the following tribute to him: "a man, famous in himself, and famous in his connections and descendants, not the least of whom was Elihu Yale, the founder of Yale College in New England."

He was rector of Llandegla (1564-1573), prebendary of Y Faenol in St. Asaph Cathedral (1578-1624), prebendary of Chester (1582———), Chancellor of Chester (1587-1624), Justice of the Peace (1601-1620) "and of the Quorum" for the County of Chester (1603). He owned the estate known as Erddig House (now Erddig Hall) and also Plas Grono and other extensive tracts of land in the vicinity. In the deeds preserved at Erddig, he is generally called "doctor of laws" and sometimes "esquire and doctor of laws," and once he is described as "Chancellor of Chester." Before his acquisition of Erddig, he is generally described as "of Chester" or "of Tattenhall," Cheshire.

The wife of Dr. David Yale was Frances Lloyd, daughter of John Lloyd ap David Lloyd of Cevn Amwlch, in Lley, Carnarvonshire, who was of the family of Griffiths of Cevn Amwlch.

Dr. John Lloyd D. C. L. father of Frances Lloyd-Yale, was a very eminent man. He was for forty years an advocate in the Consistory Court of Canterbury and resided at Hartshorne, Derbyshire. His wife, the mother of Frances, was Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Pigott of "Dodder's Hall" in Co. Bucks. Dr. John Lloyd also had another daughter, Maria or Mary, who married Sir Symon Weston, Knight of Lichfield.

Dr. Lloyd died February, 20, 1607, aged 74 years and was interred in Chester Cathedral where his remains were covered by a brass, since destroyed, which bore the following inscription:

"Here lies John Lloyd a Cambririton Doctor of Laws, for forty years advocate in the Canterbury Court of Arches, London; together with Elizabeth, his most beloved wife; daughter of Thomas Piggot of Didders Hall, in the County of Bucks, An Esquire of ancient nobility and together with their niece Elizabeth, and their daughter Francisca, wife of DAVID YALE, DOCTOR of LAWS. The said wife Elizabeth died the 12th December, 1590. The niece Elizabeth died 4th October, 1591. The aforesaid John lived 74 years, devoted toward God, just toward all men. To whomsoever he could he did good. He injured no one. At length he entered upon the way of all flesh 20 February, 1607 English style."*

In the will of Dr. Thomas Yale, Chancellor of Canterbury (proved 1 April, 1578), the testator mentions his "Kinsman" "Davy Yale," and provides means for him to "re-edify the house in Yale," leaving him for that purpose "the reversion of the lease of the Vaynoll." "The Vaynoll" no doubt meant the prebend of Y Faenol in St. Asaph Cathedral, in which, as is known from other evidence, Dr. David Yale succeeded Dr. Thomas Yale. Therefore the "Davy Yale" of the will was unquestionably, Dr. David Yale. He was also co-executor of the will.

The Shield of the Arms of Yale of Plas-yn-Yale and that of the Arms of Yale of Plas Grono, differed only in the fact, that the saltire on the former was engrailed, while on the latter it was not.

Dr. David Yale was prominent in his time, as the proprietor and landlord of large estates, as well as in an official capacity. He was in possession of Old Plas Grono before the year 1590, represented in later years by "plas Grono farm," in the hamlet of Hafod-y-bwch, in the township of Esclusham below Dyke, County of Denbigh. It is not known how long he had owned this estate before the year 1590, neither is it known when New Plas Grono was built, in the same hamlet, but nearer the confluence of the two brooks, called "Afon sech" and "Afon goch." The latter was, to avoid confusion, called "Plas Newydd" (NewHall) and "Ty Cerryg" "Stone House," but finally it was known by the original name "Plas Grono," or to employ its full form, "Plas Goronwy (Grono's or Goronwy's Hall). A picture of this house is presented herein, and was, as is stated elsewhere, pulled down in 1876. It was a commodious residence, of sufficient dimensions to accommodate a family of twenty, with rooms to spare; there was an excellent walled-in fruit garden, an ample lawn, a dove cot and sufficient stabling. The tax returns for 1670, state it contained eight hearths. It passed from the Yale family, when in 1728 it was sold by the heirs of Governor Elihu Yale. On the 17th or 18th of December 1731, this house, with part of the estate belonging thereto, was resold to John Meller of Erddig and has to this day remained a part of the Erddig estate, now represented by Erddig Hall. After it became a part of Erddig it was occupied by several very distinguished families, among whom were Rev. William Powell A. M., Dean of St. Asaph, Mr. Richard Lloyd, of "The Rossett" in Gresford parish. Mr. Isaac Wilkinson, ironmaster of Bersham Iron Works. Rev. George Warrington, afterwards vicar of Hope and Mr. Thomas Apperley, father of the famous "Nimrod" (Charles James Apperley), who wrote affectionately of the old place, in part, as follows; "I have never seen such noble sycamore and horse-chestnut trees, as those which sheltered Plas Gronow from the fury of the south western blast direct from the Welsh hills; nor tasted such fine fruit as its garden produced, nor drunk such cream, nor tasted such butter." He writes also of the surroundings of this old home: of the pretty cottages covered with honeysuckles, of the lovely lanes, of the noble woods of Erddig and of the tall and beautiful tower of Wrexham Church, seen two miles away. It seems likely that "New Plas Grono," later called simply, "Plas Grono," which we have just described, was built by Dr. David Yale, for his son Thomas Yale, the father of David, Anne and Thomas, the first Yales in America.

Dr. David Yale owned "Erddig House," (now Erddig Hall) and resided there, at least a part of the time, from about the year 1600 to the year 1619. He certainly purchased some lands in Erddig as early as September, 20, 1598, as on that date he empowered "Robert Lloyd, gent., as his attorney, to take possession of lands in Erddig, purchased by him from John Erthig and William Erthig, gentlemen of Erddig," Also about the same time he was purchasing Messuages and lands, or leases of leashold property, in the adjoining townships of Esclusham and Sontley. The Erddig House estate consisted of about 254 English statute acres. about the time Dr. Yale sold it to Mr. Richard Davies, according to "Norden's Survey" of 1620. Mr. Davies purchased it from Dr. Yale in the year 1619.

Among the fields on the Erddig Hall estate in Dr. Yale's time were "Bron Erthick" (Erthig Brow) "Llwyn Erthick" (Erthig Grove) "Kae yr Castell" (Castle field) "Y dolydd Erthick" (Erthig Meadows) "Gweirglodd Erthick" (Erddig hay field) "Gwerne Erthick" (Erddig alder-marsh) and "Laund Y Glyn" (Glyn Glade).

Dr. Yale also was in possession, by lease, of Glyn Park, which was English Crown land. The park, generally speaking, took in the whole valley of the Clywedog, from a point near "Erddig Fechan" to the King's Mills on the Ellesmere Road. He purchased the lease of part of the park, from Peter Warburton Esq., in the year 1606, and also secured otherwise a lease of nearly all the remainder; for it is stated that on October, 9, 1615, he was "seized for years yet enduring of 'One Parke commonly called Glyn Parke, also Parke Coed-y-Glyn,' in the parishes of Wrexham and Marchwiell, which said park had long since been disparked and turned to arable land, meadow and pasture, and wherein were divers messuages and tenements, and two 'corn milnes.' " Park Coed-y-Glyn included part of Erddig township and adjoined the rest of it. There is a map of Glyn Park at Erddig Hall, drawn up in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, on which the estimated area is given as 697 statute acres.

On August 3, 1601, Dr. David Yale conveyed the estate of Erddig House to trustees: first, to the use of himself and of his wife, Frances, for the term of their natural lives, and after their death, to the use of THOMAS YALE, their eldest son and heirs male, or, in default, to George Yale, their second son and heirs male, or, in default, to David Yale, their third son and heirs male, or, in default, to John Yale, their fourth son and heirs male, or, in default, to Hugh Yale, their fifth son and heirs male, or, in default, to Richard Yale, their sixth son and heirs male.

On October 9, 1615 Dr. David Yale conveyed to Richard Davies,

Vinter of London, his right in a leasehold property in Sontley and September, 15 1619, he together with his wife Frances, and eldest son and heir apparent, Thomas Yale, sold for £2300 to the same Richard Davies, his Erddig estate; the same containing, four messuages, a dovehouse, 150 acres of (arable) land, eighty of meadow, hundred of pasture, twenty wood, twenty heath and bruery, and twenty of moor, "in Erthick and Esclusham."

In August, 1898, Mr. Charles Henry Townshend of New Haven, Conn., a member of the Advisory Committee and Board of Directors of The New Haven Colony Historical Society, discovered at Chester, England the will of Dr. David Yale, dated August 15, 1625, and proved in the Consistory Court of Chester, with two codicils thereto, June 16, 1626. In this will are named two younger sons, Simon Yale and Samuel Yale, evidently born after the conveyance of August 3, 1601, heretofore mentioned. Several daughters are also mentioned in this will, namely: Ellen, Katherine, Frances, Devereux and two who were married,——Elyse and——Reynolds.

Besides the other bequests in the will he gives "to DAVID YALE, THOMAS YALE and ANNE YALE, children of THOMAS YALE, my eldest sonne late deceased, twentie pounds a yeare."

Dr. David Yale was one of the first of the name and certainly he was also one of the most prominent and honored of the name.*

Thomas Yale was the eldest son of Dr. David Yale D. C. L., Chancellor of Chester, and lived at Chester, England and at Plas Grono, the family estate near Wrexham, Wales. He married about the year 1612,

*Note: Mr. Palmer indicates that he must have made an error in copying the month, either of the sale of Erddig House, or of the date of Thomas Yale's property inventory, given in his biography; as the inventory date is given by him as a month earlier than the sale of Erddig, in which Thomas participated.

Anne Lloyd, daughter of George Lloyd, Bishop of Chester, 1604-1615, by his wife Anne, daughter of John Wilkinson of Norwich. Lord Bishop George Lloyd was son of Meredith Lloyd, of Carnarvonshire, and was born in the year 1560, at Carnarvonshire, Wales. He received his early education in Wales and was a fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge. Was Rector of Heswell-in-Wirral, Cheshire, and divinity reader in Chester Cathedral. Received appointment of Bishop of Soder and Man, in the year 1600 and of Chester in 1604, retaining the latter position until his death. He also held livings, in addition to his sees. He died August 1, 1615, aged fifty-five years and was interred in Chester Cathedral.

In the church of St. Werbarges is an alabaster stone, which bore a plate that some vandal has since carried off, on which was inscribed a Latin inscription, of which the following is an English translation:

“An untimely death has shut up in this tomb the heart of George Lloyd, whose memory is recorded in Chester. Who was by race a Welshman. Educated at Cambridge, a Doctor of Theology and a leader of the Theologians. He directed and benefited the Bishopric of Soder and Man, presiding over it for a term of five years. His mother England recalled her son and deemed him worthy to possess the Bishopric of Chester, where eleven seasons have passed away—not without storms of trouble; he died lamented, and worthy to be lamented, in the fifty-fifth year of his age and on the first day of the month of August, 1615. Neither was there shame in his life nor shame in his death.”

It has been claimed that this Thomas Yale was named “David,” but the will of his father, Dr. David Yale, which is given in connection with his biography, is positive proof, that the father of David, Ann, and Thomas Yale, who were the first Yales in America, was named “Thomas.” It has also been claimed that Anne (or Ann) his wife, who afterwards became the wife of Theophilus Eaton, was daughter of Bishop Morton of Chester, but this also is an error; as Bishop Morton died unmarried; and further there is ample evidence that she was, as has been stated, daughter of Bishop Lloyd of Chester. J. P. Earwaker, in his History of East Cheshire, in a note on page thirty-three, states she was a daughter of Bishop Lloyd of Chester. Also, A. N. Palmer, author of “The Country Townships of the Old Parish of Wrexham,” is quite certain that this statement of her parentage is correct and states, among other evidence, that Mr. Edward Meredith Jones of Wrexham, paid a visit to Plas Grono in 1876, while the old house was being demolished, and made a sketch of the coat of arms painted on one of the mantlepieces, which he later showed to him. He says the shield represented a cross saltire, impaling a chevron between three mullets, and states further, that the coat of arms of the eldest brother of Bishop Lloyd, was known to be:—GULES, a Chevron between three mullets or.; and that therefore the coat of arms on the mantlepiece at Plas Grono, was that of Thomas Yale, who married Anne, eldest daughter of Bishop Lloyd.

This coat of arms at Plas Grono indicates that Thomas Yale and his family must have lived for sometime at Plas Grono and it was most likely their permanent, or country home; however they also lived at Chester, and Mr. Palmer states, in his pedigree of the Yales of Plas Grono, that Thomas Yale died at Chester, before August 26, 1619; and in support of this statement, he has written a note at the bottom of page 223 in his book, heretofore mentioned, relative to an inventory on file at Chester, of Thomas Yale's goods. Mr. Palmer's note in substance is as follows:

"I have seen in the Chester Probate Registry, the inventory of the goods of this Thomas Yale, of the City of Chester, gent., dated August 27, 1619. The three children of the deceased are mentioned in the inventory, and in addition, "Mrs Elizabeth Wright, one of the decedent's daughters," and "Mrs Yale," evidently the widow of Mr. Thomas Yale." (The value of this personal estate was £36-10s-8d.)

The "daughter", "Elizabeth Wright", is also called "Mary Wright," in Mr Palmer's pedigree, and it seems she was a younger daughter of Thomas Yale. However it is evident that she was not living August 15, 1625, when Dr. David Yale, the father of Thomas, made his will, as he only mentioned the other three children; David, Thomas and Anne.

Mr. Charles Hervey Townshend of New Haven, Conn., discovered during his researches in England and Wales, several ancient wills, among which was the will of Dr. Thomas Yale, Chancellor to Matthew Parker, Arch Bishop of Canterbury, and the will of Dr. David Yale, Chancellor of Chester, which are noted in connection with other matters about these eminent persons, in this work. Mr. Townshend has also supplied the copies of the inscriptions on the tablets, relating to Bishop George Lloyd and Dr. John Lloyd, reproduced herein. Mr. Townshend was himself a descendant of Mr Thomas Yale, the subject of this sketch, and of his son Thomas Yale of New Haven.

About the year 1625, Anne Lloyd-Yale, the widow of Thomas Yale, married Theophilus Eaton, a wealthy merchant of London; who was the eldest son of the Rev. Richard Eaton, A. B., vicar of Great Budworth, Cheshire. Mr. Eaton was born about 1591, at Stony Stratford, Buckinghamshire, England. He, together with his wife, Anne, and his three step-children, David, Anne and Thomas Yale, sailed for New England in America, in the year 1637, in company with Rev. John Davenport, a celebrated London clergyman. They landed at Boston, Mass., and preferring to go into the wilderness, Eaton with a few men, after exploring the coast of the sound, spent the following winter at a desirable place in that region. As soon as spring opened, the company sailed from Boston and in due time, they arrived at the place where Eaton had spent the winter. There (in April 1638), under a large tree, on the Sabbath after their arrival, Davenport preached his first sermon in the wilderness. A day of fasting and prayer for direction was observed, and they formed a government, pledging themselves "to be governed in all things by the rules which the Scripture held forth to them." Such was the settlement of New Haven. They purchased from the Indians the right to the land (Quinipiak), and Eaton was elected the first governor of New Haven colony, in October 1639; which office he held for more than twenty years, until his death; having been re-elected annually. Mr. Eaton was prominent in the organization of the New England Confederation in 1643. In 1655, assisted by Davenport, he drew up the so-called Connecticut "Blue Laws."

On the fourth of January 1640 the General Court of New Haven agreed to make a division of certain lands in the town, according to the proportion of the personal property possessed by each planter, and at the head of the list is Theophilus Eaton's name, with a family of six persons and a personal estate of £3000, which was thrice as large as that of any other planter, and almost ten per cent of the whole amount listed. Governor Eaton died at new Haven January 7, 1658.

As every bit of information about this family is of general interest, it is well to state that Cotton Mather in his life of Eaton describes the wife of the Governor as, "A Prudent and Pious Widow, the Daughter of the Bishop of Chester." Cotton Mather was undoubtedly personally well acquainted with the Governor and his wife, hence his statement, as to the character and parentage of Anne Lloyd-Yale-Eaton, is of the highest authority.

It is claimed that Mrs. Eaton returned to England with her son David Yale, in 1659. The date or place of her death has not been learned, but she probably died in London, where David resided until in the year 1665.

David Yale was the eldest son of Thomas Yale of Plas Grono, in Wales, and his wife Anne Lloyd, daughter of Bishop Lloyd, who afterwards married Mr. Theophilus Eaton of London England. David was born in 1613. He went with his mother and step-father, to America in 1637 and settled with them at New Haven in 1638. On January 4th 1640 in a list of the personal property possessed by the founders of New Haven, David Yale is said to have had a personal estate valued at £300. The value of his estate was exceeded only by those of Mr. Eaton and his mother and brother.

David Yale at that time was unmarried, but he probably married about the year 1641. His wives first name was Ursula, but her surname has not been learned. He no doubt removed to Boston Mass. about the year 1641, as there is nothing on record about him at New Haven, later than March, 1641. It seems that he disposed of his landed estate in New Haven, to his brother; and at any rate, he must have gone to Boston before May, 1644 as the Boston registry shows the birth of Elizabeth, "the daughter of David and Ursula Yale," in May, 1644, and her death in August of the same year.

Mr. Yale was an active and thriving merchant in Boston and August 23, 1645, purchased from Edward Bendall a house and garden, with lands appurtenant, said to be the most splendid in the city, on the site of the present Pemberton Square. He was also Attorney for the Earl of Warwick in 1646.

Religiously, he recognized and was in sympathy with the established church of England and therefore was not in accord with the civil and religious ideas of the majority of the colonists and with the local laws. Accordingly, in May, 1646, he was induced to join with six others, in signing a famous petition to the General Court of Massachusetts Bay, for the redress of certain alleged grievances, specifically remonstrating at the non-admission to the churches, of those who acknowledged the established religion of England, and at the non-participation of the inhabitants, who were not members of the colonial church, in the management of civil affairs, as voters and office holders. The authorities of Massachusetts were by no means ready for such a subversion of the principles of the Church and State, as then by them constituted, and the revolutionary petition—especially offensive for its distinct threat of appeal, to the parliamentary government in England—was answered, not only by a carefully drawn counter argument, but also by heavy fines. David Yale paid a fine of £30 (corresponding to at least $600 now) into the public treasury, for his part in this imprudent attempt, perhaps incited by older plotters, to stir up a revolution in the Puritan colony. Doubtless the fact of his being out of harmony with the religious and political affairs existing in the colonies, had much to do with his determination later, to return to his native land. On July, 5, 1651, he executed a power of attorney to Captain Thomas Clark and Captain Thomas Lake, to dispose of his Boston estate and he likely left for England soon afterwards; but his family did not go until in 1652, as his son Theophilus was born in Boston, in January 1652. He never returned to America to reside, but was in New England on a visit in the summer of 1659. His agents sold the Boston property for him September 8, 1653.

On his return to England Mr. Yale became a merchant in London, where he remained, certainly, until July, 5th, 1665, during the great plague, as at that time he made his will; evidently believing that he was near to death. In this will he describes himself as “of the Parish of Cripplegate, Merchant,” and as “subject to distempers and sickness.” He makes provision for his wife Ursula; for his sons, David, Elihu, Theophilus and Thomas, and for his distressed sister, Mrs. Ann Hopkins. The eldest son David, was to have the family estate in Denbighshire, (Plas Grono). The “lately purchased house and lands called Llynigmon (Llwyn Enion)” bought by him from Mr. Hugh Sontley, “with two tenements thereunto belonging, lying in the parish of Wrixam;” for the provision of portions of £300 each, for his three younger sons Elihu, Theophilus and Thomas, on their attaining the age of twenty-one, over and above what would come to them from his personal estate. The eldest son is also to have the reversion of the lands in Derbyshire, which he held in trust for the support of his distressed sister, Mrs. Ann Hopkins.

David Yale did not die of the "distempers and sickness" to which he stated, he was subject in 1665, but lived twenty-five years longer. He soon removed however from London to Plas Grono, the family estate, near Wrexham, Wales, as he, as well as his son David, were certainly settled there in September, 1667, for Mr. A. N. Palmer states he has seen both their signatures on a local deed of that date.

Plas Grono was inherited by David from his ancestors, but Llwyn Enion he himself purchased from Mr. Hugh Sontley, some time about 1661 to 1663.

Plas Grono was a larger house than Llwyn Enion, as the tax returns of 1670 state the former contained eight hearths, while the latter had five.

Llwyn Enion, (Enion's Grove), remained as a part of Plas Grono estate, until sold by the heirs of Gov. Elihu Yale in 1728.

David Yale was one of the church-wardens of Wrexham 1673-1674, and he no doubt continued to reside at Plas Grono until his death, January 14, 1690, aged 76 years. His wife Ursula died February 7, 1698, aged 74 years. A tablet in the parish church at Wrexham gives these dates and also the dates of death of their sons David and Thomas and of Mr. Yale's sister, "Anna" Hopkins, the wife of Governor Hopkins.

Thomas was for some years at Madras India, with his brother Gov. Elihu Yale and was engaged in trade between China and India, and as stated in Elihu's biography, the principal cause of the attacks on Elihu, were alleged frauds, in connection with his trading operation. He seems to have accumulated quite a fortune and returned to his native land some years in advance of Elihu and became a merchant in London. Thomas had an interest of £300 in Llwyn Enion, under his fathers will, as has been seen, which would have amounted with interest, to £535, at the time of his death. This had never been paid to him and should have passed to the residuary legatee under his will — the heir male of his uncle Thomas of New England; but it seems Llwyn Enion and Plas Grono were claimed absolutely, by the heirs of Elihu and were sold by them. It may be that some settlement was made with the heir or heirs, in New England, but no such record has been discovered.

The will made by Thomas was dated September 29, 1697 and was proved at London England January 17, 1698 and disposed of his property as follows. "Thomas Yale, of London, merchant," directed that after certain bequests, the remainder was to be laid out "in a good purchase" from the income whereof his mother was to receive an annuity of £50, which his brother Elihu was to have for life if he survived her. "And my will is further, that my said mother's part after her death and the death of my said Brother, and my brothers part after his death, be only received by my Trustee for the use of such persons or person as are hereafter named. And if it should please God, and Brother Elihu Yale should have no heirs male, by him lawfully begotten, then I do herewith appoint that the said estate, after the death of my said Mother and Brother, be annexed to the hereditary estate in the County of Denbigh, for the use of such said heir and his heirs male forever, and in (de) fault of such his heirs. Then to the use and behoof of the heirs male of my uncle Thomas Yale in New England and his right heirs forever." One of the two Trustees of this will was perhaps Rev. Dr. John Evans of London, Bishop of Bangor 1701 and of Meath 1715. Thomas Yale's body was interred at Wrexham church. An interesting letter written by him is reproduced herewith.

Ann Yale married Edward Hopkins, Esq., who was born at Shrewsbury, England, 1600; a prominent merchant and politician of London. He came to America with Gov. Eaton, and others, in 1637, and was made governor of Connecticut, in 1640, which office he held, each alternate year, until 1654, and conducted the affairs of the government with great ability and wisdom. On the death of his brother, he went to England, designing to return to his family and friends, whom he left behind, but was made first Warden of the fleet, in place of his deceased brother, and very soon afterwards chosen Commissioner of the Admiralty and Navy, and finally a member of Parliament.

These unexpected preferments altered his design, and he resolved to send for his family, and spend the remainder of his days in his native country. Gov. Hopkins was founder of the Grammar School, at New Haven, Conn. He gave in his will £1000 for the support of Grammar Schools in Hartford and New Haven, also £500 to Harvard College and the Grammar School at Cambridge. He died in London, in March, 1657, aged about 58 years. Mrs. Ann Hopkins, his wife, died December 14th, 1698, aged 83 years, at Plas Grono, near Wrexham, Wales.

Thomas Yale married Mary Turner, daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Turner of New Haven, 1645. Capt. Turner was of Lynn, Mass., in 1630, and removed to New Haven in 1638, and was lost at sea, with all his crew, in The Phantom, Mr. Lambertson's ship, which sailed from New Haven, January, 1646.

Mr. Yale came to America in 1637, with his father-in-law, Gov. Eaton, and others, and settled in New Haven, as a merchant, in 1638, with an estate of £200. After the death of Eaton, he accompanied his mother and Hannah Eaton, his half sister, and brother David, to England, in 1659. He returned to New Haven, and purchased lands in that part of the town which is now North Haven, and settled on them as early as 1660. He was one of the principal men in the colony, a signer of the Plantation Covenant of New Haven, and filled with honor many offices of trust, with credit to himself, and to the satisfaction of his friends and fellow colonists. He left an estate of £479.

Capt. Thomas Yale died March 27, 1683, aged 67 years,
Mrs. Mary Yale died October 15, 1704, aged —.

Biography of Governor Elihu Yale.

Elihu Yale was son of David Yale, who came from London, England with his mother and step-father, Theophilus Eaton, in 1637, and who was one of the members of the company, headed by Mr. Eaton and Rev John Davenport, which founded the town and colony of New Haven, Connecticut, in 1638.

It has been stated by some writers, that Elihu was the son of Thomas Yale of New Haven, but there is no evidence to support this view, and on the other hand, there is ample, indisputable evidence, that he was the son of David. The will of David Yale and the entry of Elihu's admission to Master Dugard's school are sufficient to prove his parentage, and this evidence is also substantiated by the indirect testimony of Cotton Mather and Mr. Clap, and by the records at Madras, in which Governor Yale's brother, Thomas, is said to have been a trader between China and India, and further and most emphatically, by the will of this same Thomas, made September 29, 1697, in which he makes bequests to his "Brother Elihu Yale," and also, with certain provisions to the "heirs male of my uncle Thomas Yale in New England and his right heirs forever." As will be noted, Thomas Yale by this will makes it clear that Thomas Yale of New Haven was Elihu Yale's uncle, instead of father. Furthermore, such eminent authorities as Franklin B. Dexter M. A., of Yale University and Alfred Neobard Palmer, Antiquarian, of Wrexham Wales, as well as other prominent writers, are emphatic in stating that Elihu Yale was the son of David.

Sometime between March 1641 and April 1644, as has been stated in this work, David Yale removed from New Haven to Boston, Mass. His son Elihu was born April 5, 1649, undoubtedly in or near Boston. Some authorities state, on Pemberton square, Boston. In the year 1652 when Elihu was three years of age, David Yale's family left Boston and went to England, where David had already gone, settling finally in London, where we learn about the arrangements for Elihu's education.

At the time of the execution of King Charles, the master of the well-known Merchant Tailors' School in London, supported by the rich company of that name, was Mr. William Dugard, a graduate of Cambridge, a good scholar, and withal an excellent printer, who combined the business of his trade with other duties. He was the chief printer of the first editions of the Eikon Basilike, attributed to the late king, and in 1650 provoked the Commonwealth authorities still further by printing an English edition of the Defence of the King, by Salmasius; for this his mastership was taken away, and he was thrown into prison. Brought to terms by this, and restored to his office, he also printed Milton's answer to Salmasius; but in 1661 was again dismissed from his place, though not for political reasons, and started a private school in Coleman street, in the city, some of the registers of admission to which are still preserved; and among the entries, under date of September 1, 1662, is the name of "Elihu Yale, 2d son of Mr. David Yale, merchant, born in New England, 1649." (Notes & Queries, 2d ser., ix, 101.) There can be no doubt that this was the boy for whom Yale College is named, who, now in the autumn of 1662, in his fourteenth or fifteenth year, joined Master Dugard's school, in Coleman street; the same short and narrow street in which still stood (until the great fire four years later) the parish church of St. Stephen's; memorable to us as the church of which John Davenport was vicar, and the spiritual parent of the first church of New Haven.

But the training of Elihu Yale by Milton's friend, Master Dugard, was of the briefest; for death ended Dugard's teaching three months after Elihu's admission.

We hear no more of his school experience; but we know the setting of public events, in which he grew from boy to man, and that no other equally brief period in London history has exceeded this in interest and excitement. He was old enough to have seen Cromwell riding in London streets with his guards; to have joined in silent concourse at his funeral, and in the shouts of joy at the Restoration. He lived through the agonies of the plague; he saw the devastation of the great fire. If it pleased him, he may have seen Milton walking in the Park, and Dryden lounging at Will's coffee-house; he may have heard Jeremy Taylor and Richard Baxter preaching in London pulpits, and Geo. Fox and Wm. Penn exhorting in Quaker meeting. He saw the last of an older order of things, like nothing since; and he grew up with the beginnings of what we may fairly call Modern England.

At the end of the sixteenth century a charter had been granted by Queen Elizabeth to a Company of London merchants trading with the East Indies, by which they secured a monopoly of that trade, so far as not possessed by friendly European powers. The Portuguese had already been established in the Peninsula for a hundred years, and simultaneously with the English, the Dutch took a hand in the lucrative traffic.

The first English trading house was at Surat, high up on the Western Coast; but this was not enough; the Eastern side had superior attractions from its offering certain goods, especially the beautifully dyed or painted calicoes, much in demand not only in Europe, but still more in Farther India and the islands to the eastward. But the English attempts to establish a permanent station on the Coromandel Coast were unsuccessful until in 1639, the same year in which civil government was set upon the soil of New Haven, a narrow strip of land, six miles long and a mile in breadth, was purchased of the native ruler of the middle Eastern coast. The shore was sandy and harborless; but the close proximity of the flourishing Portuguese city of St. Thomas augured well for the security of the new settlement, and the further circumstance that the territory included a small island, about as large as our College Square, fixed the bargain. The island was at once fortified, and as none but Europeans were allowed to live on it, this became known as White Town, or from the name given to the fortifications, Fort St. George; while a Black Town quickly sprang up on the adjacent shore; and both settlements together were known as Madras.

In its earliest years the population of the Fort was very scanty, perhaps twenty or thirty servants of the Company, and a small garrison; but before long the neighboring Portuguese city was broken up by a native assault, and many of the refugees were received in Fort St. George, and built themselves dwellings there; and with the growth of the Company's trade came an increasing official population.

At the head of affairs was the agent of the East India Company, styled the Governor of the settlement and afterwards the President, who was also the commander of the garrison. He was lodged in a stately mansion in the center of the island, and kept an open table at which all of the Company's servants were expected to report themselves every day at dinner. Next to him were a bookkeeper (or treasurer), a warehouse keeper (or custom house inspector), and a collector of taxes; these with some trusted merchants made up the Council, who decided with the Governor all matters of business concerning the settlement and its trade, except so far as orders from home took precedence. Under these were the subordinates, all of whom were lodged and fed at the Company's expense.

Salaries were notoriously and ludicrously small,—from the Governor's at £100 a year down to the apprentices' at £5. It was expected that officers and men would indulge in private ventures of their own in Eastern ports, while nominally promoting the Company's trade. Then, too, the opportunities for levying extra and illegal taxes on the natives who sold goods to the Company, were so evident that they may be said to have been expected and connived at; while the want of the restraints of family life, and the close neighborhood of the black town with its temptations to the grosser forms of dissipation, made the Fort a poor school of morals for any new comer, however correct his principles and his life before leaving England.

It was about 1670, when just past his majority, that Elihu Yale emigrated to Madras to make his fortune as a merchant. The details of his rise there are all wanting; but he probably began in the lowest grade of the service, as an apprentice, rising from that to the successive ranks of writer, factor, and merchant. We fix the date of his beginning by his casual mention in a document in 1691, of twenty years' diligent service in India; but the first notice of him in print is in describing the solemnity of proclaiming King James II., at Madras in August, 1685. There was a grand procession of all the chief merchants, English and foreign, great numbers of the inhabitants of the Gentoo town, with arms and elephants and kettle drums and native music, besides twelve English trumpets; and in the chief place of honor was a troop commanded and led by the President, and the rear brought up by Mr. Elihu Yale.* He had the reached, as appears by the record of the succeeding month, the rank of second member of council, and less than two years later had become the senior or first member,—only subordinate, to the Governor or President himself.

At this time the Sultan of Golconda, the petty Mohammedan ruler in whose domains the English fort was situated, was attacked by the great Indian emperor, reigning at Delhi, Aurung-Zeb, and there was need in the complications which might arise, of firmer qualities in the Presidency at Madras than the present incumbent, Mr. Gifford, had shown.

Regular promotion was the principle of the service, and accordingly the directors in London, acting by their Governor, Sir Josiah Child, the eminent writer on finance, sent out orders which were received at Madras on the 23d of July, 1687, retiring President Gifford, and appointing Elihu Yale his successor.

Two months later the great Mogul succeeded in conquering the fortress of Golconda, and became master in consequence of the Northern Carnatic, the province including Madras; and so it was one of the earliest public duties of our American-born President Yale to proclaim on the part of Englishmen, the formal ceremonies of submission to the last and one of the greatest of the great monarchs of India.

The Mogul proved to be dissatisfied with the small rental (about $2000 a year) paid for the occupancy of the Madras territory, and attempted to extort additional sums; and threats were heard of his intending to besiege the fort and destroy all the English in his dominions. The defences were quietly strengthened in consequence, and at the same time conciliatory messages were sent to the Emperor, for which last the President was roundly rebuked by his superiors at home.

In 1689 the accession of William of Orange to the English throne, brought a new complication. The rule of William meant war with France, and that meant for Madras a collision between her commerce and the French settlement at Pondicherry, eighty miles down the coast. But the same event brought the Dutch, who were nearer neighbors on the north, into closer alliance, and the result of the only naval engagement of importance, which President Yale superintended, was favorable to the allies.

Meantime the city thrived and grew rich. Within the narrow limits of the island, garrisoned by seven hundred soldiers, were crowded together about one hundred and thirty houses, containing perhaps three hundred English and many more Portuguese; while within the bounds of the whole territory was a population reckoned at three hundred thousand souls.

Over this multitude the President, acting with the advice of his council, was absolute; and even by himself could wield very great power. The old traveler, Dr. Fryer, who visited Madras about 1675, describes with gusto the Governor's magnificence; his personal guard of three or four hundred blacks; how he never goes abroad without fifes, drums, trumpets, and a flag; being carried in a gorgeous palanquin, and shaded by an ostrich-feather fan.

But the records show that this splendor had its penalties. Year in and year out, a succession of mighty quarrels raged between the Governor and his subordinates in the council, which were relieved perhaps but not quenched, by towering accusations and recriminations.

The prime cause of the attacks on the President appears to have been certain frauds in trading operations, alleged to have been committed by his brother, Thomas Yale, whose side the President espoused. There were further charges against the President directly, of arbitrary government, of neglect of duty, and of using the Company's funds for private speculation.

In answer to such charges, in 1691, he states that he has made honestly during twenty years of diligent service and trading in India, above 500,000 pagodas, that is some $900,000,—which in comparison with the ordinary fortunes of the time would be represented, perhaps, according to our ideas in this century, by three or four millions, or perhaps more. And as salaries were so insignificant, practically the whole of this large amount must have been derived from the profits of private trade. References in letters from the Company seem to show that they regarded his success in accumulating as something extraordinary and not altogether creditable; and yet, that he was reckoned a public benefactor must be concluded from such a sentence as this, in a letter of February, 1691, from the Court of Directors: "We desire our President, Mr. Yale, whom God hath blessed with so great an estate in our service, to set on foot another generous charitable work before he leaves India; that is, the building of a church for the Protestant black people and Portuguese, and the slaves who serve them."

The squables in Council were brought, however, to the ears of the Directors, and accompanied with other charges, especially of losing the trade with Sumatra.

A vote of censure was the final result, and a determination was reached about the beginning of 1692 to remove Yale from office. It was not, however, until November 23d, in that year, that the vessel arrived which bore the commission of his successor, and ended his reign of five years and four months.

The settlement of outstanding accounts between him and the Company dragged through two or three years, and if one may believe his representations to the home authorities, he was grievously plundered by arbitrary seizure of his goods, as well as by legal decisions against him; and was kept a prisoner at the Fort when longing to return to England, with design, as he says, "to enforce him into despair, or otherwise to bring on him some distemper that may hasten his death, which not long since by poison was near effected." (Wheeler's Madras, i, 289.)

There are ample replies to these charges from the new President and Council, detailing their proceedings in conformity to law, but claiming that Yale had bribed the judges where he could, and that his personal liberty had never been abridged. As to his suggestion of poison they say:

"They that know him will doubtless conclude with us, either this bold reflection is no more than the accustomed strains of wicked policy, or a salvo for his own credit against the common reports of the unusual deaths of several of the Council when he was President; . . . if they had been living to declare, themselves, what others have since their death declared as from them, some of Mr. Yale's instruments must have been prosecuted, and he would have been put hard to it to clear his own reputation."

As to poisoning him:

"There was never a report that ever we heard, of anything that would give him the least color for such a suggestion since the year 1691, when there was a story told all about the town, of a rogue that tempted Mrs. Nicks' slave wench to poison her mistress; and because Mrs. Nicks then lived with Mr. Yale at his garden-house (which she and Mrs. Pavia, with their children, have and do frequent to the scandal of Christianity among the heathens,) therefore he takes occasion to suppose the design was against himself and to insinuate that the new President and Council had a hand in it."

Probably the truth was not all on either side of the controversy; but after this we hear no more of these charges.

It may be worth while to notice that Yale's successor as President was Nathaniel Higginson, another American, and a native of Guilford in the old New Haven Colony. He was a grandson of the Rev. Francis Higginson, first minister at Salem, whose widow after his early death came to New Haven, probably because she was a sister to Governor Eaton. This may help to explain how her grandson after graduating at Harvard College and going to England to seek his fortune, followed Governor Eaton's grandson by marriage, Elihu Yale (who was Nathaniel Higginson's senior by three or four years), to Madras, and by his help was started in a prosperous career there. Truth obliges the statement that Higginson has left a cleaner record, both of official and private life in the Indies, than his fellow-countryman and quasi-kinsman.

There is one other unpleasant story, which so far as is known first appeared in print in 1764, in the second edition of John Harris' Collection of Voyages (i, 917), to this effect:—In comment on the mildness of the penalties usually inflicted in the East India Government, it is mentioned that President Yale hanged one of his grooms for riding a favorite horse of his without leave, for two or three days' journey into the country to take the air; but that Yale was tried on his return to England and heavily fined for the misdemeanor. Later writers enlarge the account by stating that his return to England was in order to meet his trial for this murder.

The whole implication in the story as first told, is that it was an incident of his presidency; but as this does not appear among the various charges against him at the time and as full seven years elapsed before his return, and as no records of the trial can be discovered in England, there is some doubt about the evidence. Not that it disagrees with his character; for it is stated that the conclusion of any who study the original documents must be that our hero, if hero at all, was like the image in Nebuchadnezzar's dream; part of fine gold and part of iron and clay. His surroundings must be his most effective defence for a record of arrogance, cruelty, sensuality, and greed, while in power at Madras.

In 1699, however, at the age of fifty-one, he sailed for England. He found that his father, mother and brothers had died, and one of his first acts was to prove, as sole survivor of the family, the will made many years before.

Soon after his return, he built in London a stately residence, in Queen's Square, Great Ormond street, a little to the east of the present British Museum, the site of which is now probably occupied by a hospital, built in later years.

The Square was a fashionable locality, laid out and built up in the reign of Queen Anne, from whom came the name. Though now buried in the heart of London, it was then, and for at least fifty years later, quite on the outskirts of the city, and the northern side was left open for the sake of the beautiful landscape, formed by the hills of Highgate and Hampstead, with the intervening fields.

That his was a palatial establishment and filled with works of art and curiosities of great value, appears from the fact that he received as insurance from the Sun Fire Office, in January 1719, on account of a recent fire in this house, the enormous sum of £4,500.

In connection with his return from India the story has been handed down that the first auction ever held in Great Britain was an auction of goods brought home with him and sold in 1700; but though this may have made an epoch in the history of auctions, it is yet true that the system in its essentials can be traced further back:—see, for instance, Pepys' Diary for 1660 (Nov. 6), for a notice of the sale by inch of candle, a method of auction early in vogue, both on the Continent and in England.*

*See, also, Notes and Queries, 5th series, xii, 95.

It was on May 11, 1711, that Mr. Jeremiah Dummer, the agent at London for the Province of Massachusetts Bay, as later also for the Colony of Connecticut, first mentions in a letter to the Rev. James Pierpont of New Haven, the principal founder of the Collegiate School at Saybrook, that "Mr. Yale, formerly Governor of Fort St. George, who has got a prodigious estate," having no son, is sending to Connecticut for a relation to make him his heir; that is, I suppose, to secure the descent of the landed property in Wales to one of the Yale name. "He told me lately," adds Dummer, "that he intended to bestow a charity upon some college in Oxford, under certain restrictions which he mentioned. But I think he should rather do it to your college, seeing he is a New England and I think a Connecticut man. If, therefore, when his kinsman comes over, you will write him a proper letter on that subject, I will take care to press it home."*

Pierpont was not a man to neglect such an opportunity, and no doubt when young David Yale, a boy of fifteen, son of the oldest cousin of the governor, was sent over, in the year 1714, he carried "a proper letter," describing the achievements and aspirations of the college at Saybrook.

About the same time Dummer was collecting from all his friends a gift of books for the college library, and when these (upwards of seven hundred volumes in all) were received in 1714, between thirty and forty volumes (the most from any single donor except the collector himself) were marked as given by Governor Yale. The selection, which was presumably his own, is an uncommonly broad one; there are good representatives of theology, history, chronology, polite literature, classics, metaphysics, natural science, medicine, political science, commerce, agriculture, military science, and architecture,—providing we may say, some foundation for every one of the present departments in the university which was then so completely in embryo.

President Clap (Annals, p. 23) has stated that another gift of three hundred volumes followed this three years later; but the contemporary records, which appear to be full on this subject, have no trace of it, and there is reason to think that the statement is a wrong inference of Clap's, from a vote passed in 1717 with reference to other gifts by Dummer voted to remove it from Saybrook to New Haven, and in the same month instruction was actually begun in temporary quarters here; and a year later the first college house was raised,—that stupendous architectural monstrosity, which stood till the Revolution in front of the present South College. We may form a good idea of its appearance by imagining a wooden building the length of Durfee College, and of three-quarters its height, but of only one-half the width, and painted moreover a beautiful cerulean color.

In October, 1716, a majority of the trustees of the Collegiate School

The trustees were utterly without resources to finish so elegant a building; but they had probably begun it with a more or less distinct hope of help from abroad, and in their extremity one good friend of the college, Dr. Cotton Mather, of Boston, was appealed to, whose powers of persuasion proved equal to the need. On the 14th of January, 1718, he wrote to Governor Yale a remarkable letter, in which he praised skilfully the Governor's well-known charity, and solicits his favor towards the college at New Haven; with a happy vein of prophecy, linking the two words that had never been joined before, as they now stand linked to all the future. "Sir," said he, "though you have felicities in your family, which, I pray, God continue and multiply, yet certainly, if what is forming at New Haven might wear the name of YALE COLLEGE, it would be better than a name of sons and daughters. And your munificence might easily obtain for you a commemoration and perpetuation of your valuable name, which would indeed be much better than an Egyptian pyramid."*

It is the fashion to sneer at Cotton Mather for his lively imagination and his overweening credulity; but no inspired vision could have given him firmer ground for his faith that was in him. The morsel, the merest fragment of his great possessions, which the rich man, thoughtlessly perhaps, and possibly grudgingly, cast on the waters, in response to this appeal, has not been lost or scattered. It has brought to his name great honor, and fame more enduring than any possible material structure of man.

Dummer, meantime, was "endeavoring to get a present from Mr. Yale for finishing the college;" and his interviews, seconded by such letters as Mather's, bore welcome fruit.

On June 11th, 1718, there were shipped from Governor Yale in a vessel bound for Boston, three bales or trunks of valuable goods, to be sold for the benefit of the college; and with these the full-length portrait of King George I., by Kneller, which still graces the college collection, an escutcheon representing the royal arms, which was destroyed in the Revolution, and a large box of books,—the entire value of the gift being estimated at £800. An invoice of a part of the goods is still preserved, with its enumeration of “25 pieces of garlix (whatever that may be), 18 pieces of calico, 17 pieces of stuff (that is, worsted goods), 12 pieces Spanish poplin, 5 pieces plain muslin, 3 pieces camlet, and 2 of black and white silk crape;”—these being set down as worth £130 at prime cost, but bringing in Boston three times that amount. Besides there were other parcels sold unbroken at the same two hundred per cent advance, making the entire proceeds of the gift, in hard money, £562, 12s. Three years elapsed before the goods were all sold and paid for, but it is probable the money was all swallowed up in meeting the bills for the erection of the new college, which is said to have cost nearly £1000. It was a crisis in the history of the institution; for though it is hard to imagine the turn of events if the trustees had not received this help, it seems extremely doubtful if they could have finished their new building at once; and every delay would have strengthened immensely the faction opposed to the removal to New Haven, which now was conducting a rival college at Wethersfield, and which might very probably, but for this timely contribution, have succeeded in endowing the rival and choking out the New Haven original.

It is saying little to note that this was by far the largest sum which the college during the first twenty years of its struggling existence had received from any private person. Nor should we judge from our modern notions of large endowments, that Governor Yale earned his immortality too cheaply. It was really for those times a munificent gift; and the giver remained for a full century, the largest individual donor to the college funds; until the receipt of $10,000 in 1837 from the estate of Dr. Alfred E. Perkins, for the library.

The news of this great gift reached New Haven a few days before the Commencement celebration.

The story of that splendid and long remembered Commencement is no doubt familiar to all who have glanced at the annals of the college. On that bright September morning, in the year 1718, “we were favored and honored," writes the contemporary chronicler, Tutor Johnson, "with the presence of his Honor Governor Saltonstall and his lady, and the Honorable Colonel Tailer of Boston, and the Lieutenant Governor and whole Superior Court," also a great number of reverend ministers and a great concourse of spectators. The trustees, meeting in the new building "first most solemnly" in the sonorous Latin periods still spread upon their records, "named our college by the name of Yale College . . . upon which the Hon. Col. Tailer," who had been sent over by Queen Anne as Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts Bay, and who in anticipation of these festivities had made the toilsome journey from Boston, "represented Governor Yale in a speech, expressing his great satisfaction."

At the public exercises in the church, there was a pleasant rivalry in Latin compliments to the absent Mæcenas from the salutatory orator of the graduating class (a son of James Pierpont), from one of the Trustees (a grandson of John Davenport), and most elegantly of all from that superb old Puritan, Governor Saltonstall himself.

And before they separated the Trustees composed a profuse and painful letter of thanks, at which, as Dummer reports in due season, the old gentleman was more than a little pleased, "saving that he expressed at first some kind of concern whether it was well in him, being a churchman, to promote an Academy of Dissenters. But when he had discoursed the point freely, he appeared convinced that the business of good men is to spread religion and learning among mankind, without being too fondly attached to particular tenets about which the world never was, nor never will be, agreed. Besides," adds Dummer, "if the discipline of the Church of England be most agreeable to Scripture and primitive practice, there's no better way to make men sensible of it than by giving them a good learning."

It is surely alike to the honor of the givers and of the recipients that the great benefactors of this College in its first century, Elihu Yale and George Berkeley, were both churchmen, as the greatest benefactor of Harvard in the same century was Thomas Hollis, a Baptist.

It does not appear that any additions were made to these gifts until February, 1721, when Dummer writes to Governor Saltonstall that Mr. Yale has shipped another £100 worth of goods for the College. "This, however is but half what he promised me a month ago, when he assured me he would remit you £200 sterling per annum during his life, and make a settled annual provision to take place after his death. But old gentlemen are forgetful" The College records do not show clearly whether the shipment here referred to was actually received; but there seems no reason to doubt that it was. The name, "Yale College," was changed to "Yale University" in 1887, by authority of the General Assembly of the State.

It is probable that Mr. Yale intended to make an additional substantial bequest to the college in his will, but he died so suddenly that it was left unsigned. According to Dummer's letters there was a will partly finished which contained a legacy for the college (stated by Rector Clap to have been £500). Mr. Dummer made every effort to secure this legacy for the college, but the sons-in-law resisted and were successful.

It is due Mr. Yale, however, if there were any seeming lack of generosity in his last years, on his part, to the college which bore his name, to explain that in 1718 he lost £40,000 through the absconding of Sir Matthew Kirwood, Knt., goldsmith. Sir Matthew was banker to Edward Pauncefort, Esq., one of the receivers general to the Commissioners of Assize, and Governor Yale was surety for the banker in a penal bond for the sum mentioned. Mr. Yale sued out a writ of error against the Crown, and soon after his death his widow and administratrix, Katherine Yale, obtained a new writ of error to reverse the judgment. The loss of this large amount, which in those times would be considered an enormous sum, was no doubt sufficient to cause a person, even in his affluent circumstances, to curtail and perhaps abandon expenditures which might have been contemplated.

Returning to the narrative of Mr. Yale's life, we find that on November 4, 1680, he married, at St. Mary's, Fort St. George, Madras, Catharine (Katharine), widow of Mr. Joseph Hynmers, a former member of the council, and daughter of Mrs. Ann Elford. It is regrettable to have to admit, in the light of historical evidence heretofore mentioned, that he also was living during his residence at Madras in immoral relations with a Mrs. Nicks and a Mrs. Pavia, the latter a Portuguese Jewess, at his garden house in Fort St. George. It has been stated by Peters, a writer given to questionable statements, that Mrs. Hynmers was a copper-colored native of India, but this statement is dis-countenanced by Professor Dexter and other reliable authorities. Mr. Dexter states, however, that she may have been of Portuguese descent, and possibly a Jewess; but Mr. Alfred Neobard Palmer is of the opinion that this inference is also quite unlikely, and it seems very probable that she was an Englishwoman.

Mr. Yale lived at Plas Grono, in Wales, directly after his return from India, as his name occurs in the parish books of Wrexham for the year 1699; and while, as stated heretofore, he erected a splendid residence in London, he spent much of his time for many years at Plas Grono, the family estate near Wrexham, Wales. In 1704 he was made high sheriff of Denbighshire, and to show that he was residing at Plas Grono in 1707, will state that the following entry appears in the parish register at Wrexham, under date of September 23, 1707: "Mary Vinkety, tonemoore, Servant of Elihu Yale, Marchant of place Cronow in Esclusham below Ditch, was Buryed." He was also often present at the vestry meetings of Wrexham, as is evidenced by his signature to the resolutions passed.

In 1707 he erected at his sole cost a gallery across the east end of the nave in the parish church of Wrexham (St. Giles). This gallery took the place of the old rood loft, which was removed in 1662. This gallery contained several pews, of which Mr. Yale retained six in front for his own disposal. In 1718, becoming dissatisfied with the position of his gallery, he obtained permission to remove it to the western end of the nave, where it appears to have remained until 1779, when a new gallery was erected. He also gave to the church a picture of the Lord's Supper, incorrectly ascribed to Titian, which was sold to Mrs. Isherwood, of Gresford, in 1842; and a picture representing King David playing upon the harp, which still remains. Further, he re-flagged the altar space, also re-railed it, and supplied a new altar table with a marble top, which was subsequently removed to Berse Drelincourt Chapel. He gave, as well, a new pulpit and sounding board, a clock dial, a reading desk and a carving of the Royal Arms of England. It has been claimed, also, that he gave to the church the beautiful wrought iron chancel screen or gates, when the eastern gallery was removed, but there is no positive evidence on this point; however, the style of the screen is that of the earlier years of the eighteenth century. Although Governor Yale resided at Plas Grono, that modest, yet quite amply disposed and home-like place described more fully in connection with the biography of Elihu's ancestors, his permanent residence was no doubt in London after his return from India until his death. On July 18, 1718, he is described as "of the parish of St. Andrew, hobourne, in the county of Middlesex, esq.," St Andrew's being the parish to which Queen's Square belonged. It is stated that he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London in the early part of 1718.

In summing up other incidents of record in Mr. Yale's life, it is well to state that in a list headed: "Foundation of Charity School Bers is owing to the following subscribers, set up 1st Nov. 1719," his name appears as "Mr. Yale," in connection with those of Mr. Myddelton, of Chirk Castle, and Mrs. Egerton, as a contributor, by promise of £5 yearly. This refers to Berse Drelincourt.

Perhaps the most interesting of all of the unofficial items pertaining to Elihu Yale is a Japanese metal screen, purchased by Mr. Yale in India about the year 1682, and forwarded by him to a friend in Wales. (No doubt this friend was Mr. Josua Edisbury, of Erddig Hall.) This screen is still in existence, and is owned by Mr. Philip Yorke, Esq., of Erddig Hall; near Wrexham, through whose kindness the author was able to obtain a photograph of same, which is reproduced herewith. Of almost if not quite equal interest is the original letter written by Mr. Yale, April 20, 1682, in reference to this same screen, and in which he acknowledges receipt, as well, of "four Rundletts of Sand-patch Ale." This letter is also preserved at Erddig Hall, and we are greatly indebted to Mr. Yorke for a photograph of same, which is reproduced herewith. This letter is certainly decidedly clever and interesting, and gives us in a measure renewed insight into his character. Neither the screen or letter have ever before been reproduced. However, the letter is copied in print in Mr. Alfred Neobard Palmer's book, "The Country Townships of the Old Parish of Wrexham," and this printed copy by Mr. Palmer is given herewith, together with his explanatory notes, as it may be of some aid in reading the photographic copy:

This portrait was painted in June 1717 by Enoch Zeeman, a Dutch painter, then settled in London and was presented to the college by Dudley Long North, a great grandson of Governor Elihu Yale, in 1789. The written name is an exact reproduction of his signature, in one of the church warden's books at Wrexham, Wales.

The same Josua Edisbury, Esq., of Erddig Hall, to whom Elihu's letter was quite likely written, afterwards profited by his acquaintance, and borrowed from Mr. Yale £2,000, for which later on, when his estate was being disposed of to satisfy his creditors, he gave Elihu a bond for £4,000, March 12, 1706. On March 24, 1708, Mr. Yale secured a judgment at “the Great Sessions in Wales,” and the case was left to “Mr. Olebar,” whose report may be thus summarized:

Debt	2,000	0	0
Interest thereon to July 14, 1718,	1,477	18	7
Taxed costs	33	18	7
	3,511	17	2

*“Transfusion” is here meant, the notion of transfusion of blood so as to restore vigour.

†“Cairaryan.” Perhaps “Carian” is intended.

‡“Mango Atcher.” Mr. Edward Owen of the India Office, explains this name as designating a kind of “pickles.”

Mr. Yale, in connection with this transaction, was said to be, as before stated, "of the parish of St. Andrews, hobourne, in the county of Middlesex, esq." There seems to have been some slight discrepancy in the records, as the actual sum due him was reported £3,511-14-5, and as there was not sufficient money in Mr. Olebar's hands to pay in full, he proportioned the amount due from the estate on the bond as £3,370-16-11, and in consideration of this sum paid to him, Mr. Yale released the bond and judgment to Mr. Vigerus Edwards, in trust for Mr. John Mellor, who had purchased the Edisbury estate. This estate, Erddig Hall, as has been heretofore set forth, was owned in earlier times by Elihu Yale's great-grandfather, Dr. David Yale.

Having noted all the events in Governor Elihu Yale's career which public and private records seem able to disclose, we now come to the closing days of his life.

On Saturday, July 8, 1721, the Weekly Journal and British Gazetteer of London, announced that "Elihu Yale, Esq., commonly called Governor Yale, a gentleman eminently known for his extensive charity, lies at the point of death at his house in Queen's Square, Great Ormond Street" He died before the close of that day, aged 72 years, 3 months and 3 days. The last consolation of religion, if offered, must have been by the vicar of the parish church of St. Andrew's, Holborn, the noted Dr. Henry Sacheverell, the Tory partisan, whose conviction by the House of Peers caused such great excitement a few years before. In the issue of the "Daily Post," London, on Tuesday, July 18. 1721, the following appeared: "Yesterday morning the corpse of Elihu Yale, Esq., was carried out of town, in order to be interred at Wrexham, in Wales." The distance from London to Wrexham is nearly 200 miles, and it was July 22 when Wrexham was reached and the interment took place in the yard of the old parish church of Wrexham, (St. Giles.)

In the month of March, 1722, the "Evening Post" of London announced an auction, soon to be held at Governor Yale's late residence in Queen's Square, and the enumeration of the list of articles is interesting, and illustrates in some degree his tastes and mode of living. It included a collection of jewels, among which was a celebrated diamond ring that formerly belonged to Mary, Queen of Scots; diamond and pearl necklaces; gold repeating and silver watches; household plate, including several dozens of silver plates; a large collection of valuable pictures; a great variety of India cabinets, and divers sorts of household goods; brass cannon; curious firearms; mathematical instruments; several parcels of fine silks, linens and muslin; and many valuable curiosities in gold, silver and agate.

On the 12th and 13th of August, 1728, by indentures of lease and release, the heirs-at-law of Elihu Yale, in consideration of £5,025. sold the Plas Grono estate to George Wynne, Esq., (afterwards Sir George Wynne, baronet), of Leeswood, Flintshire, to Mr. Meredith and to Mr. Williams, the respective shares of the purchase money being thus apportioned: Mr. Wynne, £3,128-17-4 $\frac{3}{4}$; Mr. Meredith, £142-19-3 $\frac{1}{4}$; and Mr. Williams, £1,753-3-4. The foregoing particulars were taken from a memorandum at Erddig Hall by Mr. A. N. Palmer, Esq. This estate thus disposed of included Old Plas Grono (afterwards known as Plas Grono Farm), New Plas Grono, Llwyn Enion, and various other lands.

It will be noted that Plas Grono was sold by Elihu Yale's descendants as "heirs-at-law," and not as devisees; so it is clear that he left no will, or at least none properly signed and attested.

The vendors of the Plas Grono estate in 1728 are thus described in the conveyance later on by Mr. Wynne to Mr. Mellor in 1731, and being a legal description of record, is of interest, i. e.:

"Dudlev North, the younger, Esq., son and heir apparent of Dudley North of Glemham in the county of Suffolk, esq., by Catherine, his late wife, deceased, who was the eldest of the three daughters and Co-heirs of Elihu Yale, late of Plas Grono, als Plas Newydd, als Tu Cerig, in the township of Esclusham, in the county of Denbigh, Esq., deceased, and also nephew and one of the two Co-heirs of Ursula Yale, late of Queen's Square, Ormond Street, in the county of Middlesex, deceased, who was the youngest daughter and one of the three Co-heirs of the said Elihu Yale; the Right Hon^{ble} James Cavendish, Esq., comonly called Lord James Cavendish, youngest brother of the Most Noble William, Duke of Devonshire, and Ann his wife, comonly called Lady Cavendish, second daughter and one other of the Coheirs of the said Elihu Yale, and only Surviving Sister, and one of the two coheirs of the said Ursula Yale; and the said Dudley North the elder, executor of the last Will and Testament of the said Ursula Yale."

In reference to Elihu being noted for his "extensive charity," as mentioned in the London newspaper, July 8, 1721, it is not definitely known in what way this charity was evidenced; however, Mr. Dexter states in his paper on "Governor Elihu Yale," that he offered in 1718, to the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel" 100 guineas for buying or building for them suitable quarters. Mr. Dexter also states that the church of St. George the Martyr was erected in 1706, at the southwest angle of Queen's Square, by private subscription from residents in the neighborhood, and that it is tradition that it was named in honor of one of the founders who had been governor of Fort St. George. If this tradition is true it must have meant Governor Elihu Yale.

No more fitting close can be given to the biography of Elihu Yale than to quote the closing paragraph of Professor Franklin B. Dexter's paper, i. e.:

"But though we cannot claim him as 'town born,' there is no Englishman, there is no American, who has done more to make New Haven 'a name and a praise through all the earth' than the timely giver, who made the fluttering, precarious existence of Yale College a blessed certainty."

Mr. Yale's plain altar-tomb, in the churchyard of the beautiful ancient parish church in Wrexham, stands on a line with the northern wall of the magnificent west tower. The inscriptions have been re-cut, or replaced, in modern times. The oldest known copy of the nine lines on the north side is that given in Pennant's "Tours in Wales (1778)," which reads thus:

"Born in America, in Europe bred
 In Africa travell'd, and in Asia wed,
 Where long he liv'd and thriv'd; at London dead,
 Much good, some ill, he did; so hope all's even,
 And that his soul thro' mercy's gone to heaven
 You that survive, and read, take care
 For this most certain exit to prepare,
 For only the actions of the just Smell sweet and blossom in the dust."

The alterations have been made from time to time. Now the lines read as follows:

"Born in America, in Europe bred,
 In Africa travell'd and in Asia wed,
 Where long he liv'd and thriv'd; in London dead.
 Much good, some ill, he did; so hope all's even,
 And that his soul thro' mercy's gone to heaven.
 You that survive and read this tale take care,

For this most certain exit to prepare,
Where blest in peace, the actions of the just Smell sweet, and blossom in the silent dust."

This poetical legend is apparently an imitation of the Duns Scotus epitaph at Cologne.

Formerly there was an inscribed stone at the east end, which was removed in later years. It was inscribed as follows: "In the year of our Lord MDCCCXX this tomb underwent a general repair by the Parish to commemorate the memory of him who so liberally contributed to the improvement of this church." At the west end are the words: "Restored by the authorities of Yale College, U. S., 1874 and 1895."

The inscription on the south side of the tomb is as follows: "Eliugh Yale, Esq., was buried, the twenty-second of July, in the year of our Lord MDCCXXI." The spelling of his first name is a stone-cutter's error, as Mr. Yale spelled his name himself "Elihu."

A 36 David,	Fort St. George, Madras, India.	Fort St. George.	In infancy in the year, 1687.

On a granite slab in Fort St. George, Madras, his memory is commemorated by the following inscription in Latin: "Hic jacet David, filius honorabilis Elihu Yale, Presidentis et Gubernatoris Castellii Sancti Georgii et Civitatis Madrassæ."

A 37 Catherine,

Married Dudley North, of Glemham, merchant, who was brother of Francis North, Baron of Guilford, and Lord Keeper of England. This Francis was the grandfather of the first Earl of Guilford. The children of Dudley and Catherine North were, Dudley, Anna, Mary and Elihu. The first died without issue before 1789. Anna married Hon. Nicholas Herbert. Mary married ——— Long Esq, of Suffolk.

A 38 Ann,

Married Lord James Cavendish, third son of the first Duke of Devonshire. Lady Cavendish died June 27, 1734. Lord James Cavendish died December 14, 1751. They left the following children: first, William, who married Barbara, daughter of Edward Chandler, Lord Bishop of Durham. He died without issue June 30, 1751. Second, Elizabeth, who married, February, 1732, Richard Chandler, a son of the Bishop.

Richard Chandler by act of Parliament in 1752, changed his name to Cavendish, after the death of his wife's father, Lord James Cavendish. Richard's wife Elizabeth died without issue and left her personal estate to her cousin, Dudley Long Esq., of Suffolk, who assumed the name of Dudley Long North, and who reached some distinction as a member of Parliament and a friend and companion of Dr. Johnson, and was therefore embalmed in the pages of Boswell. Dudley Long North, was the donor to Yale College in 1789, of the protrait of Governor Elihu Yale, which is still preserved in the college. Mr. North died in 1829. He was Elihu Yale's great grandson.

She died unmarried a few days after her father's death, at the home of her sister Lady Cavendish, in Bucks, leaving a will in which she disposed of personal property valued at £20000; among which was a bequest of £100 to the poor of Wrexham.

Besides the four children, above named, of his marriage with Mrs. Hymers, he also had a son by Mrs. Pavia, namely:

Charles Yale, ———.

The following Latin inscription marks his grave at the Cape of Good Hope, where he died.

"Hic jacet in tumulo Carolus Yale, filius Domini Yale, quonda (m) gubernator (is), Madrassapatamiæ necnon Feronimæ de Paibia. juvenis admodum inclytus virtute, et etiam elegans, unigenitus suæ matris, et sui patris filius unicus: Vivens ab omnibus amatus, nunc mortuus deploratus: natus fuit in Madrassapatamia, et hic obiit Fanrii vicesimo tertio. anno ætatis suæ vicesimo secundo, annoque Domini, 1711-12. Mr. John Yale, of New Haven, married Rebecca ——— and is supposed to have lived in that part of New Haven, now North Haven, on or near the farm of Mr. John Gill, of that place. He was an extensive planter, and left a very handsome estate. Of his history very little can be learned.

Mr. John Yale died December 16, 1711, aged 65 years. Mrs. Rebecca Yale died October 17, 1734, aged 78 years. The tombstone erected to her memory was in 1850, standing in the old graveyard in North Haven.

Capt. She died May 27, 1716, and he married, 3d, Mary Beach, of Wallingford, July 31, 1716. He had no issue by the two last wives. About two years after his first marriage, he, with others, began to agitate the settlement of Wallingford, to which place he removed in May, 1670, with a small band of other adventurers, under the guidance and direction of the New Haven Committee, as it was called. By the records of Wallingford, it appears that he was one of the most prominent, active and energetic men among them. He assisted in the formation of the church, February 15, 1675, and in the call of the first and second ministers, viz:—the Rev. Samuel Street, in 1672, and Rev. Samuel Whittelsey, April 4. 1709

In 1710 himself and the Rev. Samuel Street were the only surviving signers of the Plantation Covenant of Wallingford. September 19, 1710 he was one of a committee of three appointed to sell Indian lands, etc., in the town. He was a justice of the peace, captain of the train-band, surveyor of land, and moderator of their meetings, and kept the records of their proceedings for nearly twenty years.

Capt. Thomas Yale died at Wallingford, January 26, 1736, aged 89 years.

Mrs. Rebecca Yale, his first wife, was born at New Haven, February 26, 1650, and died in Wallingford,

This plate was made from a photograph of the original screen, which is owned by Mr. Philip Yorke, of Erddig Hall, near Wrexham, Wales. occupied by five generations of his family, from Revolutionary war times to 1867.

The residence is situated on the south side of East Main St., about three fourths of a mile east of Broad Street. The estate originally comprised the land on both sides of Main St., extending across the valley. The residence now on the estate was built in 1799, but is not the original one. This estate was purchased by Abel Yale, father of Daniel, at the time Rev. Theophilus Hall came to Meriden as pastor; the farm he previously owned being purchased by the church for Rev. Hall.

He enlisted in 1776, in Capt. John Couch's company of Bradley's battallion, Wadsworth's brigade, for his country's service in the Revolutionary war. In the summer and part of the fall of 1776, his battallion was stationed at Bergen Heights and Paulus Hook, and in October of same year at Fort Lee under Gen. Greene. Then in November was sent to assist in the defense of Fort Washington, which fell November 16, and the entire garrison was captured. On his way home after his discharge he was taken with the small-pox, and after untold suffering was taken in and cared for by an aged woman, whose name unfortunately has not been preserved.

Biography of Linus Yale Sr.

Linus Yale, first of Middletown, Conn., and later of Newport, Herkimer County, N. Y., married Chlotilda Hopson, September 27, 1815. She was born May 6, 1797.

To Linus Yale Sr., belongs the honor of being the original inventor of locks to which the name "Yale" was given. His son, Linus Yale Jr., was the actual inventor in later years of the pin tumbler, flat keyed lock, which brought to the name the universal and world-wide celebrity and made the name Yale synonymous with excellence and high standard in the lock world; but the father was the pioneer in the Yale lock field; he hewed the way, opened the road and led the advance, that eventually reached to great fame for his family name.

He was born April 27, 1797, in Middletown, Conn. His parents moved to Salisbury, Herkimer Co., N. Y., where he resided with them on a farm for a time. About 1835 he removed to Newport, N. Y., and in 1837 he was granted a patent on threshing machines. This patent was signed by President Andrew Jackson. Previously, in 1829-1830 he had invented a process for dressing mill stones, by which an unskilled workman could sharpen the grinding surface as well as a skilled mechanic. Later on he invented the "Yale sawmill head block dog," which mechanically adjusted the log with rapidity and exactness and has never been surpassed; no sawmill was thought to be well equipped without it. He disposed of this patent and used the money received for same to build and equip a factory for the manufacture of locks, which were his chief inventions. He also made numerous inventions besides those mentioned and almost always sold them, to provide funds for the upbuilding of the lock business.

About 1840-1845 he commenced the manufacture of the Yale bank lock, which with its improvements, became famous wherever treasures were protected by safes or vaults. About 1847 he brought out the "Yale Magic Bank Lock," and in that year he purchased the land and water rights where the ruins of the "old Yale lock factory" now stand in Newport, and built the stone building which is shown in the plate in this book. He obtained power for his factory from a small stream, by building two dams, which stored sufficient water to operate the works. A very successful business was conducted at these works for many years. During this later period Mr. Yale associated with himself in the lock business. Mr. Ira L. Cady, who married his daughter Chlotilda Yale, and for whom he built a home in the upper part of the village, known as "the Cady place;" the house being of octagonal form and built of stone. It still stands near the old lock factory, and is one of the beauties of Newport's architecture. Mr. Ira L. Cady became prominent as an expert in all work in connection with the construction of safes and vaults, using in his work the Yale locks. Mr. Cady, for business reasons, mainly to secure the advantages of the metropolis in distribution, removed later to New York City, where he continued in the sale of bank locks and safe work.

Mr. Yale's son Linus Jr., joined him in the lock business, in 1849, and later became, as set forth in his biography in this volume, the greatest of all men in the art of lock making. The son finally engaged in the lock business on his own account, and about the year 1855, removed his business to Philadelphia.

Linus Yale Sr., was a sound thinker and of eminently independent judgement, and his opinions on all public questions affecting the community, were greatly respected; and his excellent judgement was especially manifested in connection with the proposed building of the railroad from Herkimer to Clayton, when his practical judgement was proof against the enthusiasm of the hour, and the then impractical project was abandoned; thus saving the community from a great burden, which later events proved would have been almost disastrous. He was one of the two directors in this proposed company, appointed from Herkimer county.

Mr. Linus Yale, Sr., died in 1857, and the business at Newport,, was carried on by Messers, Tyler and Harris, as his successors. In 1861 the plant and business was purchased by Harris brothers, who successfully conducted the business for many years, after which they disposed of same to a party in Albany, who pursued in the same lines for a time. Recently however, the entire plant, good will, name and etc., have been purchased by parties in the central part of the state and re-located nearer the old home. During all these changes in ownership, the business never lost its connection with the name "Yale" and perhaps never will. It might be well to state again here, however. that the greatest prominence given to the name of Yale, in connection with locks, was brought out by the branch of the business founded by the son, Linus Yale, Jr., as set forth in his biography herein.

Gad Lowrey Yale, of Galva, Ill., was married October 16, 1836, to Abby W. Reed, a daughter of William Reed, of Goshen, Conn., and later of Knox, Co. Ill. She was born in 1816. He married secondly to Mary M. Wilsey, August 26, 1849, who was born December 13, 1821, at Troy, Bradford Co., Penn. She was a daughter of William H. Wilsey, and Catharine Maynard-Wilsey.

William H. and Catharine M. Wilsey had three children: William H. Wilsey, Jr., late of Mapleton and Little Sioux, Ia., born May 6, 1822; Sabrina (Mrs. Jacob Cramer) of Galva, Kans., and Mary M. Wilsey-Yale. Catharine Maynard was born in Vermont, and went with her parents to Pennsylvania, where she married Mr. Wilsey. He died while their three children were quite young, and she married Oliver Stoddard, and moved in 1836, first to Ohio, then to Michigan, and thence to Peoria, Co., Ill., where Catharine died at the age of 50 years.

Mrs. Mary M. W. Yale was a school teacher for a number of years in Ill., before her marriage.

Gad Lowrey Yale, moved with his family from South Canaan, Conn.,

to Knox, Co., Ill., in 1840, and purchased quite a large tract of land in Lynn Township, Knox Co. The country there was new at that time, and Chicago, then only a small place, was the favored trading point, 140 miles distant. A trip to Chicago, with wagons loaded with wheat and hauled with ox teams, was not an unusual, yet a formidable undertaking in those days; returning with supplies for the farm and home. The material for a large barn built on the Lynn Township farm, was partly hauled from Chicago in this manner.

Mr. Yale was an enterprising, energetic, genial and courageous man of unswerving integrity, and respected by all who knew him. He was an invalid for the last six years of his life, and died on his Lynn Township farm, April 14, 1882. Yale school in Lynn Township, was named after him.

Mrs. Mary M. W. Yale died March 7, 1894, at the home of her daughter Mrs. Adella Yale-Hunt, at Palisade, Nebr. She was a well educated woman of a most kind and unselfish disposition and devoted to her children.

His first wife died February 5, 1849.

Caroline B. Yale, of South Canaan Conn., married November 28, 1850, at Waterbury, Conn., Elisha Dutton Mansfield, of Huntsville, Conn., who was born December 15, 1806. Mr. Mansfield had married previously to Fanny Munson, June 25, 1834. She died November 17, 1849, and her children love and revere the memory of their step-mother Caroline, so highly, that it seems a proper tribute to their devotion, to a woman who was remarkable for her motherly kindness, love and sense of duty, to record here, some remarks and information, about these estimable step-children.

They were: William Henry, born June 2, 1835;
 Sarah Booth, born May 15, 1837;
 Peter, July 27, 1840;

All of these children were yet young and needed a mothers care and advice, when Caroline came into their life, and she was to them at all times and under all circumstances, all that a mother could be; for which they have all been very grateful, and speak and write of her in words of deepest love and regard. Her husband, Mr. Elisha Dutton Mansfield, died March 21, 1869, and she with her step-son, Peter, and her only own child, Hugh W., removed soon thereafter to Virginia, where they remained about three years, when she and son Hugh W. went to live at Winsted, Conn., where she died March 9, 1900.

Mr. William H. Mansfield died at West Hartford, Conn., January 9, 1907, from pneumonia, revered and loved by all who knew him. He was a man of kind and engaging disposition and had occupied many positions of trust and honor during his life time. His brother Peter, resides on the fine farm in West Hartford, where the two had passed many years together. Peter has a daughter, Miss. Mary Page Mansfield, who is a teacher in the American School for the deaf at Hartford.

LAST ADDRESS

Hon. Charles Dwight Yale, of Wallingford, Conn., married December 3, 1834, Mary Culver, of Wallingford.

Mr. Yale had a long successful and honorable career. In early life he resided in Richmond, Va., having charge of his father's business in that city. He subsequently established in Richmond, a manufacturing, wholesale and retail business on his own account. In the year 1860 he built and occupied one of the largest warehouses in that city. He continued his residence in Richmond during the Civil war, the close of which found him prepared to promptly resume business. In the reconstruction events in Virginia succeeding the war, Mr. Yale was prominent. He became a member of the city council of Richmond, was appointed by Chief Justice Chase, foreman of the United States District Court of Virginia; was treasurer of the Committee which established normal schools in Richmond, in relation to the Peabody Fund. Served with the "Committee of Nine" through whose instrumentality the state of Virginia, was admitted to complete Federal relations, thus escaping the threatened danger from political adventurers, who desired to control the state at that time. Mr. Yale lingered in Virginia, long enough to see the old State brought back into the Union. He moved to Wallingford, Conn., in 1871. The Silver Plate Company, of Simpson, Hall, Miller & Co., had been organized. He purchased a considerable amount of the capital stock of the company, and was its treasurer from 1871, until the early part of 1887, when he retired from active business life.

His two sons, Charles B. and George S., had charge of the company's store in New York City, until the latter part of 1886. Mr. Yale was frequently called to serve his townsmen in office. He served in the General Assembly, of Connecticut, in the years 1874 and 1878. He also represented the Sixth Senatorial district, in the State Senate, of Connecticut, in the years 1875, 1883 and 1884, being twice elected to that office; took an active and prominent part in these sessions, and was ever ready and effective in the advocacy of all measures he deemed essential to the welfare of the people. He was an eloquent and effective public speaker, and was widely known as a broad minded, sagacious business man. He is survived by his two sons, Charles B. and George S., who have retired from active business and reside in Wallingford.

Mr. Yale died March 30, 1890.

Biography of Linus Yale, Jr.

Linus Yale Jr., of Newport, Herkimer Co., N. Y., was married September 14, 1844, to Catharine Brooks, who was born in 1818, at Newfane, Vermont.

She died March 22, 1900, at Deerfield, Mass.

The greater portion of the honor of making the family name Yale, prominent and well known throughout the world, belongs to two men, Gov. Elihu Yale, for whom Yale University was named, and Linus Yale Jr., the inventor of the "Yale Lock." Previously numerous inventions had been brought out and perfected by his father, Linus Yale Sr., and himself, pertaining to bank locks; but it was the invention of the separate cylinder, pin tumbler, revolving plug lock, with the small flat key, which so completely revolutionized the lock business of the time, and made the Yale lock so popular and universally known and accepted as the standard. This great invention was made and perfected in 1860 to 1864, and U. S. patents covering same were issued to Mr. Yale, January 29, 1861, and June 27, 1865. Proper credit is due his father Linus Yale Sr., for the original inventions, 1840-1847, of the first locks, to which the name "Yale" was given, by an admiring and grateful public; but as indicated, it was the lock invented later by Linus Yale Jr., with the small flat key, for general service, which obtained and held such world wide popularity, and made the name famous, and synonymous of the highest standard of excellence, wherever locks are used.

Mr. Yale possessed a finely poised artistic and mechanical temperament. He was well educated and in his earlier life, was a portrait painter of much ability, and among his productions in this line, was an excellent oil portrait of his father, which is possessed by his daughter, Mrs. Madeline Yale Wynne. He nearly always had a pencil in his hand, with which he sketched as he talked; sometimes it would be a sketch of a head or some bit of picturesque scenery, and again of some invention. One evening in the winter, after his marriage, he sat drawing, and finally he passed a slip of paper over to his wife saying, "There Kate, on this paper lies our fortune." It was a drawing of the first lock that he invented.

He was an artist in mechanics, as well as in drawing and painting; that is, he took an artistic pleasure in the perfection of any mechanical process in which he might be engaged. He was never too busy to stop by a workman's bench and show him a better way to accomplish some delicate mechanical task.

His artistic tendencies were also in evidence in his diversions for pleasure; he was a devoted angler, and his ardor in this sport, seemed to be partly fed by the joy he experienced in making a rod or tying a fly, and it has been said by other votaries of the sport, that to see him cast a fly, gave the same pleasure that comes to one in hearing a violin solo by a master, so fine was his sense of balance, of distance and motion.

He was born at Salisbury, N. Y., April 4, 1821, and after completing his education, began his career as a portrait painter; but his mechanical inclinations induced him about 1849, to join his father in the lock business, at Newport, N. Y. Linus Yale Sr., was at that time operating a bank lock factory, in the stone building now known as the "Old Yale Lock Factory," the ruins of which are still standing. The earlier efforts of Linus Jr., in this field, were in connection with bank safes and locks, and were so original and successful, that he came to be recognized as the leading American expert and authority in such matters. As such, he was employed as consulting engineer, by many of the banks and bankers of the day, to design their more important safes and locks, and his inventions in this connection were numerous, and involved many diverse types, of most ingenious and complicated construction. The combination lock, as now used, was then unknown, and all of his earlier inventions related to locks operated by keys; but great security was obtained, by making the "bit" of the key changeable at will and also detachable from the handle, so when the latter was rotated in the lock, the "bit" was detached and carried away from the key-hole, to a remote part of the lock, and there brought into contact with the tumblers, to set them in position to permit the bolt to move; the continued rotation of the handle, then operating the bolt and returning the "bit" to the key-hole for removal.

The famous "lock controversy" which arose in England during the "World's Fair" of 1851, when the American, Mr. Hobbs, succeeded in picking the best English bank locks, had its aftermath in similar contests, between American bank lock makers. Being drawn into this controversy, Mr. Yale, first discovered how to pick the celebrated Day & Newell, "Parautoptic Bank Lock," known in England as the "Hobbs" lock, and it has been said he picked it with a pine stick; but soon afterwards he found out how to pick his own best bank lock, known as the "Double Treasury," and ended, by demonstrating that any lock having a key hole, could be successfully attacked, by one having the necessary skill and implements.

Ultimately he turned his attention to the combination or "dial" lock, which in crude form had been known for centuries, and brought it to such perfection that, before his death it had displaced nearly all other bank locks; and in the many years which have since elapsed, the "dial" lock has been in universal use in America, for safes and vaults; and although produced in many forms and by numerous makers, it retains to-day, the essential characteristics given it by Linus Yale Jr.

Notwithstanding the great importance and ingenuity of the bank lock inventions, as before stated, the invention of the lock with the small "flat key," in 1860-1864, was the epoch making event of his life. This invention ultimately completely revolutionized the art of lock making in America, and contributed greatly to place this country in the superior position which it occupies, far in advance of all other countries, in lock making. It consisted of the following essential details of construction and methods.

- 1 In placing the key mechanism in a separate "cylinder," inserted in the face of the door, and connected with the bolt case, behind.

2. In combining the ancient Egyptian "pin tumblers," with a revolving "plug" containing the key-way.

3. In combining, with the revolving "plug," a flat key, of convenient form and of uniform size for all sizes and kinds of locks, in place of the round key previously in universal use.

4. In the adoption of a standard of design and workmanship for key locks for general use, equal to that previously employed only in bank locks.

5. In adopting high-class machine tools, to obtain the higher standard of workmanship thus established.

6. In packing each lock in a separate paper box, complete with all necessary trimmings and screws, thus initiating a practice now almost universal.

Prior to these inventions and improvements, the round key locks were in universal use and were of crude and bulky form, affording only indifferent security, and of inferior workmanship.

Although, as has been stated, Linus Yale Jr., began his career in the art of lockmaking, with his father, he some years later embarked in the business independently, and about the year 1855, moved to Philadelphia, where he was very successful; but about 1861 or 1862, he again moved, to Shelburne Falls, Mass., where the locks were manufactured by the firm of Yale & Greenleaf. The chief products at the latter place, were bank locks, however the flat keyed cylinder lock, with pin tumblers, was manufactured in a small way.

In the summer of 1868, Mr. Yale and Mr. Henry R. Towne, then of Philadelphia, a thoroughly trained mechanical engineer, who was seeking a permanent business connection, were introduced to each other by a mutual friend, and after some months of negotiation, a partnership was formed between them, by which Mr. Yale agreed to contribute his existing business, patents and inventive skill, and Mr. Towne agreed to provide additional capital and to organize and manage the manufacturing department. It can be stated, that, although Mr. Yale's business was chiefly making bank locks, Mr. Towne was attracted by a conviction, which he then formed, that the newly invented "cylinder," was the foundation for a large business, if properly exploited.

This partnership was organized in October 1868, in corporate form, under the name, "The Yale Lock Manufacturing Company," and was located at Stamford, Conn., thirty-four miles from the City of New York; this point being carefully selected, as combining the advantages of the skilled labor of New England, with close proximity to the metropolis of the country. A suitable site having been selected and purchased, Mr. Towne went to Stamford, to design and erect the modest factory building which was proposed. Mr. Yale continuing to conduct the business at Shelburne Falls, pending its removal to the new location.

On December 25, 1868, the newly organized business met with a great misfortune, in the sudden death of Mr. Yale, of heart disease, on that date, in the City of New York, where he had been unexpectedly detained, in consultation over plans for the vaults of the Equitable Building, then under construction. He was aged 47 years, 8 months and 21 days, at the time of his death.

In 1869, Mr. Towne succeeded to the presidency of the company, and in later years (1883), owing to the enlarged and deversified line of products, the name was changed to, The Yale & Towne Manufacturing Company. The business was removed to the new factory at Stamford and started up, in March, 1869, with about thirty employees; a sales-room being simultaneously established, at No. 1 Barclay St., New York City. At that time bank locks were the chief products, however the new pin-tumbler, cylinder lock, now universally known as the "Yale Lock," was also made in seven varieties. Several new varieties were added in the next few years and the system of "Yale Locks" for U. S. postoffice lock boxes, was rapidly developed, from a lock box which Mr. Yale had designed for the postoffice in Boston, Mass., just previous to his death. The rapid adoption of the Yale Lock Box, in postoffices in all parts of the country, helped greatly to call public attention to the merits of the "Yale Lock," with its diminutive key. The designing and building of complete postoffice equipment soon became an established department of the business, the line of bank locks was remodeled and enlarged and the growth of the business was such that, one hundred and fifty people were employed in 1872. In 1873 bronze hardware was added to the business and in this field the company finally became the recognized leader. In 1875, the Weston Differential Pulley Block device, was added to the line, and a little later "cranes" of all kinds and sizes. These latter lines were developed into extensive proportions, but in 1894, were disposed of, to the Brown Hoisting Machinery Company, of Cleveland, Ohio; the chain block business being retained at Stamford. In 1882, the A. H. Emery testing machines and heavy scales, were taken up, but this business was also disposed of in 1887, to Wm. Sellers & Co., of Philadelphia, Penn. Returning to the narrative of the lock industry, it is in order to state that, in response to a demand for a bank lock, unuseptible to manipulation, the Yale Time Lock was invented, and has since come into almost universal use in the leading banks. In 1878 the business of two smaller competitors, was acquired, The United States Lock

Co., and The American Lock Co., and the production of padlocks was taken up. The number of employees had been increased by this time to about three hundred.

Branch offices had been established in Philadelphia and Boston and in 1880, one was opened in Chicago. Additions to the Stamford plant were made almost annually, those of 1881 and 1883 being quite important. About 1882, the company began to cater extensively to the public demand for artistic, high grade, ornamental hardware, and the artistic treatment of iron for this work, was taken up successfully. In 1891 the number of employees had increased to 900, and a complete line of cabinet and trunk locks was added to the products. The year 1899 brought the addition of lines of the cheaper and medium grades of builders hardware and locks, which came to be among the most important products. Door checks were added to the lines of products in 1895. During the years 1900 and 1901, extensive improvements and additions were begun and made for the Stamford Works, and the manufacturing heretofore carried on at Branford, was moved to Stamford. These improvements and consolidations, make the Stamford Works, the largest and best equipped of the kind in the world, with a capacity for the employment of over 3000 persons, and occupying a tract of over 15 acres of land, with direct rail and salt water connections.

Much credit is due Mr. Henry R. Towne and his associates, for the world wide popularity of the name "Yale" as associated with locks, as it was through their splendid business judgement and indomitable energy, that the great growth of the business was made possible, after the decease of the inventor.

RESIDENCE OF J. HOBART YALE, MERIDEN, CONN.

This ancient house is of much interest, having been erected in the year 1761 by Noah Yale, and occupied by his descendants in the direct line ever since, Mr. J. Hobart Yale's children representing the sixth generation. It is a comfortable dwelling, and a grand example of the old time homes. The present owner has recently equipped it with modern improvements. The great stone chimney was taken down and replaced with a brick one, to secure additional space; hot and cold water is supplied from a tank in the attic and a heater in the cellar. In fact, numerous modern conveniences are now at hand in this old colonial dwelling.

Mr. Yale, moved to Utica, N. Y., with his parents at the age of six years, and removed with them to Syracuse, New York, at the age of ten. He was educated in the public schools of Syracuse. Then took up the study of dentistry, which he practiced successfully, for more than twenty years. Ill health caused by to close confinement and attention to the business necessitated a change.

The typewriter industry of Syracuse suggested the idea of manufacturing typewriter ribbons, the study of which was taken up and mastered; then he formed an alliance with a concern which manufactured a fine line of carbon papers, thus completing the successful combination of manufacturing typewriter ribbons and carbon papers, in which he is now engaged. He removed to New York City with his family in 1903, where he now resides. He is manager of the Neidich Process Co., with offices at 903 Park Row Building, New York City.

Yales of Connecticut in the French and Indian Wars.

In the muster rolls of a company under the command of Col. Elihu Chauncey, of Durham, in the year 1755, appear the following names:

SOLOMON YALE.

Aaron Yale.

THOMAS YALE.

(Connecticut Historical Society Col. Vol. IX., P. 48-49.) (A Century of Meriden, P. 264.)

STREET YALE,

AND

CHARLES YALE. Were in Capt. Samuel Hull's Co. They were in the service eight or nine months and probably were in Fort William Henry on Lake George, under the command of Col. Monroe, who was forced to surrender by the Marquis Montcalm, on August 9, 1757, for one member of the company, Israel Calkins, was carried a prisoner to France. (Connecticut Historical Society Col., Vol. IX, pp. 192-193.) (A Century of Meriden, p. 265.)

In the "Louisburg Expedition," Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, 1745, King George's War.

ELIHU YALE. Wallingford, Conn. He died at Cape Breton, December 31, 1745, ("A Century of Meriden," p. 263.)

The author is unable in some cases to definitely determine to which individual in the genealogy the war record applies, and in such instances the connection between the military record and the individual in the genealogical list is of necessity left for the descendants to determine, which they can doubtless do in some instances, with the aid of family traditions and records, and they are assured by the author that these war records of Connecticut men are officially correct.

In this connection the author desires to state that the record of the Yales in the Revolutionary and other early American Wars, is not confined to the Connecticut records. There were other Yales who enlisted from other colonies, and so far as such records have been obtained they are entered under the names of the individuals in the genealogy.
